III-43. One shall not return anger for anger; when abused he shall speak gently for the welfare (of all); one should never speak an untrue word which feeds (worldly desires of) the seven gates (of the body).
III-44. Taking delight in the supreme light (manifested in the individual Self), remaining quiescent, free from desires and blessings, seeking (supreme) bliss, he (the ascetic) should move about (as a mendicant monk) with the Self alone as his companion.
III-45-47. He becomes fit for immortality by subduing the senses, enervating (feelings of) love and hatred and by non-injury to living beings. (This body) pillared by bones, bound together by tendons, plastered with flesh and blood, covered by skin, foul smelling, filled with urine and faeces, subject to old age and affliction, an abode of diseases, liable to injury, full of passion, impermanent and the abode of the elements (i.e. the body) one may abandon (without regret).
III-48. If one were to take delight in the body which is a conglomerate of flesh, blood, pus, faeces, urine, tendons, marrow and bones, that fool will be (delighted) in hell as well.
III-49. The attitude ‘I am the body’ is (the same as) the path leading to the hell (called) Kalasutra, the trap for Mahavichi hell and a series of forest(-hells) where the trees have leaves as sharp as swords.
III-50. Even if total ruin faces one, this (identifying the body with the Self) should be abandoned by every effort; it should not be touched (accepted) by a nobly-born person just as a (low born) tribal woman carrying dog’s meat.
III-51. Abandoning (both) virtuous acts towards one’s dear ones and evil deeds towards unfriendly people, (a person) attains the eternal Brahman by the practice of deep meditation (Dhyana-yoga).
III-52. By this method, abandoning all attachments gradually, and freed from (the influence of) all the pairs (of opposites, such as pleasure and pain) one gets established in Brahman alone.
III-53. (The ascetic) shall journey alone without any helper for attaining final beatitude; for, seeing the perfection of the one (Brahman) he neither abandons it nor is he abandoned (by it).
III-54. A skull (for an alms bowl), (shelter under) the shade of trees, ragged garments, solitude and equanimity in all (things) - such is the characteristic of the liberated.
III-55. Benign to all beings, calm, wearing three-fold (emblematic) staff, (carrying) a water-pot, delighting in the one (Brahman) – having become a mendicant monk (thus) he may enter a village for alms.
III-56. The mendicant monk shall be alone as stated before; two together are declared to be a pair (having attachment to each other); three together are said to constitute a village (with their bickerings); more than these (three) become a city (of bustle and confusion).
III-57. The city (of ascetics) should not be created, nor the village nor the pair; an ascetic doing (forming part of) these three falls off his rightful duty.
III-58. Due to their close association there will doubtless be talks on royal personages, etc., mutual luck in alms, and (also) affection, tale-bearing and rivalry among them.
III-59. He shall remain alone and without desires; he shall not converse with any one. He shall utter ‘Narayana’ alone as the reply always (to other’s statements).
III-60. In solitude he shall contemplate on Brahman (whole heartedly) in thought, word and deed. He shall not by any means either welcome death or (rejoice in) life.

III-61. He shall only mark time (when practising asceticism) till the allotted span of life is completed; he shall neither welcome death nor rejoice in living. He shall await the time (of death) alone as an employee awaits orders.
III-62. A mendicant monk gets liberation when he possesses the following six characteristics: he is tongueless (in relishing food and speech), a eunuch (in sex), lame (in push), blind (in seeing sense objects), deaf (in hearing praise or curse) and innocent (like a child). There is no doubt about it.
III-63. That ascetic is said to be tongueless who, while eating food is not conscious of its being savoury or otherwise and who speaks words beneficial and truthful in moderation.
III-64. He is a eunuch who is unaffected on seeing a female whether newly born, sixteen year old or one of a hundred years.
III-65. When an ascetic goes about (only) for alms and answering calls of nature and does not exceed (a distance of) thirteen or fourteen kilometres (in a day) he is by all means a lame person.
III-66. That mendicant monk is said to be blind whose eyes, (being modestly lowered) while standing still or walking, do not see far excepting sixteen cubits of ground (before him).
III-67. Hearing words beneficial or otherwise, pleasing to the mind or causing grief, he seems not to hear them (i.e. remains equanimous); such a sage is said to be deaf.
III-68. That mendicant monk is said to be childlike who always remains as if asleep in the presence of objects of sensory pleasures, (though) his senses are efficient and unimpaired.
III-69. Show by dancers, etc., gambling, lady friend (of former days), eatables (heaped temptingly), (other) enjoyable things and a woman in her courses – these an ascetic shall always avoid.
III-70. An ascetic shall never even think of in his mind these six – love, hatred, intoxication, bamboozling, hurting and deluding others.
III-71. A bedstead, white clothes, talk on women, unsteadiness, daytime sleep and a carriage – these six cause the fall of ascetics.
III-72. One who thinks on the Self shall painstakingly avoid long journeys. The ascetic shall always be practising the lore of the Upanishads which is the means for liberation.
III-73. The ascetic shall not always be resorting to a place of pilgrimage nor be undergoing fasts frequently; he shall not be studying the scripture all the time nor be expounding them exclusively.
III-74. He shall always conduct himself without (committing) sin, deceit and devious acts, restraining his senses in every way as a tortoise does its limbs.
III-75-76. He will be released (from worldly bondage) when the functioning of his senses and the mind has become quiescent; is free of hopes (of gain) and possessions; is indifferent to the pairs (of opposites, pleasure and pain, etc.,), reverential salutation and the exercise of his will (nihsvadhakara); is free from ‘mine-ness’, egotism, expectations and blessings; and sticks to solitude. There is no doubt about it. Thus (are the duties of ascetics).
III-77. A disciplined celibate student, a householder or a forest-dweller (Vanaprastha) may renounce worldly life when he is ever vigilant in leading a righteous life, possesses (proficiency in) action, has devotion and wisdom, and comes to possess dispassion of his own accord. If he is chiefly interested (in the particular stage of his life) he shall complete the stage of studentship and become a householder; from (the stage of a householder) becoming a forest-dweller, he shall (thereafter) renounce the world. Or otherwise he may renounce worldly life from the stage of a student or householder or forest dweller. But then a person may renounce, that very day on which he gets disillusioned with the world, whether he is one who observes not vows (before the stage of renunciation) or observes them, whether he has undergone the prescribed ablution on completing the disciplined studentship or not, whether he is one who has discontinued maintaining the ritual fire at the death of his wife (utsannagni) or is one who does not maintain (for other causes) the ritual fire (anagnika). Some (law-givers) prescribe the sacrifice called Prajapatya (of which god Brahma is the presiding deity, to a twice-born before he embraces renunciation). But (though thus said) he may not do so. He shall only perform the Agneyi sacrifice (whose presiding deity is Agni, the god of fire). For Agni is the vital breath (Prana). Thereby he does (strengthen) the vital breath. (Then) he shall perform the Traidhataviya sacrifice (whose presiding deity is the god Indra). By this (sacrifice) the three vital fluids (become strong like fire), namely the Sattva (semen), rajas (blood) and Tamas (the dark one).

III-78. (Having performed the sacrifice in the prescribed manner he shall smell the holy fire, reciting the following mantra): 'Oh Fire, this (vital breath) is your source; as you are born at the proper time (of the year) you put on effulgence. Knowing him (the Atman, your ultimate source) may you merge (with the Prana, your source). May you increase our wealth (of transcendent knowledge)'. Thus reciting the mantra he shall smell the fire. This is the source of fire, this vital air. May you go unto Prana, may you go unto your source. Svaha. Thus alone this (mantra) says. Having secured the ritual fire from the Ahavaniya (sacred fire) he shall smell it as before. If he is unable to procure the ritual fire he shall offer the oblation in the waters. For water is (presided over by) all the gods. Reciting (the mantra) 'I offer the oblation to all the gods, Svaha, he shall tender the oblation, and picking up (a small portion left over of) the offered oblation which is mixed with ghee, he shall eat it (mixed) with water. The oblation mixed with ghee is beneficial and gives (leads to) liberation. Thus (it has been declared). Only after discarding the tuft of hair, sacred thread, parents, son, wife, (normal) work, study, mantras (other than those prescribed for ascetics), a wise man (knower of spiritual knowledge) renounces worldly life. By the mantras of liberation pertaining to the Traidhataviya sacrifice he shall attain (final beatitude). That is Brahman; that should reverently be resorted to. Thus alone is this (liberation attained). Thus.

III-79. Narada again asked of the grandfather (Brahma): 'How is he, (being now) without the sacred thread, a Brahmana ?' The god Brahma said to him (as follows).

III-80. Taking a shave with the (removal of the) tuft, a wise man shall discard the external (sacred) thread. He shall wear as the thread (i.e. he shall always be conscious of) the transcendent Brahman which is indestructible.

III-81. The sutra is so called as it indicates (Brahman). The sutra is indeed the supreme state. That Brahmana (alone) has completely mastered the Vedas who has realized that sutra.

III-82. The Yogin, the knower of yoga and the perceiver of the truth, shall possess that sutra (Brahman) by which everything is held together (sustained), as a group of gems by a thread.

III-83. Established in the highest yoga a wise man shall abandon the external (Sacred) thread. He is wise who possesses the sutra, the state of Brahman. Possessing that sutra he becomes neither unholy or impure.

III-84. Those who have the sutra inwardly and possess the sacred thread of wisdom, are indeed the knowers of the sutra; they wear the (true) sacred thread.

III-85. Those who wear a tuft of hair in the form of wisdom (Jnana), whose fundamental condition is wisdom, who possess the sacred thread of wisdom, to whom wisdom alone is supreme, have, it is said, pure knowledge.

III-86. That wise man whose tuft consists of wisdom, like the flame in the case of fire, and no other, is said to be the possessor of sikha (tuft; pre-eminence); not others who (merely) bear a lock of hair on the crown of the head.

III-87. The Brahmana and such others who are engaged in Vedic rites are to wear this (sacred) thread; for it is declared to be part of the ceremony.

III-88. He whose tuft consists of wisdom as also his sacred thread (of that wisdom), has all the requisites of a Brahmana; so understand the knowers of the Veda. Thus.

III-89. Knowing thus (the duties of ascetics), a Brahmana, having renounced worldly life, becomes a mendicant monk, wearing a single garment and shaven-headed, he receives no gifts (other than simple food for bare sustenance), if he is unable to bear bodily privation (of an unclad, unsoliciting Avadhuta ascetic). Or, according to prescribed rules, becoming unclad (lit. possessing a form as when newly born), renouncing his children, friends, wife, close kinsmen, etc., his Vedic study and rituals, abandoning the entire world, his loin cloth, emblematic staff and (warm) garment; being capable of putting up with the pairs (of opposites, pleasure and pain, etc.) and unmindful of cold and heat, pleasure and pain, sleep, honour and dishonour, and the six human infirmities (hunger, etc.); leaving off censuring, egotism, rivalry, pride, false airs, jealousy, envy, desire, hatred, pleasure, pain, love, anger, covetousness, delusion, etc.; remembering his body as a corpse; not conscious of anything other than the Self both inwardly and outwardly; not bowing to anyone, having neither the utterance of Svaha (in worshipping the gods) nor the utterance of Svadha (in honour of the manes); indulging neither in praise nor blame; he thus becomes independent of extraneous influences.

Contented with (food alone) that comes unsolicited, he shall not accept (gifts of) gold, etc. He does neither the invocation of deities nor utter mantras to send them back; he has not mantra or non-mantra, meditation or worship, aim or non-aim, separation or union; and being of firm mind (in regard to residence) has no home (to sleep in at night) other than a deserted house, the shade of a tree, a temple, a clump of (tall) grass, a potter's shed, a hut where ritual fire is kept, the Southeast quarter, the sandy bank of a river, a cellar, cave or grounds near water falls or in a forest. He may have no distinctive emblem of an ascetic (like the great sages of yore) such as Svetaketu, Ribhu, Nidagha, Rishabha, Durvasas, Samvartaka, Dattatreya and Raivataka. His conduct is incomprehensible (to ordinary people) like the conduct of children, mad men and ghosts. Though (perfectly) sane he behaves like an insane person. Muttering Svaha he shall discard all these in the waters – the threefold (emblematic) staff, sling (to carry his effects), (alms) bowl, (water) vessel, waist band and loin-cloth.

III-90. He shall journey (as a mendicant monk) unclad, leaving in the waters all these – the waistband, loin-cloth, the (emblematic) staff, garment and water vessel.

III-91. He shall seek the (realization of the) Self. Remaining unclad, free from (the influence of) the pairs (of opposites), receiving no gifts, well established in the path of the reality of Brahman, with his mind pure, eating food to sustain life at the prescribed hour with his hand or otherwise (placed in the mouth) without begging, equanimous in gain or denial (of food), without 'mine-ness', deeply interested in meditating on the pure effulgence (i.e. Brahman), devoted to the supreme spirit (manifested as the individual Self), deeply engaged in rooting out the effect of good and bad actions, he shall renounce (all other than the Self); having only one thought, namely of supreme bliss, ever recollecting Brahman in the form of Pranava (Om) and that he is Brahman alone, he shall give up the threefold body according to the maxim of the wasp (to become one with Brahman) and abandon the body by renunciation alone. He becomes one who has fulfilled himself (i.e. he attains liberation in the disembodied state). Thus (ends the third Upadesha of) the Upanishad.

IV-1. He who abandons the (three) worlds, the Vedas, objects of senses, the (influence of the) sense and remains (established) in the Atman alone, attains the highest goal.

IV-2. A good ascetic shall never answer the inquiry on his name, lineage, etc., his native place, duration (of his stay there), study of the scripture, family, age, conduct, and the vows observed by him.

IV-3. He shall neither converse with any woman nor remember one seen before; he shall avoid all talks on them and never look at one even in a picture.

IV-4. The mind of an ascetic will necessarily get disturbed on his doing the four things regarding women (mentioned above); due to this agitation of the mind he is lost.

IV-5-6. An ascetic comes down (from his high position) if he has greed, anger, untruth, bamboozling, covetousness, delusion, likes and dislikes, (love of) fine art, explaining tendency, desire, passion, accepting (gifts), egotism, 'mine-ness', practising medicine, enforcing right conduct (in others), expiatory acts, journeying abroad (into unholy places), and (the practice of) mantras, herbs, poisons and blessing (others) which are prohibited.

IV-7. A sage intent on liberation shall not speak (words such as) 'come, go, stop, welcome, friends and honouring'.

IV-8. A mendicant monk shall neither accept gifts nor induce others to offer donation nor prompt (others to give or take gifts) at any time even in a dream.

IV-9. Hearing or seeing good or bad of his (former) wife, brother, children, etc., and kinsmen, he shall not get agitated; he shall give up sorrow and delusion.

IV-10-12. Abstaining from injury, (having) truthfulness, non-stealing, continence, non-acquiring, humility, absence of depression, serenity, stability, straight-forwardness, freedom from affection, serving respectable elders, faith, forgiveness, calmness, non-alignment, fortitude, amiability, endurance, compassion, modesty, knowledge and wisdom, contemplation of the supreme Spirit (Yoga), very moderate diet and contentment – these are well known as the essential requisites of self-controlled ascetics.

IV-13. Free from (the influence of) the pairs (of opposites), ever established in goodness, equanimous in everything, the sage in the fourth stage (of asceticism), the Paramahamsa, is the visible god Narayana.

IV-14. Except in the rainy season, he may stay one night in a village and five nights in a city; during the rains he may stay four months (in a village or town).

IV-15. The mendicant monk shall not stay two nights in a village; if he stays, affection, etc., may find scope (to deflect him); thereby he will go to hell.

IV-16. In the outskirts of a village, in a secluded spot he may pitch his camp and go about (for alms) like a worm (crawling) on the ground; during the rains he shall stay in one place.

IV-17. Clad in a single garment or unclad, with his vision fixed in the one (Brahman), free from desires, undeflected from the path of the good and deeply meditating he shall walk the earth.

IV-18. Practising his essential duties in a pure place always a mendicant monk shall ever be on the move, his eye fixed on the ground.

IV-19. He shall never journey at night, midday or during the two twilights; neither in a deserted place nor an impassable region nor a place causing harm to creatures.

IV-20. A mendicant monk may stay one night in a village, two nights in a small town, three nights in a big town and five nights in a city. During the rains he may camp in one place which has plenty of pure water.

IV-21. Seeing all beings as like unto himself a mendicant monk shall walk the earth, like a person blind, dull-witted, deaf, mad and dumb.

IV-22. A Bahudaka mendicant monk and a forest-dweller, it is declared, are to have a bath at the three periods (junctures) of the day, the Hamsa ascetic but once a day and a Paramahamsa ascetic has none (prescribed).

IV-23. The ascetic carrying a single emblematic staff shall observe these seven things - silence, Yoga posture, deep meditation, endurance, solitude, desirelessness and equanimity.

IV-24. One at the stage of a Paramahamsa, due to the absence of prescribed rules in regard to bath, etc., shall merely give up all the activities of the mind.

IV-25. What difference is there between worms (revelling in putrid waters) and men who take delight in (the body consisting of) skin, flesh, blood, tendons, marrow, fat, bones, faeces, urine and pus ?

IV-26. Where (on the one hand) is the body, a great conglomerate of all (foul things) such as phlegm and others and where (on the other hand) are merits such as bodily splendour, auspiciousness and personal charm ?

IV-27. If a fool takes delight in his body which is a conglomerate of flesh, blood, pus, faeces, urine, tendons, marrow and bones, he will be (delighted) in hell as well.

IV-28. Though there is no difference between the unmentionable region of women and a purified ulcer, people are generally deceived by the difference in outlook.

IV-29. A piece of skin split in twain and perfumed by the Apana-wind – a bow to those who take delight in it ! What is greater rashness than this ?

IV-30-31. The wise ascetic has no (worldly) work to do nor has he any emblem. The sage free from ‘mine-ness’ and fear, calm, uninfluenced by the pairs (of opposites), taking food without caste-distinction, clad in loin cloth or unclad, shall remain deeply engaged in meditation. Thus the Yogin, solely devoted to wisdom is fit for identity with Brahman.

IV-32. Even though he may carry an emblem (such as the staff), the (real) cause of his liberation is his spiritual knowledge alone. To the people here (in the matter of attaining final beatitude) an assemblage of emblems is meaningless.
IV-33. He is a Brahmana (knower of Brahman) who knows not (the difference between) one who is good or bad, unlearned or highly learned (in scripture), of good or bad character.
IV-34. Therefore a wise (ascetic) shall move about unobtrusively without any emblem, knowing right conduct, devoted to the vow of (realizing) Brahman, and resorting to the secret doctrine (i.e. the Upanishads)).
IV-35. He shall journey over the earth, a mystery to all people, devoid of class or stage of life, as (though he were) blind, dull-witted and dumb.
IV-36. Seeing him calm in mind the gods desire to be like him. As he observes no distinction he attains the (distinctionless) final beatitude. Thus the teaching of the god Brahma. Thus (it ends).
IV-37. Then Narada asked of Brahma (the grandfather): ‘Pray expound to us the method of renunciation’. The god Brahma agreeing to it saying ‘Be it so’ declared: For embracing the fourth stage of life (i.e. renunciation) whether one is in a state of emergency or in the regular sequence, one shall perform the eight commemorative religious ceremonies (astasraddha) after having first undergone the penance to expiate all sins (kricchraprayaschitta), the eight ceremonies being (the propitiation of) the gods, sages (of yore), (other) divine beings, men, (the five) primary elements, manes, father, mother and (one’s) Self. First (he shall propitiate) the group of deities named Satya, Vasu, etc.; in the commemorative ceremony for the gods, Brahma, Vishnu and Maheshvara (Siva); in the Sraddha ceremony for the sages, divine sages (like Narada), royal sages (like Janaka) and men-sages (like Yajnavalkya); in the Sraddha for divine beings, the (eight) Vasus, the (eleven) Rudras and the (twelve) Adityas (suns); in the Sraddha for men, Sanaka, Sanandana, Sanatkumara and Sanatsujata (son of the god Brahma); in the Sraddha for the Elements, the five primary elements Earth, etc., the sensory organs such as the eye, and the four groups of living beings; in the Sraddha for the manes, father, paternal grandfather and paternal great grandfather; in the Sraddha for the female ancestors, mother, paternal grandmother and paternal great grandmother; in the Sraddha for one’s Self, one self, father and paternal grandfather; if his father is alive, leaving off the father, himself, paternal grandfather and paternal great grandfather.
In all cases he shall honour the Brahmanas, arranging that two of them are present each time. Having honoured the Brahmanas in the manner prescribed for the ceremony of the daily offerings to deceased ancestors (pitryajna) during the eight Sraddhas performed in eight days or in a day with the mantras pertaining to his own branch of the Veda, following the option of a single ceremony a day or eight ceremonies on the same day; having completed (the rituals) according to rules till they are fed; having performed the offering of rice-balls to the manes and bidding farewell to the Brahmanas, pleased with the presents and betel rolls; having saved seven hairs for the success of the remaining ritual acts; the twice born, having had seven or eight hairs shaved together along with the (remaining) hairs and beard, and the nails cut for the success of the remaining ritual acts; bathing after the shave in which hairs in the arm pits and the public hairs are exempted and preserving the (above said) seven hairs; completing the evening twilight worship; muttering the Gayatri mantra a thousand times; performing the (daily) teaching and study of the Vedas; getting ready his own ritual fire; completing (the recital of) his branch of the Veda; offering the oblation of ghee in the fire as stated in it (his Vedic branch) till Agni and Soma have been propitiated; completing the act of offering oblations; (ceremoniously) eating the barley meal three times (invoking) himself, etc., keeping alive the fire after having ceremoniously sipped water (achamana); seating himself in a skin of the black antelope at the north of the fire, keeping awake listening to the recital of Puranas; bathing at the end of the fourth watch (of the night), boiling the oblation in that fire, offering the rice-oblation sixteen times reciting the Purusha-sukta; performing the Viraja ritual (so as to be free from all sins); sipping water ceremoniously and gifting clothes, gold, vessel and cow along with a cash present, completing (the preceding rituals), bidding farewell to the god Brahma who had been invoked, invoking the fire to be (symbolically) present on his person (reciting the mantras) –

‘May the Maruts bring together (the scattered vital energy), may Indra (do so), may Brihaspati (do so), may this fire (do so granting) along with (long) life, wealth and strength; may he make me long lived’. Thus.

‘Oh Agni, come with your body which is fit for sacrifice. (You) being my Self, may you climb into my body, bringing before me great wealth suitable for men. Assuming the form of sacrifice, may you rest in my body, your source. Oh, Fire, being born of the earth, may you come with your abode; meditating on Fire, bidding farewell to him after having circumambulated and prostrated in reverence before him; worshipping the morning twilight; paying obeisance to the Sun reciting the Gayatri mantra a thousand times, seated in the waters which reach up to his navel; bidding farewell to Gayatri having made respectful offerings to the eight guardian-deities of the quarters; mingling the Gayatri with the Vyahritis (bhur, bhuvas, suvas) and reciting in a low, middling or high tone or mentally (the mantras), ‘I am the stimulator of the tree (of the phenomenal world). Fame (of my knowledge) is lofty like the peak of a mountain. High and holy, I am the immortal being as (the immortal Self) in the sun. (I am) the wealth (of the Self) endowed with effulgence. Possessing true knowledge I am immersed in my immortal nature. Thus the words of self-realization (based on the Veda) of Trisanku (a realized soul)’.

‘He (the Om) who is the most exalted of the Vedas and omnipresent and who has sprung from the ambrosial scripture – may that (Om), the (supreme) lord endow me with (true) intelligence. May I, Oh Lord, become the possessor of (wisdom leading to) immortality; my body very active (in the higher life); my tongue (speech) possessed of sweetness to the highest degree. May I with my ears, listen to the wealth (of Vedantic learning). You are the sheath of Brahman, concealed by worldly intelligence (while please rent asunder). Pray protect my wisdom (born) of the study of the scripture’; ‘I am (now) risen above the desire for wife, desire for wealth and desire for worldly glory’. ‘Om Bhuh, I have renounced (the world)’. ‘Om Bhuvah, I have renounced’. ‘Om Suvah, I have renounced’. Sipping water (ceremoniously, reciting the mantra) ‘Freedom from fear to all beings; everything emanates from memory, Svaha’; offering (water) to the East with the palms fully folded and uprooting the sikha (of seven hairs) reciting Om Svaha; snapping the sacred thread (reciting the mantras) – ‘The sacred thread is highly sanctifying; it has been natural to the god Brahma (Prajapati) in the first place; foremost in promoting long life, put on thus. May the bright (fresh) sacred thread be the strength and effulgence (unto me);

‘Let not the sacred thread reside externally; may you, entering inside into the middle (of the heart) ever grant (me) the highly sanctifying fame, strength, wisdom and dispassion, and (true) intelligence’. Offering water with cupped palms, he shall offer (the sacred thread) as oblation to the waters, (reciting the mantra) ‘Om Bhuh, (pray) reach the sea, Svaha’. Repeating thrice, ‘Om Bhuh, I have renounced, Om Bhuvah, I have renounced, Om Suvah, I have renounced’, he shall ceremoniously sip water and discard in the waters his garment and waist band, reciting ‘Om Bhuh Svaha’. Reminding himself that he had ceased from all (worldly) activities and becoming unclad he shall start for the north with his hand raised and thinking of his Self.

IV-38. If, as stated before, he is an enlightened recluse, he shall receive instruction from his Guru on the Pranava (Om) and the great scriptural texts (such as 'Thou art That'), journeying (as a mendicant monk) in easy stages, (convinced) that no one exists other than his Self and subsisting on fruits, (edible) leaves and water and thus move about on hills, forests and temples. Then unclad, giving up journeying all (over the earth), his heart solely filled with the experience of bliss always, profited by the complete severance of (worldly) activities, sustaining life by means of fruits, juicy barks, leaves, bulbous roots and water only for attaining liberation, he shall discard his body in some mountain cave remembering the emancipating mantra (Om).

IV-39. If he is a recluse desiring further study (Vividisha Sannyasin) he shall proceed along with learned Brahmanas like his preceptor, etc., and receiving a staff, waistband, loin cloth, garment and water vessel (offered) by his preceptors reciting, ‘Pray wait, wait, blessed one, take the staff, (ochre) garment and water vessel’, he shall go to the spiritual guide’s presence to receive instruction in the Pranava (Om) and the great scriptural texts (Mahavakyas). He shall then receive the (emblematic) bamboo staff, which is free from cuts from the tip of the top, evenly shaped, smooth, free from black colour and is auspicious looking, having first sipped water ceremoniously and (repeating the mantra), ‘You are my friend. Protect my strength. You, my friend, are Indra’s (weapon) Vajra, the destroyer of (the demon) Vritra. May you bring protection to me. Prevent that which is a sin’. He shall then receive the water-vessel reciting the Pranava first (and then the mantra) ‘You are the life of the world, you are the container of water, you who are always cool’. (Receiving) the waist-band, loin cloth and the (ochre) garment (reciting the mantra in the due order), ‘the waist-band, the supporter of the loin cloth, Om; the cover for the privities, the loincloth, Om; the garment, which is the protection against cold, wind, and heat, Om;’ and invested with the yoga cloth (cloth used for meditation) preceded by the ceremonial sipping of water, he shall zealously follow the rules of his stage of life (i.e. asceticism) considering that he has fulfilled himself (in the quest for liberation). Thus (ends the fourth Upadesha of the Upanishad.

V-1. Then Narada asked of the god Brahma: ‘Lord, you have said that renunciation entails ceasing from all activity. Again you have said that one shall be zealous in the conduct of one’s stage of life’.
Then the god Brahma replied: ‘To the embodied being there are the four stages of waking, dreaming, sleeping and the fourth stage (Turiya). Under their influence people who engage themselves in action, knowledge and dispassion, conform to them in their conduct’. ‘If this is so, Lord, how many kinds of renunciation are there ? What are the differences in their practice ? Pray expound to us completely’. Agreeing to this saying ‘Be it so’ the god Brahma (said to) him (as follows).
V-2. If the question is raised, ‘How does conduct differ in the varieties of renunciation ? (the answer is) that renunciation is really one only, that it becomes threefold due to imperfection of knowledge (vidvat-sannyasa), incapacity (vividisha-sannyasa) and failure in action (atura-sannyasa) and it attains the four stages of renunciation due to dispassion, renunciation due to wisdom, renunciation due to wisdom and dispassion and renunciation of action.
V-3. This is how it is. Due to the absence of wicked passion, by indifference to objects of pleasure and by the influence of good actions done before, one who renounces the world is (called) the renouncer due to dispassion.
V-4. Due to the knowledge of the scripture (shastras), withdrawing from the phenomenal world by listening to sinful and auspicious experiences of the world; desisting from all the world composed of anger, jealousy, intolerance, egotism and pride; discarding bodily inclinations such as desire for wife, desire for wealth and desire for worldly glory, (excessive) regard for the shastras and public esteem; considering all these common things to be eschewed as vomit; endowed with the four disciplines (such as discrimination or permanent and transitory things) – he who renounces thus alone is a renouncer due to wisdom.
V-5. Having studied all (scripture) in due order and experienced all (worldly life) one who, influenced by wisdom cum dispassion and deep meditation on the Self, becomes an unclad (ascetic), is the renouncer due to wisdom cum dispassion.
V-6. Having completed the course of disciplined student-ship in celibacy, becoming a householder, reaching the stage of a forest-dweller, he who (thereafter) renounces the world in accordance with the order of the stages of life even in the absence of dispassion, is a renouncer of (worldly) activities.
V-7. Renouncing the world in celibacy and becoming unclad in renunciation – such is the renouncer due to dispassion. The renouncer due to (scriptural) learning is the renouncer due to wisdom. The renouncer due to imperfect knowledge is the renouncer of (worldly) activity.
V-8. Renunciation of activity is of two kinds: renunciation due to (some) cause and renunciation without (an adventitious) cause. The one with cause is the afflicted (and is at the point of death); the causeless is renunciation in the regular order.

The afflicted skips over all preliminary ritual acts; it is renunciation at the point of the departure of the vital breath; this is renunciation due to (some) cause. Hale in body (but convinced) that created things are transient and hence all things such as the body are fit to be abandoned:
V-9. ‘The individual soul, non-different from Brahman, pervading pure ether, the sun (Vasu), remaining in the sky, the Fire that rests in the altar (of the universe), the Guest, residing in the house (of the sacrifice), residing in men, dwelling in the superior (gods), resting in truth, residing in the sky (as the sun), born in the waters, born on earth (as grain, etc.,) born as (sacrificial) truth, born in mountains (as rivers), this truth (Brahman) is (truly) great.
V-10. Convinced that everything other than Brahman is transcient and as a result he renounces, that renunciation is renunciation without (an adventitious) cause.
V-11. Renunciation is of six kinds – Kutichaka, Bahudaka, Hamsa, Paramahamsa, Turiyatita and Avadhuta.
V-12. The Kutichaka ascetic wears tuft and sacred thread, carries an (emblematic) staff and water vessel, puts on a loin cloth and patched garment, is devoted to the service of father, mother and preceptor, has recourse to the assistance of using mantras for the vessel (pithara), spade (khanitra) and sling (sikya), is addicted to eating food in one place, puts on the forehead a perpendicular sign of white sandal and has a three-fold (emblematic) staff.
V-13. The Bahudaka ascetic wears tuft, etc., and patched garment, puts on the forehead a mark consisting of three horizontal lines of holy ashes, looks on all equally like the Kutichaka and subsists on eight mouthfuls of food gathered from (different) places like a bee.
V-14. The Hamsa ascetic wears matted hair, puts on the forehead a horizontal mark of holy ashes or a perpendicular mark of sandal, subsists on food gathered without pre-determination like a bee and wears loincloth and khandatunda (a piece of cloth covering the mouth).
V-15. The Paramahamsa ascetic wears no tuft or sacred thread, subsists only on food taken at night and gathered from five houses, has his hand serving as (alms-)bowl, wears a single loincloth and a single garment, (carries) one bamboo staff or wears a single garment, smears holy ashes (all over the body) and renounces everything.
V-16. The Turiyatita ascetic is ‘cow-faced’ (eats food at random without using hands), eats fruits (only) or if he takes cooked food, gets it from three houses (i.e. three mouthfuls), has his body just alive, is unclad and has his body as though it were a corpse (due to insensibility by nirvikalpa-samadhi).
V-17. The Avadhuta ascetic follows no rules, subsists on food that comes to him, as is the practice of a python, from all classes of people excepting those who are accused or fallen, and is solely devoted to the realization of his Self.
V-18. If one lives in (great) affliction (of bodily infirmities), he shall renounce the world in the due order (by getting instruction in Pranava and the Mahavakyas from his Guru).
V-19. To the Kutichaka, Bahudaka and Hamsa ascetics, the method of renunciation of the Kutichakas applies just as (renunciation is embraced after completing) the stages of brahmacharya, etc., (ending with) the fourth stage (namely, renunciation).
V-20. The rule is that the triad of the Paramahamsa, etc., has no waist band, loincloth, garment, water vessel or staff; their soliciting alms shall be from all classes of people and they shall be unclad. Even in the stage of renunciation they may study (the scripture) till they feel fully satisfied and thereafter discard in the waters the waistband, loincloth, staff, garment and water-vessel. Then if unclad there shall not be any vestige of patched garment. They shall neither study nor expound (the scripture). There is nothing whatsoever for them worth hearing. Other than the Pranava (Om) they shall not cultivate any science of logic, not even the Verbal authority (i.e. the Veda). He shall not speak much in expounding (sacred texts), he shall not stultify by his words the words of the great, (he shall not) communicate by making signs with his hands, etc.,, nor shall he use other special means of communication. He shall not speak to the low class of people, women, the fallen and (specially to) women in their courses. To the ascetic there is no worship of the gods, nor seeing (the deities) during festivals nor any journey on pilgrimage.

V-21. Again (on) the different kinds of ascetics. (In the rule relating) to the Kutichaka the receiving of alms is from one house; to the Bahudaka it is at random as in the case of a bee gathering honey; to the Hamsa it is eight mouthfuls (collected) from eight houses, to the Paramahamsa (five mouthfuls collected) from five houses, the hand being the (alms-)bowl; to the Turiyatita the food consists of fruits put into his mouth (gomukha); to the Avadhuta (the food comes to him) as in the case of a python, from all classes of people. The ascetic shall not stay many nights (in the same place). He shall not bow to any one. To the Turiyatita and Avadhuta none is superior. He who knows not the Self, though the eldest, is yet the youngest (in wisdom). He shall not swim across a river, nor climb a tree, nor travel in a carriage. He shall not indulge in buying and selling, nor barter even the least. He shall not put on airs nor speak an untruth. There is no duty enjoined on an ascetic. If there is, then he will have to mix with people practising religious observances (which is undesirable). Hence ascetics have the right (only) to meditation, etc.

V-22. The renouncer in an emergency and the Kutichaka ascetic attain the worlds of Bhur and Bhuvar respectively. The Bahudaka ascetic attains heaven (Svarga). The Hamsa sage attains the (highest heaven of) Tapoloka. The Paramahamsa reaches the abode of Brahma and of Truth (Satyaloka). The Turiyatita and the Avadhuta attain final beatitude in the (individual) Self by deeply meditating on the Self according to the maxim of the wasp and the worm.

V-23. 'Whatever the state one remembers
When discarding the body at death,
The same he attains (after death).
The teaching of the scripture is never false'.

V-24. Thus having known (the procedure), barring investigation into the nature of the Self, (the ascetic) shall not devote himself to any other practice. As a result of such practice there is the attainment of the respective worlds (such as heaven, etc.,). By one endowed with wisdom and dispassion liberation is (attained) in himself; hence there is no adherence to any other practice. Adherence to (any other) practice (will be useless for attaining final beatitude). To the embodied (self) (there are the three states of) waking, dreaming and deep sleep; in the waking state (it has) the faculty to perceive individuality (vishva); in the dreaming state, the subtle essence of light (taijasa); in the state of deep sleep, intelligence dependent on individuality (prajna). Due to the difference in the state, there is the difference in the conditioned Lord (Ishvara). For the difference in effect, there is the difference in the cause. In these (three states) the material cause for (such differences) is the external and internal activity of the fourteen sensory organs. The mental states are four, the mind (manas), intelligence (buddhi), ego (ahamkara) and the heart (chitta). There is clear difference in practices due to the difference in the activity of the mental states.

V-25. 'Know (the individual Self) to be awake
When it remains in the eye; when in the throat
It enters the dreaming (state); it is in the heart
In deep sleep; but remaining in the head
It is the fourth state (Turiya)'.

V-26. Knowing the Turiya to be the indestructible (Brahman) he who remains as though unconscious of all (happenings) such as whatever is heard or seen, remains as one in the state of deep sleep, though he is in the waking state. In him even in the dreaming state such condition (of non-consciousness) prevails. (The Shastras) say that he is one who is 'liberated while living'. The exposition of the meaning of all scriptures is that such a person alone attains liberation. A mendicant monk does not hanker after this world or the next (i.e. Svarga, the heaven of varying enjoyments with a time-limit). If he has (such) expectation he becomes one in accordance with that. By (ritual) practices of the scripture other than investigation into the Self, he does a useless thing, like the burden borne by a camel of a load of saffron flowers. (for him) there is no practice of the science of Yoga, no pursuit of the lore of the Sankhya, nor application of the mantras and rituals. If an ascetic practises lores other than (Self-realization) it is like adorning a corpse. As a cobbler is far away from the performance of Vedic rituals, so is he from the (practice of Brahma-)vidya (by his rituals). He is not to devote himself to repeat the Pranava. Whatever activity he does he has to reap the fruit there of. Hence discarding all (ritual acts) like the foam in castor oil, and seeing the unclad ascetic engaged in it (Self-realization) with complete control over the mind and using the hand as the (alms-)bowl, the mendicant monk shall (truly) renounce (all worldly attachments). Like the child, mad man or a goblin the mendicant monk shall not desire either for death or life, but shall merely mark time according to the maxim of a servant awaiting orders.

V-27. If an ascetic merely lives on the alms devoid of the qualities of forbearance, wisdom, dispassion, tranquillity, etc., he is a bane of the conduct of ascetics.

V-28. Not by bearing an (emblematic) staff, not by a shaven head, not by (special) dress, not by hypocritical airs (of sage-hood) does liberation (come to one).

V-29. He who bears the staff of wisdom is said to be ‘single staffed’. The ascetic who carries a wooden stick, eats all sorts of food and is devoid of wisdom goes to terrible hells called Maharaurava.

V-30. A stable position (in a monastery) is said by great sages to be similar to the excreta of a sow; hence, leaving it aside, the ascetic shall move about like an (assiduous) worm.

V-31. The Turiyatita ascetic shall have food and clothing without solicitation and just as they happen to occur, by others will. He shall be unclad and have a bath at others’ will.

V-32. The ascetic whose behaviour is well in harmony even with the dreaming state as with the waking state, is considered the best; he is the most excellent among those that follow the Vedanta.

V-33. In non-acquirement (of alms) he shall not grieve; in its acquisition he shall not feel joy. Avoiding attachment to material things he shall simply keep himself alive (for a higher purpose).

V-34. He shall in all cases shrink from being honoured (by admiring disciples); the ascetic who welcomes such honour gets bound (with worldly ties) though liberated.

V-35. For the sake of bare subsistence an ascetic may go about for alms to the houses of approved classes of people (i.e. the ‘twice borns’) at the proper time when they have dined after the fire-ritual.

V-36. Using his hand as a vessel (for receiving food) the ascetic shall not solicit alms more than once a day; he may eat the food standing, he may eat the food walking. There is no ceremonial sipping of water in between.

V-37. (The ascetics) with pure thoughts keep within the limits (of good behaviour) like the sea; these great men do not abandon the prescribed course (of conduct) like the sun.

V-38. When the ascetic seeks food with his mouth alone like a cow, he shall then be equanimous in all beings; he is (then) fit for immortality.

V-39. Going to a house which is not forbidden (for alms), he shall avoid a house which is prohibited. He shall enter the house when the door is open; he shall never go towards the house when it is closed.

V-40. He shall shelter (for the night) in a deserted house covered with dust, or he may shelter under a tree, giving up all likes and dislikes.

V-41. The ascetic shall go to sleep where he is when the sun sets and be free of (ritual) fire and (fixed) abode. He shall live on what comes at random, self-possessed and senses subdued.

V-42. Departing (from human habitations) and resorting to a forest, possessing true knowledge and senses subdued, moving about awaiting the time (of death), (the ascetic) becomes fit for absorption into Brahman.

V-43. The sage who moves about, desisting from causing fear to all beings has nowhere fear from any being.

V-44. Free from pride and egotism, unaffected by the pairs (of opposites), with all doubts dispelled, (the ascetic) never gets angry nor hates (any one) and does not utter a false word.

V-45. Moving in holy places, causing no injury to living beings and receiving alms at the proper time, (the sage) is fit for absorption into Brahman.

V-46. He shall at no time associate himself with the forest-dwellers (Vanaprasthas) and the householders. He shall desire to move about unobtrusively. Joy (of any kind) shall not enter him. His path indicated by the sun he shall walk the earth (unhurriedly) like a worm.
V-47. Actions entailing blessing and those connected with injury as well as those intended for the welfare of the world, these (the ascetic) shall neither perform nor cause others to do.
V-48. He shall not be attached to heterodox doctrines nor pursue a means of living. He shall not indulge in assertive arguments nor lean to either side in a debate.
V-49. He shall not have a following of disciples nor study many books. He shall not utilise a commentary nor initiate inaugural functions anywhere.
V-50. Without displaying any distinctive emblem or motive the ascetic shall show himself to the people as a mad man or a child or a dumb person though he is (all) wise.
V-51. He shall neither do nor speak on anything. He shall have no thoughts good or bad. Delighting in the Self, the sage shall move about, leading this way of life.
V-52. He shall move about the country alone, free from attachment, his senses subdued, playing with and rejoicing in the Self, self-possessed, equanimous.
V-53. Wise (but) playful like a child, well versed but appearing dull-witted, (the ascetic) shall journey. Learned, he may speak like a mad man. Seeking food like a cow he shall walk in the path of the Upanishads.
V-54-55. Disregarded, insulted, deceived, envied, beaten, obstructed or made to suffer by denial of food by wicked people or when faeces and urine are thrown at him by the ignorant and shaken in various ways, (the ascetic) desiring welfare but fallen into difficulties shall raise himself by the (power of the) Self.
V-56-57. Honour received by the ascetic brings about great loss to the wealth of his penance (Yoga), but when he is disregarded by ignorant people he attains success in the practice of Yoga (as he becomes free of ego by the ordeal). Without transgressing right conduct of the good the Yogin may so move about, that (ordinary) people may disregard him; but they shall never associate with him.
V-58. They Yogin (absorbed in meditation) shall do no harm by word, thought or physical action to beings such as the womb-born, the egg-born and others. He shall avoid all associations.
V-59. Abandoning all defects, such as passion and anger as well as pride, greed, delusion, etc., the mendicant monk shall remain free from fear.
V-60. Eaten food given as alms, observing silence, penance, meditation specially, (possessing) correct knowledge and dispassion – these are considered to be the duties of a mendicant monk.
V-61. Wearing ochre garment, ever devoted to the Yoga of meditation, he may take shelter (for the night) at the outskirts of a village, the shade of a tree or even in a temple. He shall always live on alms and nowhere eat food obtained from one house alone.
V-62. A wise man (before embracing renunciation) shall always be on the move till he attains purity of mind; there the pure-minded shall renounce worldly life and move about here and there.
V-63. Visualising God (the Lord Vishnu) everything, both outwardly and inwardly, he shall move about at all times, silent and free from impurity like the breeze.
V-64. Equanimous in joy and sorrow, patient and forgiving, eating what comes to his hand and seeing without enmity equally on the ‘twice-born’, the cow, the horse and the deer, etc., (he shall journey).
V-65. Meditating on Vishnu (who is) the supreme Self and the Lord (Ishana), contemplating on the Supreme bliss and remembering that he is Brahman alone (he shall spend the time).
V-66. Thus having become wise and possessing complete control over the mind, turning away from desires, unclad (by becoming an Avadhuta), always discarding all worldly affairs by thought, word and deed and turning his face away from the illusory phenomenal world, (the sage) becomes liberated (from worldly bondage) by deep meditation on his Self according to the maxim of the wasp and the worm. Thus (ends the fifth chapter of) the Upanishad.

VI-1. Then Narada asked of the grandfather (Brahma): 'Lord, (the sage attains liberation) by that practice, according to the maxim of the wasp and the worm. How is that practice (accomplished) ?' The god Brahma said to him: 'True in speech he shall lead the life, with his body remaining distinctive by the (power of) wisdom and dispassion.'

VI-2. Wisdom is the (wise man's) body; know that dispassion is his life; tranquillity and self restraint his eyes; the mind his face; intelligence his digit (kala) (consisting of sixteen parts beginning with Prana and ending with naman); the twenty-five elements his limbs, the (aggregate of the) states (of waking, etc.,) his five primary elements (of earth, water, etc.,); action, devotion, wisdom and dispassion are the branches (i.e. hands in the form of his) waking, dreaming, deep sleep and the fourth state (turiya); the fourteen organs are of the form of (unstable) pillars (fixed) in slime. None the less, as a pilot guides a boat even from a muddy place (to safety), as a mahout an (intractable) elephant, the man of dispassion shall bring them (organs) under his control by his discernment; and considering everything other than the 'I' (i.e. the Self) to be false and transitory, he shall always speak of himself as Brahman. There is nothing else for him to know other than his Self. Being thus 'liberated while living' (jivanmukta) he lives as one who has fulfilled himself. He shall never say, 'I am not Brahman', but (feel) incessantly 'Brahman I am' in the states of waking, dreaming and deep sleep; (then) reaching the turiya state he shall be merged in the state of turiyatita (of disembodied final beatitude).

VI-3. (In the fourth state of turiya) the day is the waking state, the night is the dreaming state and mid-night is the state of deep sleep. In one state there are the four states. Among the fourteen organs, each of which has a single function under its control, the functions of the eye, etc., (will now be described). By the eye there is the comprehension of form, by the ears that of sound, by the tongue that of taste, by the nose that of smell, by speech that of articulate expression, by the hand that of seizure, by the feet that of movement, by the anus that of evacuation, by the genitals that of (sexual) pleasure and by the skin that of touch. Intelligence which comprehends objects is dependent on these (described above). (It) comprehends by intelligence. It becomes conscious by the mind (chitta). It becomes conceited by the ego. Having specially created these the individual Self (Jiva) becomes as such due to the conscious possession of the body. The Jiva pervades the body as a householder moves in his house conscious of its possession. Having understood (the nature) of the face (of consciousness) (in the lotus of the heart) namely, that it experiences goodness in the eastern petal, sleep and sloth in the south-eastern, cruelty in the southern, sinfulness in the south-western, sportiveness in the western, inclination to move about in the north-western, tranquillity in the northern, wisdom in the north-eastern, dispassion in the pericarp, and thought of the Self in the filaments (the sage is left with the consciousness of the turiyatita Brahman alone simultaneously with the dawn of that wisdom).

VI-4. There is in the state (of the awareness) of life, the first of the waking state, the second of dreaming, the third of deep sleep, the fourth of the turiya state; and the 'state beyond the fourth' (turiyatita) when the four states are absent. The Self is one only (spoken of as) having the different states of vishva, taijasa, prajna and tatastha (the passive state). There is (only) one luminous Being, the witness, the one free of all attributes; the sage shall speak (i.e. feel) that he is Brahman (alone). Otherwise there are the four states of waking, etc., in the waking state, the four states of dreaming, etc., in the dreaming state, the four states of deep sleep, etc., in the state of deep sleep and the four states of turiya, etc., in the turiya state. Not so in the state of turiyatita which is devoid of attributes. As vishva, taijasa, prajna and Ishvara in the states of the gross, subtle and causal bodies, the witness remains as one alone in all the states. Is the passive one (tatastha) the witness ? The tatastha is the not the witness. Due to being a witness, he is not the witness alone. The Jiva is affected by his states of doing, enjoying and egotism, etc. The one other than the Jiva is unaffected (by the various states). If argued that the Jiva too is unaffected, it is not so. There is the conscious feeling of the body due to the consciousness of being the Jiva and of being a Jiva due to the possession of the body. There is an intervention in the state of the Jiva as between the ether in the pot and the all pervading ether. It is due to this intervention alone that the Jiva, pretending inhalation and exhalation investigates (into the supreme witness) by the mantra, ‘The Hamsa (Brahman), that I am”. Thus realizing (that there is really no difference between the Jiva and the supreme witness) one shall abandon conscious feeling of the body; thus one becomes free of the consciousness of the body. Such a one alone is said to be Brahman.

VI-5. Giving up attachment, conquering anger, taking a very moderate diet, subduing the senses and blocking the gates (of the body) by his intelligence, (the ascetic) shall direct his mind towards deep meditation.

VI-6. In solitary places alone, in caves and forests, the Yogin, ever in harmony, shall always begin well his meditation (on the Self).

VI-7. In receptions, ceremonies performed in honour of the manes (Sraddhas) and sacrifices, in religious processions and festivities and in the assemblies of people the knower of Yoga desiring final emancipation shall never be present.

VI-8. The Yogin absorbed in meditation shall so move about that the people disregard and insult him; but he shall never swerve from the path of the good.

VI-9. The three disciplines are restraint in speech, restraint in action and perfect control of the mind; he who practises these three restraints is ‘the observer of the three disciplines’ (tridandin) and is a great sage.

VI-10. That ascetic is considered as the foremost of all, who goes to receive alms from different houses of very learned Brahmanas, as a bee does for honey, when the ritual fire emits no smoke and has burnt itself out.

VI-11. He is a despicable ascetic who goes for alms continuously (without any restraint), remains in that order (of ascetics) without an inward urge and has no dispassion.

VI-12. He is considered an ascetic and no other, who, knowing that alms are specially attainable in a particular house, does not go there again.

VI-13-14. That ascetic is considered as one beyond the castes and orders (ativarnashramin) who realizes the supreme truth which is free of the body, senses, etc., which is the all-witness, the spiritual wisdom, the self of bliss and the self-radiant. Castes and orders, etc., pertaining to the body are invented by the bamboozling illusion.

VI-15. They (the castes and orders) are never part of my Self which is of the form of pure consciousness. He who realizes thus by the (teachings of the) Upanishads shall be deemed as one beyond the castes and orders.

VI-16. He whose conduct conforming to castes and orders has dropped out on visualising his Self, goes beyond all (restrictions of) castes and orders and remains in the (bliss of his) Self.

VI-17. The knowers of the truth of all the Vedas declare that man to be beyond the castes and orders who is established in his Self, having reached the stage beyond his order (ashrama) an his caste (varna).

VI-18. Therefore, Oh Narada, even the castes and the orders of other people have all been superimposed on the Self by delusion (of the ordinary people); this is not done by the knower of the Self.

VI-19. There is no (Vedic) injunction, no prohibition, no rule of exclusion or inclusion to those who have realized Brahman; nor is there anything else (restricting their conduct), Oh Narada.

VI-20-21. Unattached to all beings and even to the (attainment of the) position of the god Brahma and uprooting tenderness towards everything, even to his children, wealth, etc., (the novice), full of faith in the path leading to liberation and desiring to acquire the wisdom of the Upanishads, should approach a Guru who has realized Brahman, with a present in his hand.

VI-22. Pleasing him by rendering personal service attentively for a long time, he shall always listen with great attention to (his exposition of) the truths of the Upanishads.

VI-23. Free from ‘mine-ness’ and egotism, bereft of all attachment and always possessing tranquillity, etc., he visualises the Atman in his Self.

VI-24. Dispassion always dawns (on one) only when one sees the defects of worldly life. To one discontented with the life in the world renunciation will come. There is no doubt about it.

VI-25. One (truly) desiring liberation is called a Paramahamsa. (Before reaching this state) the ascetic shall practise (in his life) the wisdom of the scripture which is evidently the one means of liberation, by listening to the exposition of the Upanishads, etc.

VI-26. In order to attain the wisdom of the scripture (that results in self-realization) the sage called the Paramahamsa should be equipped with all the means such as tranquillity, self-restraint, etc.

VI-27-29. Deeply intent on the practice of the (wisdom of the) Upanishads, tranquil, self restrained, conquering the senses, fearless, free always from 'mine-ness', unaffected by the pairs (of opposites), without dependants or other belongings (the ascetic) shall be clad in a tattered loincloth and be with shaven head; or he may be unclad. Wise, proficient in the Vedanta, practising yoga, free from 'mine-ness' and egotism, equanimous towards friends, etc., friendly to all beings, alone, the man of wisdom and the self-controlled – (such an ascetic) crosses (the ocean of worldly misery) and not any other.

VI-30. (As novice) he shall be devoted to the welfare of his elders and reside a year there (in the abode of the Guru). He shall always be vigilant in the observance of the lesser vows (niyamas) as well as the great moral duties (yamas).

VI-31. Then at the end (of the year) having attained the excellent Yoga of wisdom he shall move about the country in conformity with (lit. without antagonizing) right conduct.

VI-32. Thereafter at the end of another year he shall give up (even) the excellent wisdom of the Yajnavalkya and the triad of orders (of Kutichaka, etc.,) and reach the state of the Paramahamsa.

VI-33. And bidding farewell to the Gurus (elders and preceptors) he shall indeed move about the country, giving up all attachment, subduing anger, being very moderate in diet, and conquering the senses.

VI-34. These two (people) do not fare well due to incompatibility in their action; the householder not engaging himself in productive work and the mendicant monk busying himself with work.

VI-35. On seeing a young handsome woman (he) becomes inflamed with passion, and drinking liquor he becomes intoxicated. Therefore he shall avoid from afar a woman who is poison to the eye.

VI-36. Conversing with women, as well as chatting with and sending them on errands, their dance, music and laughter and scandals about them – these (the ascetic) shall avoid.

VI-37. Neither (ceremonial) ablution nor muttering prayers, nor worship (of the gods), nor offering oblation to gods, nor means of accomplishing anything, nor fire-ritual, etc., is to be practised by him here, Oh Narada.

VI-38. He has not (to do) the worshipping (of gods), offering oblation to the manes, going on pilgrimage and the observing of vows; he has neither righteous conduct (dharma) nor unrighteous conduct (adharma); nor has he any rule (of conduct) nor worldly action.

VI-39-41. The Yogin shall give up all (worldly) duties and those conforming to popular practices in every way. The wise ascetic, the Yogin, his mind dwelling on the highest truth, shall not destroy insects, worms, moths, as well as trees. With your attention always turned inward, pure, composed in mind, your mind filled with the Self, discarding inward contact (with outward objects), may you, Oh Narada, move freely in the world. Journeying alone the ascetic shall not move about in an anarchical country.

VI-42. Praising none, bowing to no one, not uttering Svadha (as he worships no manes), residing in unstable (deserted houses) and hills the ascetic shall move about without any restraint. Thus (ends the sixth chapter of) the Upanishad.

VII-1. Then asked about the restrictions to (the conduct of) the ascetic, the god Brahma said to them in front of Narada. (The ascetic) being dispassionate shall reside in a fixed abode during the rains and move about for eight months alone; he shall not (then) reside in one place (continuously). The mendicant monk shall not stay in one place like a deer out of fright. He shall not accept (any proposal to prolong his stay) which militates against his departure. He shall not cross a river (swimming) with his hands. Neither shall he climb a tree (for fruits). He shall not witness the festival in honour of any god. He shall not subsist on food from one place (alone). He shall not perform external worship of gods. Discarding everything other than the Self and subsisting on food secured as alms from a number of houses as a bee (gathers honey), becoming lean, not increasing fat (in the body), he shall discard (the fattening) ghee like blood. (He shall consider) getting food in one house alone as (taking) meat, anointing himself with fragrant unguent as smearing with an impure thing, treacle as an outcaste, garment as a plate with leavings of another, oil-bath as attachment to women, delighting with friends as urine, desire as beef, the place previously known to him as the hut of an outcaste, women as snakes, gold as deadly poison, an assembly hall as a cemetery, the capital city as dreadful hell (Kumbhipaka), and food in one house as lumps of flesh of a corpse.

Discarding the sight of others as different from himself and also the ways of the world, leaving his native place, avoiding the places previously known to him, recollecting the bliss of the Self like the joy of regaining a forgotten object and forgetting the pride in his body and native place, admitting that his body is fit to be discarded like a corpse, he shall remain far away leaving the place of his children and close relatives as a thief does when released from prison. Subsisting on food secured without effort, devoting himself to meditation on Brahman and the Pranava and freed of all (worldly) activities, having burnt passion, anger, greed, delusion, pride, envy, etc., and unaffected by the three gunas (Sattva etc.,), free of the six human infirmities (hunger, thirst, etc.,), devoid of change due to the six states (of beings namely origin, existence, etc.,), true in speech, pure, not hating any one, (residing) one night in a village, five nights in a city, five nights in sacred spots, five nights in holy places on the banks of sacred rivers, without a fixed abode, with a steady mind, never uttering a falsehood, he may reside in mountain-caves; he shall journey alone, (but intent on the four months of rest during the rains, chaturmashya) he may journey in the company of another towards a village, and as three or four towards a city.

(The rule is) that a mendicant monk shall journey alone. He shall not allow free play to the fourteen organs there. Enjoying the wealth of dispassion brought on by the full knowledge (of the transient nature of worldly life), (firmly) resolved in himself that there is no one other than his Self and there is no other different from him, seeing everywhere his own form and (thus) attaining liberation while living (jivanmukti), and conscious of his fourfold Self (as Otir, etc.,) till the end of the sway of prarabdha-karman, (the ascetic) shall live meditating on his Self till his body falls.

VII-2. (These are) bathing at the three periods (sandhyas) of the day by the Kutichaka ascetic, twice by the Bahudaka, once by the Hamsa, mental bath by the Paramahamsa, bath (i.e. smearing) of holy ashes by the Turiyatita, and air-bath by the Avadhuta.

VII-3. The Kutichaka should put on the perpendicular mark of sandal on the forehead (urdhvapundra), the Bahudaka the three horizontal lines of holy ashes (tripundra), the Hamsa (either) the urdhvapundra or the tripundra, the Paramahamsa the smearing of holy ashes, the Turiyatita the mark of sandal (tilakapundra), the Avadhuta none at all (or) the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta (have none at all).

VII-4. The Kutichaka shall have a shave (in each of the six) seasons, the Bahudaka a shave (at the end of) two seasons, the Paramahamsa no shave or if there is, a shave in six months (at the time of the solstice, ayana), and no shave to the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta.

VII-5. The Kutichaka takes food in one house, the Bahudaka collects alms from door to door as a bee does honey, the Hamsa and the Paramahamsa use the hand as the vessel (i.e. begging bowl), the Turiyatita is cow-mouthed (i.e. food is placed in his mouth) and the Avadhuta takes food at random (as does a python).

VII-6. The Kutichaka (wears) two garments, the Bahudaka one garment, the Hamsa a piece (of cloth), the Paramahamsa is either unclad or wears a single loin-cloth, the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta are unclad (lit. they remain as at the time of birth). The Hamsa and the Paramahamsa wear a (deer-)skin, not the others.

VII-7. The Kutichaka and the Bahudaka (practise) worship of gods, the Hamsa and the Paramahamsa worship mentally, the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta feel, ‘That I am’ (i.e. they identify the individual soul with the supreme spirit)

VII-8. The Kutichaka and the Bahudaka have the right to recite mantras, the Hamsa and the Paramahamsa to meditate (on them), the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta have no right for either of the two (practices), (but) the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta have the right to give instruction on the great Vedantic texts; so also the Paramahamsa. The Kutichaka, the Bahudaka and the Hamsa have no right to give instruction to others.

VII-9. The Kutichaka and the Bahudaka (are to meditate on) the Pranava of men (the external Pranava consisting of four mantras), the Hamsa and the Paramahamsa on the antarapranava (consisting of eight mantras), the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta on brahmapranava (consisting of sixteen matras).

VII-10. The Kutichaka and the Bahudaka shall listen (to the exposition of the Vedanta), the Hamsa and the Paramahamsa reflect on them, the Turiyatita and the Avadhuta have profound and repeated meditation on them. The rule is that all these (ascetics) shall meditate on the Self.

VII-11. Thus the aspirant after liberation always remembering the liberating mantra (Om) which enables him to cross (the ocean of) worldly life, shall live 'liberated while living'; the ascetic shall seek the means to attain final beatitude (Kaivalya) according to the rules of the special order (of the ascetic in which he finds himself). Thus (ends the seventh chapter of) the Upanishad.

VIII-1. Then Narada asked the god Brahma: 'Be pleased to expound the saviour mantra for ending the course of worldly life'. Agreeing to it the god Brahma commenced to expound it. The Om (is) Brahman in the mode of viewing it as made up of many separate bodies (vyashti) and as made up of parts each of which is cosubstantially the same with the whole (samashti). Which is the vyashti ? Which is the samashti ? The samhara Pranava and srishti Pranava are of three kinds: the inner Pranava (Antah-Pranava), the outer Pranava (Bahya-Pranava) and the combined inner and outer Pranava (Ubhayatmaka-Pranava). The (one) Brahma-Pranava is (sometimes) the inner Pranava (consisting of eight matras) and the practical Pranava (Vyaharika-Pranava). The outer Pranava and the Pranava of the sages (Arsha-Pranava). The combined inner and outer Pranava is the Virat-Pranava. The Samhara-Pranava, the Brahma-Pranava and the Ardhamatra-Pranava. (Thus the Brahma-Pranava is of eight kinds: Samhara-Pranava, Srishti-Pranava, Antah-Pranava, Bahya-Pranava, Vyavaharika-Pranava, Arsa-Pranava, Virat-Pranava and Ardhamatra-Pranava).

VIII-2. The Om is Brahman. Know that the Om consisting of one syllable is the Antah-Pranava. It is divided into eight (matras) – the vowel 'a', the vowel 'u', the consonant 'm', the half-syllable (ardha-matra) the nada, the bindu, the kala and the shakti. Hence it is not four (as its chief matras have been said to be). The vowel 'a' consists of ten thousand parts, the vowel 'u' is of a thousand parts, the letter 'm' of a hundred parts and the Ardhamatra-Pranava consists of an endless number of parts. The Virat-Pranava is possessed of attributes (Saguna) and the Samhara-Pranava is free of attributes (Nirguna), the Utpatti-Pranava consists of both (Saguna and Nirguna). The Virat-Pranava is prolated (pluta). The Samhara-Pranava is pluta-pluta.

VIII-3. The Virat-Pranava consists of sixteen matras and is beyond the thirty-six primary substances. How has it sixteen matras. They are enumerated: the vowel 'a' is the first, the vowel 'u' is the second, the letter 'm' is the third, the ardhamatra is the fourth, the bindu is the fifth, the nada the sixth, the kala the seventh, the kalatita the eighth, shanti the ninth, the santyatita the tenth, the unmani the eleventh, the manonmani the twelfth, the puri the thirteenth, the madhyama the fourteenth, the pashyanti the fifteenth, and the para the sixteenth. Again the Brahma-Pranava though only one attains the state of possessing or not possessing attributes (Saguna and Nirguna), having attained the state of possessing 128 matras, due to the twofold character of Prakriti and Purusha, when it has sixty-four matras each.

VIII-4. This (Brahma-Pranava) is the prop of all, the supreme effulgence and the lord of all –thus (the sages with true vision) look upon it. It consists of all gods and the prop of all universe (the Lord) is in it.

VIII-5. It consists of all the syllables; it is the Time; it is composed of all the scripture and is the auspicious one (Shiva). It is the most excellent of all the Vedas and consists of (the essence) of all the Upanishads; this (Om, the Atman) should be sought.

VIII-6. Past, present and future constitute the three periods – the indestructible syllable Om (pervades and transcends) these; know that it is the beginning (of everything) and the bestower of final beatitude.
VIII-7. The same (Om) which is the Atman has been described by the word Brahman. Similarly experiencing it as the one (without a second), the ageless, the immortal, the Om and super-imposing the Om along with the body (on Brahman) it becomes one with it. Know it for certain then that the triple-bodied Atman is the supreme Brahman.
VIII-8. One should deeply meditate on the supreme Brahman in the due order of Vishva, etc., (the Vishva, the Viraj, the Otir and the Turya).
VIII-9-11. This Atman is fourfold – as experiencing the gross aspect (as the Vishva) when it is an individual in the gross aspect, as enjoying (the world) in the dreaming state in a subtle form when it has assumed the subtle form (of the Taijasa), as (enjoying bliss) in the state of identity (of the Prajna and the Ishvara), and as enjoying bliss (in the Turya state). The Atman is of four padas (quarters). The Vishva consisting of four stages (Vishva-Vishva, Vishva-Taijasa, Vishva-Prajna and Vishva-Turya) is the Purusha Vaishvanara. It functions in the waking state. It perceives gross forms (of the phenomenal world) and experiences them. It possesses nineteen faces (the five organs of perception, the five organs of action, the five vital airs and the four inner senses of manas, buddhi, ahamkara and chitta), has eight limbs (the sky as the head, the sun and the moon the two eyes, the directions the ears, the sea the lower part of the abdomen, the earth the feet), moves everywhere and is the master (Prabhu).
VIII-12-13. This Vishva (jit) is the first pada (of the Atman).
[The Vishva (the Vishvapada of the Atman) has four aspects in the four states of waking, dreaming, deep sleep and the Turya. In the waking state it functions through the senses and experiences the sight, etc., of objects. This is the waking within the waking state (jagrat-jagrana). Its experiencer in the individual aspect is the Vishva-Vishva (the Vishva subdivision of the Vishvapada of the Atman); it is Virat-Viraj in the collective aspect. It is Otir-Otir in the individual and collective aspects. When the mind grasps objects without the functioning of the senses it is dreaming within the waking state (jagrat-svapna); its experiencer is Vishva-Taijasa (the Taijasa subdivision of the Vishva). When one is not conscious of anything but remains as if unconscious then it is sleep within the waking state (jagrat-susupti); its experiencer is the Vishva-Prajna (the Prajna subdivision of the Vishva). When one is in equanimity due to the grace of the Guru or the fruition of one's good deeds (punya), as if one were in Samadhi, and behaves like an onlooker (sakshin) it is the Turya in the waking state (jagrat-turya). Its experiencer is the Vishva-Turya (the Turya subdivision of the Vishva)].
The second pada (of the Atman the Taijasa, too, has four aspects (the Taijasa-Vishva, the Taijasa-Taijasa, the Taijasa-Prajna and the Taijasa-Turya) and is the lord of beings, the Hiranyagarbha. It functions as the master in the dreaming state. It perceives subtle forms (of the phenomenal world) and experiences them. Though possessing eight limbs it is one and not different, Oh Narada (lit. the tormentor of foes).
VIII-14-16. [When in the dreaming state the Atman experiences the sight, etc., of objects with dream-eyes, etc., without the active functioning of the mind then there is the waking within the dreaming state (svapna-jagarana) and its experiencer is the Taijasa-Vishva (the Vishva subdivision of the Taijasa). Its experiencer is the Sutra-Viraj in the collective aspect of the experiences of the svapna-jagarana state; it is the Otir subdivision of the Anujnatir in the individual and collective aspects. When in the dreaming state the Atman enjoys the objects by the mind alone without the functioning of the dream-eyes, etc., and the svapna-jagarana state, it is the state of svapna-svapna (dreaming within the dreaming state). Its experiencer is the Taijasa-taijasa (the Taijasa subdivision of the Taijasa pada of the Atman). When there is no experience of the svapna-jagarana and the svapna-svapna states and there is no perception either by the dream-eyes, etc., or by the mind and there is a total forgetfulness of external objects and of oneself, that state of insensibility is the svapna-susupti (the state of deep sleep within the dreaming state). The Atman who experiences this state is the Taijasa-Prajna (the Prajna subdivision of the Taijasa pada of the Atman). When due to the fruition of one's good deeds there are no perceptions of the three previous states of the dreaming state and the Atman remains in the Turya state of the dreaming state, when there shines a neutral state (the state of a witness) of generic and particular experiences of the external world and of the inner senses, that state is svapna-turya (the Turya subdivision of dreaming state) and the Atman who experiences this is the Taijasa-Turya (the Turya subdivision of the Taijasa pada of the fourfold Atman].

When one is asleep and neither hankers after desire nor sees any dream, that is clearly deep sleep. In this state functions the four-fold Prajna (as Prajna-Vishva, Prajna-Taijasa, Prajna-Prajna and Prajna-Turya), which is termed the third pada of the Atman. This Atman is one, remains in the state of deep sleep, possesses the fullness of wisdom, enjoys happiness, consists of everlasting bliss and remains in the heart of all beings; yet he enjoys bliss, has the mind for his face, is omnipresent and indestructible and is the Ishvara.

VIII-17. He is the lord of all, omniscient and subtle in conception. He permeates all beings; he is the prime source, the origin and the destruction of all.

VIII-18. All these three stages (of waking, dreaming and deep sleep) are a hindrance to the annihilation of all activities to beings (i.e. for self-realization); hence they are akin to the state of deep sleep; it is really dream-stuff and has been said to be an illusion alone. [In the state of deep sleep when the person remaining in either of the two states of waking or dreaming desires to move to the state of deep sleep and experiences the false notion of form, etc., of objects with the eyes, etc., then it is the state of waking within deep sleep (susupti-jagrat); its experiencer in the individual aspect is the Vishva subdivision of the Prajna; in its collective aspect it is the Viraj subdivision of the Bijatman; in the combined individual and collective aspect it is the Anujnaikarasotir. In the state of deep sleep when the Atman is free of the false notion of form, etc., of external objects and occupying a position in either of the waking or dreaming states experiences the false notions of form, etc., of objects, it is the state of dreaming with in deep sleep (svapna-svapna). The experiencing Atman then is the Prajna-Taijasa (the Taijasa subdivision of the Prajna). Again in deep sleep when the Atman, though experiencing the false notion of form, etc., of objects with the false activities (of seeing, etc.), which pervade one's consciousness (Chaitanya), is yet not experiencing them as if stagnant, then it is the state of deep sleep within deep sleep. The experiencing Atman then is the Prajna-Prajna (the Prajna subdivision immanent in the Prajna). Again in the state of deep sleep when the Atman enjoys bliss, remaining as the witness of the experiences of the three previous stages in deep sleep, then it is the Turya state of deep sleep and the experiencing Atman is the Prajna-Turya (the Turya subdivision of the Prajna)].

VIII-19-20. The fourth (pada, the Turya) though fourfold (as Turya-Vishva, Turya-Taijasa, Turya-Prajna and Turya-Turya) is indeed the one essence of pure consciousness, for the reason that each one of these (Vishva, etc.,) culminates in the Turya state. (The Turya state) forms the basis for the differentiation (of the Atman) as Otir, Anujnatir and Anujnana (i.e. Anujnanaikarasa). These three different states are (really) susupta (as they merely constitute a veil of the Turya-Turya which is supreme bliss) and consists of an inward dream-stuff. Knowing that (anything other than the Turya-Turya) is mere illusion, there remains the next moment the one essence of pure consciousness.

VIII-21. [As the Turya-Turya, being the one state of bliss, is incapable of subdivisions in the individual, collective, and partly individual and partly collective aspects, the Turya by itself is not of a fourfold nature, but only three (excluding the Turya-Turya). This threefold nature of the Turya may be explained thus: As there are distinctions in external objects, the knower of Brahman perceives them with his senses, but without distinction; this state is the turya-jagarana; the Atman who experiences this state individually is the Turya-Vishva, collectively it is the Turya-Viraj, partly individual partly collective it is the Avikalpa-Otir. When the knower of Brahman, with all sense-activities abated, perceives the oneness of the Self with Brahman by his mind alone it is the state of turya-svapna; the Atman who experiences this is the Turya-Taijasa. When the person is in distinctionless deep meditation (Nirvikalpa-samadhi) and remains as if in a state of suspended animation, it is the state of turya-susupti and the experiencing Atman is the Turya-Prajna.]

Here is the distinct precept that the Turya-Turya is not at any time gross wisdom, (as it is not the Otrotir which is the same as Vishva-Vishva and the Viraj-Viraj, experiencing the jagrat-jagarana state), nor indeed the subtle sentience (as it is different from the Taijasa, Sutra and Anujnatir of the Svapna-jagarana state), nor pure consciousness (Prajna), (as it is different from the Otir-Avikalpa, the same as the Vishva, the Viraj and the Turya of the form of consciousness disclosing the presence or absence of the jagrat-jagarana and other states), nor anywhere else, Oh sage.
VIII-22. It is not non-consciousness (Aprajna) (as it is far away from the Anujnatir-Otir, identical with the Taijasa-Vishva and the Sutra-Viraj that are without outward perception in the svapna-jagarana state), nor of both gross and subtle consciousness (as it is outside the scope of Otir-Anujnaikarasa, identified with the Vishva-Prajna and the Viraj-Bija of the jagrat-svapna state which is outside the province of true knowledge), nor exclusive intelligence (as it is not within the scope of Anujnatir-Anujnaikarasa, identified with the Taijasa-Prajna and the Sutra-Bija of the form of exclusive intelligence functioning in the svapna-svapna state) and is never perceptible (as it is beyond the range of the Anujnatir-Anujnatir, identified with the taijasa-Taijasa and the Sutra-Sutra deluded by the vision created by the mind in the svapna-svapna state).
VIII-23. It cannot be defined (as it is different from the Anujnaikarasa-Anujnatir, identified with the Prajna-Taijasa and the Bija-Sutra which can be known only through the ignorance of the Atman in the svapna-svapna state), cannot be grasped (as it is different from the Anujnaikarasa-Otir, identified with the Prajna-Vishva and the Bija-Viraj, which can be grasped through the ignorance of the Atman in the svapna-jagarana state), is incapable of being expressed (as it is different from the Anujnatir-Avikalpa, identified with the Taijasa-Sutra-Turiya, which manifests the presence or absence of the svapna-jagarana and other states in the svapna-turya state), is beyond thought (as it is outside the Anujnaikarasa-Anujnaikarasa, identified with the Prajna-Prajna and the Bija-Bija in the svapa-svapa state, having only the recollection, 'I know not anything of that state'), is incapable of being given a name (as it is untouched by the perception of the Anujnaikarasa-Avikalpa, identified with the Prajna-Bija-Turya, that could be named as the witness of the presence or absence of the svapna-jagarana and similar states in the svapna-turya state), is also the essence of the conviction in the one Atman (as it is different from the perceptions of the Avikalpa-Otir, identified with the Turya-Vishva-Viraj, experiencing the turya-jagarana state), is the annihilation of worldly life (as it cannot bear even the smell of the Avikalpa-Anujnatir, identified with the Turya-Taijasa-Sutra which in some cases does not put an end to worldly life and which experiences the turya-svapna state), is quiescent (as it differs from the experience of the Avikalpa-Anujnaikarasa, identified with the Turya-Prajna-Bija experiencing the turya-svapna state), is the auspicious one (as it is the same as final beatitude – Kaivalya – in the disembodied state) and is the non-dual one (as it is of the form of the supreme non-dual state without a counter-part) – this (the knowers of Brahman) consider as the fourth (the turya-turya); it is the (same as the) Brahma-Pranava. This should be realized and not any other (called) turya. This (turya-turya) is the prop to the seekers after liberation as the sun (to the phenomenal world); it is self-effulgent (as it is the source of lustre to the sun, etc.,); it is the ether of Brahman (as it is without a counter-part); it always shines as it is the transcendent Brahman. Thus (ends the eighth chapter of) the Upanishad.

IX-1. Then Narada inquired: 'How is the real form of Brahman ?' The god Brahma answered (expounding) the real form of Brahman. Those who consider that He (the transcendent Brahman) is one and himself (the individual self) as another are beasts, though not beasts in their (true) nature. The wise (sage) having realized thus (that the individual Self and Brahman are identical) is released from the jaws of death (i.e. belief in duality results in death and renunciation-birth; that in non-duality, in immortality). There is no other path known to reach the goal (of final beatitude).
IX-2. Time (is the root-cause of worldly life, say some philosophers), Nature (say the Mimamsakas), chance (say the atheists), the (five) elements (say the Jainas who believe in the eternality of the world), Matter (Prakriti) (say the Saktas), the Purusha (Hiranyagarbha) (say the Yogins) – thus the speculation (on the cause of worldly life). The combination of these is not (the cause) on account of the existence of the Self. The Self too is incapable (of being the cause) on account of its being subject to happiness and misery.

IX-3. They (the knowers of Brahman) resorting to the Yoga of deep meditation perceived the power (Maya) of the self-luminous Atman, well hidden by its own attributes (of Sattva, etc.,), who, alone, governs all these causes including Time and the individual Self.

IX-4. (Maya, under the guidance of the Saguna-Brahman – Ishvara – created the universe. Brahman itself does not perform any action as it is nishkriya). (They perceived) that (world resembling the wheel of a chariot) in one felly (Maya), covered with three (the gods Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva, possessing the power of creation, sustenance and withdrawal of the world, due to the association with the three gunas), possessing sixteen powers (kalas), having fifty spokes with twenty nails (in the form of the senses and their objects), having six groups of eight (astakas) with one fetter (desire) of many forms, with three kinds of paths, and having delusion which is the cause of the two (goodness and sin, based on love and hatred).

IX-5. We think of that (river) the water of which flows in five ways (currents), which has five fierce mouths due to five causes, the waves of which are the five vital airs, whose source is (the ego) which controls the five senses of perception, which has five whirlpools, whose speed of flow consists of the five miseries, which has fifty divisions and which has five junctures.

IX-6. In this wheel of Brahman which is (the cause of) the life of all, (the substratum of) the dissolution of all and extensive (far vaster than the sky), the Hamsa (the Paramatman in the form of the individual Self) is revolved. Having considered himself as separate (as the individual Self, as the ether in the pot with reference to the all-pervading ether), and Brahman as the controlling Self (he is revolved in the wheel of worldly life); and then becoming beloved by Him (on realizing the truth in 'Thou art That', and ‘I am Brahman’) (the individual soul) attains immortality.

IX-7. This (described before as different from the Saguna Brahman, or Ishvara) has indeed been sung (in the Upanishads) as the supreme Brahman; on Him (the essence of the Pranava) the triad (is super-imposed) and it is the support (of the phenomenal world) which is in itself; it is imperishable. Knowers of the Veda realizing the difference (between the Self and Brahman to be false) and being completely devoted to Him are absorbed in the transcendent Brahman.

IX-8. The Lord sustains the universe unified (by cause and effect), the perishable (phenomenal world) and the imperishable (Maya), the manifested (Nature) and the unmanifested (cause, Maya). The individual Atman is considered to be powerless due to its nature of being an experiencer (of pleasure and pain); having realized the self-effulgent Being, he becomes free of all bonds.

IX-9. The omniscient and the ignorant are the two uncreated beings; the (former) is the Lord and (the other) the powerless (anisha); there is indeed the one uncreated (Prakriti) which is intended for the things of experience and the experiencer The (transcendent) Atman is unlimited and omnipresent and is not an agent (of actions). When (one) realizes these three (Ishvara, the individual Self and Prakriti) to be Brahman (one becomes Brahman).

IX-10. Prakriti (Pradhana) is perishable; the Lord (Hara, who dispels ignorance) is immortal and imperishable. The one self-effulgent Being rules over the perishable (Prakriti) and the individual Atman. By repeated deep meditation on Him and concentration of the mind (in Yoga, ‘I am He’) and by the realization of true reality, (there shall be) the disappearance of the universal illusion (Maya) at the end (of one’s ignorance).

IX-11. Having realized the self-effulgent Lord (as identical with the Self) one is released from all bonds; with all miseries destroyed there will be an end to births and deaths. By deeply meditating on that (that he is no other than that reality) and when the difference between the body (and the Self has disappeared) (the sage) realizes the third supreme state (of the Parameshvara) and (therein) final beatitude (kevala), and (thus) has fulfilled himself.

IX-12. This (Brahman) should be realized (as oneself), it is everlasting and present as the individual Atman; for there is nothing other than that that is worthy of realization. Having considered (with illusory vision) the experiencer (individual Atman), the objective world (of experience) and the Ishvara (ruler) (as different), (know) that all this triad has been well declared (by the knowers of the Vedanta) to be Brahman (alone).
IX-13. The means of realizing this Brahman is the Brahma-Vidya (the teaching of the Upanishads) and penance (i.e. deep meditation); it is solely dependent on the Upanishads (for its realization).
IX-14. To one who thus understands and meditates on one's Self alone, 'What delusion is there, what sorrow, to one who beholds oneness ?' Hence (the separateness of) Viraj, the past, the present and the future (disappears and they) become of the form of the indestructible (Brahman).
IX-15. Subtler than the atom, greater than the great, the Self is situated in the heart of this (every) creature. One sees this transcendent Lord who is free from passions by the grace of the creator and (thus) becomes freed from sorrow.
IX-16. Having no hands and feet, (the Lord) moves fast and grasps (objects); without eyes He sees; without ears He hears. He knows things to be known (without a mind, as he is omniscient); no one knows Him. (knowers of the Vedanta) speak of Him as the foremost transcendental Purusha (the supreme Consciousness).
IX-17. The wise (Yogin) does not feel sorrow, having realized the Atman who is bodiless, transcendent and all pervading and who is present in (all) bodies which are impermanent.
IX-18. This transcendent (Being) the prop of all (as Vishnu), whose powers are beyond (the reach of) thought, who is to be realized by the esoteric meaning of all the Upanishads, and who is greater than the (indestructible) great, ought to be realized; at the end of everything (phenomenal) the emancipator (lit. the harbinger of death to avidya) ought to be known.
IX-19. The (all-)wise, the (most) ancient, the most exalted of sentient beings, the Lord of all, the one adored by all gods, and devoid of beginning, middle and end, the infinite, the indestructible and the prop (lit. the mountain) to (the gods) Shiva, Vishnu and Brahma (should be realized).
IX-20. All this Universe made up of the five elements and remaining in the five, which becomes endless in variety by their quintuplication is pervaded by him (the Atman as Antaryamin, etc.,); but it is unencompassable by the parts (thus) quintuplicated; (for) it is the highest of the high and greater than the great, and eternal auspiciousness by the effulgence of its own form. (Thus the seeker after liberation should realize the Self as Brahman).
IX-21. Neither one who has not refrained from bad conduct, nor one who is not peaceful, nor one without concentrated meditation, nor one whose mind is not quiescent can realize him (Brahman) by (mere) knowledge (of the scripture). (By the one gaining true knowledge (Prajnana) by refraining from the evils described above realizes Brahman).
IX-22. The Self (remaining in oneself) reveals itself neither to one (who considers it) as inwardly wise, nor as outwardly wise, nor as gross, nor as subtle, nor as knowledge, nor as ignorance, nor as knowledge of both (external and internal), nor as conceivable, nor as directly connected with worldly activities. He who realizes it thus becomes liberated; he becomes liberated. Thus said the god Brahma.
IX-23. The mendicant monk is a knower of the real nature of the Self. The mendicant monk journeys alone (as duality is foreign to him even in a crowd). Like a deer timid through fear, he remains (without mixing with company). He does not stand in the way (of others' progress). Discarding everything other than his (bare) body, sustaining his life in the manner of a bee (by collecting food from different places) and deeply meditating on his Self and without seeing any difference in all things from his own Self, he becomes liberated. This mendicant monk abstaining from being the agent of all (worldly) actions, freed from (duties of) the preceptor, disciple, scripture, etc., and discarding all bands of the phenomenal world, is untouched by delusions. How can the mendicant monk devoid of wealth be happy ? He is rich (as he has the wealth of Brahman), beyond both knowledge and ignorance, beyond pleasure and pain, illumined by self-effulgence, celebrated among all (people), omniscient, the giver of all great powers, the lord of all – thus he considers himself. That is the highest place of Lord Vishnu where the Yogins, having reached it never return (therefrom). The sun shines not there, nor does the moon. He never again returns (to worldly life), he never returns. That is final beatitude (Kaivalya). Thus (ends) the Upanishad. End of the ninth chapter (and the Upanishad).

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Trisikhi Brahmana Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

A Brahmin called 'Trishiki Brahmana' went to the land of Sun God and asked him, "Oh God, What is body? What is soul? What is the cause and what is Athma?" 1

The Sun God replied:

You have to realize that all this is Shiva. Because only Shiva is ever clean, who is devoid of any blemishes, and who is everywhere and for whom there is no second. He is the only one who creates everything by his light and similar to the fire appearing in different forms on different pieces of steel, he appears in different forms. If you ask, to what he gives light, the answer would be, Brahmam which is denoted by the word, "Sath", and which is merged with ignorance and illusion. That Brhamam gave rise to, "that which is not clear". "That which is not clear" gave rise to, "Mahat (great)". "Mahat" gave rise to egoism. Egoism gave rise to "Five Thanmathras". That "Five Thanmathras" gave rise to "Five Bhoothas" viz earth, water, fire air and ether.

1. Ether is consciousness viz mind, wisdom, self will, and egoism

2. Air is Samana, Udhana, Vyana, Apana and Prana which are the airs in the body.

3. Fire is ears, skin, eyes, tongue and nose.

4. The concept of water is feelings of sound, touch, view, taste and smell.

5. Earth is words, hands, legs and other physical organs.

6. Ether which is the concept of wisdom is decision, behavior and self esteem.

7. The actions related to air are uniting, changing of places, taking, hearing and breathing.

8. The actions related to fire are the feeling of touch, sight, taste, view and sound. These also depend on water.

9. The actions related to earth are talking, giving, taking, going and coming.

10. The actions of the Prana Thanmathra (Symbolic soul) are the organs for doing work and organs for earning wisdom.

11. Egoism is limited to mind, brain and the will to do.

12. The micro aspects of the symbolic soul (Prana Thanmathra) are giving place, scattering, seeing, uniting and being firm.

These twelve are the aspects of philosophy, early concept of godliness and early concept of physical existence. Chandra, Brahma, directions, air, sun, Varuna, Aswini devas (divine doctors), Fire, Indra (king of devas), Upendra, Prajapathi and Yama (God of death) are the Gods of the organs and senses who travel like soul in these twelve aspects. 1

[Slokas 2 & 3 are not available.]

From there, Earth came in to existence, embracing one thing with the other, pervading by criss-cross connections, step by step as the result of Pancha Boothas (Five aspects of earth, air, water, fire and ether) gained life. 4

In that earth, plants, climbers, food and four types of pindas (body centers) arose. The root sections of the body are taste, blood, flesh, fat, bones, nerves and semen. 5

Some Pindas arose because of their own interaction and some Pindas arose because of the interaction of Pancha Boothas. In this that Pinda called “Anna Mayam (area of food)” is in the area of the belly. 6

In the middle of this body is the heart which is like the lotus flower with its stalk. The Gods for management, egoism and action are in there. 7

The seed for this is the thamo guna (baser qualities) pinda which is passion oriented and solidified (does not move or change). This is the world with its varied nature and is situated in the neck. 8

The inside looking happy Athma (soul) is on the summit of the head and is situated in the Parama Patha place. This is in its earth like form and shines with great strength. 9

The state of awakening is every where. The state of dream is also is there in the state of wakefulness.

The state of sleep and the state of higher knowledge (Thuriya) is not there in other states. 10

Similar to the tastes pervading in all parts of a good fruit, Shiva Shakthi pervades every where. 11

Similarly all kosas (area of the body) are within Annamaya Kosa. Similar to the kosam is the soul. Similar to the soul is Shiva. 12

The living being is one with feelings. Shiva is one without feelings. The kosas are the places of feelings of living being. And they give rise to states of existence. 13

Similar to the fact that churning of water produces ripples and foam, by churning of mind several painful thoughts are produced. 14

By performing duties, the living being, becomes the slave to those duties. By forsaking them, he attains peace. He becomes one, who sees the world in southern path. 15

The living being with egoism and self esteem is indeed Sadashiva. The living being attains that type of illusion because of his company with the ignorant soul. 16

He attains hundreds of yonis (female reproductive organ) and stays there because of familiarity. Like a fish traveling in between the banks of a river, he keeps on traveling till he attains salvation. 17

Over passage of time due to the wisdom of the knowledge of the soul, he turns on the northern path and step by step goes up. 18

When he is able to send his soul power to his head and does permanent practice of Yoga, he gets wisdom. Because of wisdom, his yoga acts. 19

Once Yoga and wisdom become stable in him, he becomes a yogi. He will never be destroyed. He would see Lord Shiva in his deficiencies and will not see deficiencies in Lord Shiva. 20

To get results of yoga, it has to be done without any other thought. Without practice you will not succeed in Yoga or wisdom. The yogi will not get the results out of these also. 21

So by practice of yoga, mind and soul should be controlled. The Yogi should cut off the problems in yoga similar to the cutting of material with a sharp knife. 22

[Slokas 23 to 145 are not available.]

With pure knowledge of Athma (soul) the sensory organs should be controlled. We should always meditate on Para Vasudeva who is the greatest soul. 146

Kaivalya (salvation) is attained by the selected and sorted form of meditation on shape and form. If a yogi is able to meditate at least for a small time on Vasudeva while he is in the Kumbhaka stage of Pranayama, the sins that he has done in seven births will be destroyed. You have to understand that the portion from belly to the heart is the wakeful action. In the neck, there exists the action of the dream. In between the Jaws exists the sleep. Thuriya exists in between the eyelids. That action of synthesis with Parabrahmam which is much above thuriya exists in the skull top middle called Brahmarandra. There in the foremost thuriya corner of thuriya , the soul is called Vishnu. When one meditates in the very pure Paramakasa (great ether), he should meditate on that Adhokshaja who shines for ever with the light of crores of Suns, as sitting in the lotus of his own heart. Otherwise he has to meditate on that Viswa Roopi(One who is of the form of universe), who has several forms, several faces, several planks with several armaments, several eyes which shine like crores of suns, several colours and who is peaceful and also very angry. All the mental preoccupations of a Yogi who meditates in such a manner will be completely calmed down. That Yogi who meditates on that indestructible matter which shines like God's grace in the center of the heart, on that ultimate truth which is beyond Thuriya, on that Sun who is the form of wisdom which is immeasurable and unending, on that being who is like a shining lamp in a windless place and on that being who is like the shine of unprocessed gems, would have salvation in his grip. 147-157

To that Yogi who is able to see and experience the shine of that deva with the universal macro or micro form or atleast a small portion of him in his lotus like heart, all the occult powers like Anima would be very much within his reach. 158-159

One has to understand that the realization of the universal truth of the unity of Jeevathma (Soul) and Paramathma (God) which is that "I am Brhamam and Brahmam is me" is he real state of Samadhi (an enlightened state of meditation where all the thought process are unified with God). That man becomes Brahmam and he does not take another birth. 160-161

The one who examines such principles with detachment becomes like a fire without wood and becomes one with himself. 162

Since his mind and soul does not have anything to catch hold of (get attached), he becomes stable in the form of wisdom, and his soul melts like a piece of salt and he merges in to the sea of pure consciousness. 163

He sees the word which is a thing of passion and magic like a dream. In the natural state that Yogi stands without changing as him to himself and attains the nude form in his sleep and attains salvation. 164

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Trisikhi-Brahmanopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Sita Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

1. The gods, indeed, said to Prajapati: who is Sita ? What is Her form ? Then Prajapati replied: She is Sita:
2. Being the first cause Sita is known as Prakriti; of Pranava, too, She is cause
And so is named Prakriti.
3. Maya in very essence,
Is Sita, of three letters formed.
Called Vishnu, the world-seed,
And Maya, too, is the letter i.
4. The letter sa denotes truth immortal;
Achievement; Siva with his consort.
Ta denotes the Queen of Speech
United with Brahman, the Deliverer.
5. The Goddess who is the great Illusion, whose form is unmanifest, and who is denoted by ‘i’ becomes manifest, beauteous as the moon, faultless of limb, decked with ornamental garlands, pearls and other adornments.
6. At first, at the time of Vedic studies, She is essentially the clear Vedic speech. Secondly, on earth, at the tip of the plough She springs up, who, as the bliss of Brahman-realization, is ever present. Thirdly, as denoted by ‘i’ She becomes unmanifest. So is She Sita. Thus they explain in the text of the Saunakas.

7. By Srirama’s (light of total liberation) presence enabled
The universe She sustains;
All embodied beings
She brings forth, sustains and withdraws.

8. Sita must be known;
She is the first cause;
As Om is She that cause,
Declare the Brahman-knowers.

9. Now, therefore, inquiry into Brahman.

10. She here is all the Vedas; all the gods; all the worlds; all renown; all virtue; all ground, effect and cause; the great Beauty of the Lord of gods. She has a form which is different and yet the same. She is the essence of the intelligent and the inert. She is all, from Brahma to stocks and stones. She is embodied, owing to distinctions of attributes and activities. She assumes the forms of gods, sages, men and Gandharvas; of demons, fiends, spirits, ghosts, goblins, etc.; and of the elements, sense-organs, mind and the vital breaths.

11. That divine Being is threefold through Her power, namely the power of desire, the power of action, and the power of knowledge.

12. The power of desire is threefold: Sri, Bhumi and Nila. Auspiciousness is the form (of Sri); the power (of holiness) is the form (of Bhumi); the sun, the moon, and the fire are the forms (of Nila).

13. As the moon (She) is the mistress of the herbs; She is the tree of plenty, flowers, fruits, creepers and bowers; the mistress of medicinal plants and physicians; She is the divine draught of immortality, yielding the fruit of massive splendour. She satisfies the gods with ambrosia and the animals with grass on which, respectively, the gods and the animals live.

14. She illumines all worlds, day and night, in the garb of the sun, etc. As determinations of time, such as the smallest moment, hour, day with its eight divisions, day of the week, and night, as also the fortnight, month, season, six months, and year and as the prescriber of the term of human life as a hundred years, She manifests herself and is known as Delay and Speed. Thus wheel-like, She revolves as the wheel of Time, the wheel of Universe, etc.; comprising (all dimensions of time) from the moment up to fifty years of Brahma’s life. All the luminous temporal divisions are the specific determinations of this very Time, the container of all.

15. As fire is the food and drink of living beings, their hunger and thirst. As regards the gods, She has the form of sacrifice. As regards the herbs in the forest, She is the coolness and the warmth. Both inside and outside the fuel She dwells, eternal and fleeting.

16. The Goddess Sri assumes a threefold form in conformity with the Lord’s will for the protection of the world. That She is styled Sri and Lakshmi is known.

17. The Goddess Bhu is the Earth comprising the seven islands and the seas; the container and the contents of the fourteen worlds such as bhu, etc.; and her essence is Pranava.

18. Nila is festooned with lightnings. To nourish all herbs and living beings, She assumes all forms.

19. At the root of all the worlds, She assumes the form of Water, being known as ‘consisting of frogs’ and supporting the worlds.

20. The real form of the power of action (is as follows): From Hari’s mouth (proceeds) sound; from this sound ‘the drop’; thence, the syllable Om; from this syllable, distinctively proceeds the mount Rama, the abode of the Vaikhanasas. On that mount flourish manifold branches representing action and knowledge.

21. The primal science of
Vedas three, reveals all sense;

They are the ‘three’, comprising
Ric, Yajus and Saman.
22. Based on a fact, fourfold, they are called
The Ric, Yajus, Saman, Atharvan.
23. The ‘three’ are so famed as they Concern the four priests, form texts
Of triple sense, lingas, and much else.
The Atharvan is, in essence,
Ric, Yajus and Saman, too.
24. Yet separated it is, being
In the main, of magic sense.
The Rig-Veda does flourish
In branches twenty-one.
25. The Yajus is well known
In nine and hundred various schools.
Saman has a thousand branches;
The Atharvan but forty.
26. The Vaikhanasa philosophy
With intuition is concerned;
With Vaikhanasa it is that
Sages ever engage themselves.
27. Rituals, Grammar, Phonetics, Etymology, Astronomy and Metre are the six limbs.
28. The minor limbs are Vedanta
And Mimamsa, the treatise on Nyaya and Puranas upheld
By the knowers of the Law; so also
Of meditation (upasana) the chapters;
29. Ethics, of the Vedic lore all branches,
Tradition, Law upheld by Rishis great;
History and legend – these the Upangas.
30. The five minor Vedas are Architecture and Archery,
Music, Medicine and Occult Thought (daivika).
31. The Discipline, the Rites, the Gloss, the Lore,
Conquest supreme of breath – these twenty-one
Are renowned as self-evident.
32. The word of Vishnu at first sprang forth
From Vaikhanasa as the Vedas three.
33. As of old from sage Vaikhanasa
The ‘three’ sprang forth –
Hear all from me.
The eternal Brahmic form is power to act.
34. The manifest power is but the memory of the Lord; its essence is manifestation and evolution, restriction and promotion, subsidence and upflaring. It is the cause of the patent and the latent, possessing all feet, limbs, faces, colours. It is at once different and non-different (from the Lord); the unfailing consort of the Lord, perpetually dependent on Him. She becomes patent and latent, and is called the manifest power because She is competent to bring about, through the (mere) closing and opening (of Her eye) creation, sustentation and retraction, suppression and promotion.
35. The power of desire is threefold. At the time of retraction, for the sake of rest, when She rests on the right side of the Lord’s chest, in the shape of Srivatsa, She is the power of Yoga.

36. The form of the Power of enjoyment is enjoyment. Associated with the Tree of Plenty, the wish-granting Cow, the wish-fulfilling Gem, and the nine Treasures such as the (precious) Conch and Lotus, She is impelled by the devotion of the worshipper, whether sought or unsought (to yield enjoyments) as a result of rites, compulsory or optional, like the Agnihotra; or as a result of (the eight ‘limbs’ of Yoga practice, namely) restraint, discipline, posture, control of breath, withdrawal, attention, meditation and contemplation; or as a result of worship of the Lord’s image in pinnacled temples; or as a result of ceremonial baths, etc.; or of the worship of manes, etc.; or as a result of giving food, drink, etc., for pleasing the Lord. (All this) is done (through the Power of enjoyment).
37. Now the Power of heroism, four-armed, (is described). She indicates by her gestures fearlessness and (the granting of) boons; She bears the lotus; crowned and bedecked, She is surrounded by all the gods; is bathed, at the foot of the Tree of Plenty, by four elephants, in ambrosial waters from jewelled pots. All divinities, Brahma and others, render obeisance to Her. She is vested with the eight miraculous powers such as becoming atomic in proportion; She is lauded by the wish-granting cow who is before Her; she is extolled by the Vedas, the Shastras, etc. Celestial nymphs like Jaya wait upon Her. The luminaries – the sun and the moon – shed splendour on Her. Tumburu, Narada and others sing of Her glory. The full moon and new moon days hold an umbrella over Her; two delightful beings hold the whisks. Svaha and Svadha fan Her. Bhrigu and other supernatural beings adore Her. The Goddess Lakshmi is seated on a divine Lion-Throne in the lotus posture, effectuating all causes and effects. The steady (image of) the Lord’s idea of differentiation, She beautifies. With tranquil eyes, adored by all the gods, She is known as the Beauty of Heroism. This is the Secret.

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

Yoga Chudamani Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I would tell Yoga Chudamani Upanishad with a view to do good to yogis. This is being appreciated by those elders who know Yoga well. This is secret and is capable of giving the post of salvation. 1

[Slokas 2-29 are not available.]

The Jeevatma (the soul of the physical individual) is under the control of prana which goes up and down as well as apana. Apana pulls Prana. Prana pulls Apana. He who knows and realizes this mutual pull which is pulling to the top and bottom, understands yoga. 30

It goes outside with the sound “ha” and goes again inside with the sound “sa”. The beings keeping on chanting this mantra as “Hamsa”, “Hamsa”. 31

The beings always keep on chanting this mantra day and night twenty one thousand and one hundred times. 32

This mantra which is called “Ajapa Gayatri” would give salvation to all yogis. Just a thought of this mantra, would help one get rid of all sins. 33

There are no practices as holy as this, no chanting which is equivalent to this, and no wisdom equivalent to this and in future also this is not likely to be there. 34

This Ajapa Gayatri which rises from the Kundalani supports the soul. This is the greatest among the sciences of the soul. He who knows this will know the Vedas. 35

The Kundalani power which is above the mooladhara, in its eight studded form would always be covering the mouth of Sushumna which is the gate of Brahman. 36

The Kudalani Parameshwari (goddess of the universe) who should go through the disease less gate of Brahma, closes this gate with her mouth and sleeps. 37

Because of the heat generated by the practice of yoga, because of the speed of wind, and because of her mental power, she stands up and using her needle shaped body, she would go up through the Sushumna Nadi. 38

Similar to opening the doors of the house by using the key, the yogi should open the gate to salvation using Kundalini. 39

Para Brahman is Om, is that which exists, which is clean, which is full of wisdom, which does not have any draw backs, which is without stains, which cannot be described, which does not have beginning or end, which is one and only one, which is thuriya, which exists in things of past, present and future and which will never get divided at any time. From that Para Brahman emerges Para Shakthi (the female aspect). That is the soul which is self resplendent. From that soul arose the ether. From ether arose wind. From wind arose fire. From fire arose water and from water arose the earth. These five elements are ruled by the five Godheads viz. Sadasiva, Easwara, Rudra, Vishnu and Brahma. Among them Brahma, Vishnu and Rudra would do the job of creation, upkeep and destruction. Brahma is Rajasic, Vishnu Sathvic and Rudra Thamasic. They are thus with three different properties. 72.1

Among devas Brahma arose first. Among those who arose first, Brahma became the creator, Vishnu the one who upkeeps and Lord Rudra, the destroyer. Among them from Brahma arose worlds, devas, men and those in between them. From him arose those things which do not move. In case of men, the body is the unified form of Pancha Boothas (five elements). The organs of wisdom, (jnanendriyas), the organs of action (karmendriyas), those activities related to wisdom, the five body airs (prana, apana etc) are taught by the macro portion of mind, intellect, decision making power and the feeling of self and are called macro body (Sthoola sareeram). The organs of wisdom, the organs of action, things related to wisdom, the five body airs and the micro aspect of mind and intellect are called Linga sareera. The body has three types of properties. Thus all people have three bodies. There are four states of the body viz wakeful state, dream, sleep and Thuriya (exalted spiritual state). Those purushas who reside in our body and control these states are Viswa, Thaijasa, Pragna and Atma. Viswa will always have macro experiences. Different from that is Thaijasa who has micro experiences. Pragna has pleasant experiences. Athma is a witness to all these. 72

The Atma which is of the form of “Om”, will be in all beings and at the time of passion, downward looking. At all other times it would be pretty and downward face. 73

In the three letters Aa, Uu and Ma, three Vedas, three worlds, three characteristics, three letters and three sounds shine. Thus Pranava shines. When you are awake, the letter Aa exists in the eyes of all beings, when you are dreaming the letter Uu exists in the neck of all beings and the letter Ma exists in the heart of all beings when they are asleep. 74

The letter Aa exists in the egg state as Viswa and Pinda state as Virat Purusha. The Letter Uu exists as Thaijasa and Hiranya Garbha in the micro state. The letter Ma exists as the causal state and as Pragna. The letter Aa has Rajasa qualities is red and its form is that of Lord Brahma. The letter Uu has Sathvika qualities and its form is that of white Vishnu. The letter Ma has Thamasic qualities and its form is that of black Rudra. Brahma took birth from Pranava. Vishnu also came out of it. Rudra also came out of it. Pranava is the Para Brahma (ultimate god). Brahma merges with the letter Aa. Vishnu merges with letter Uu and Rudra merges with the letter Ma. In people with wisdom, Pranava would be upward looking and among ignorant people Pranava would be looking downward. 75-78

Pranava exists like this. The one who knows this knows the Vedas. In the anahatha sound form, it grows upwards in case of wise people. 79

The sound Pranava is continuous like the flow of oil, and like the long sound of the bell. Its peak is Brahman. 80

That peak would be lit so brilliantly, that it cannot be described by words. The great savants find it out using their sharp intellect. The one who knows that, is considered as one who knows Vedas. 81

The “Hamsa (swan) mantra”, shines in the middle of the two eyes. The letter Sa is known as Kechari which means “that which travels in the sky”. It has been decided that it is the word “Twam (you)” in the famous Vedic saying, “Tat Tvam Asi (You are That)”. 82

It has been decided that the letter “Ha” which is the Lord of all universe is the word “Tat (that)” in the above Vedic saying. We have to meditate that the letter “Sa” as the soul traveling between birth and death and the letter “Ha” as the stable God. 83

The living being is tied up by his organs but Paramatma is not so tied. The living being is egoistic and the soul is not tied by egoism and is independent. 84

The ethereal light which is “om” is that Athma in whose aspects stand the three worlds Bhu, Bhuva and Suva and also the place where three gods moon, Sun and fire reside. 85

The ethereal light which is “Om”, is that Atma in whose aspects stand “work” which is the power of Brahma,“desire” which is the power of Rudra and “wisdom” which is the power of Vishnu. 86

Because Om is the ethereal light, it has to be pronounced by words, practiced by the body and meditated upon by the mind. 87

The one who goes on chanting Pranava whether he is clean or unclean will not be attached to the sins he does, similar to the lotus leaf which never gets wet. 88

[Slokas 89-102 are not available.]

Twelve repetitions of “Om” which is called is a pooraka followed by sixteen repetitions of “Om” which is called is the Kumbhaka and then ten repetitions of “Om” which is called Rechaka, is called Pranayama. 103

The basic rule for chanting Pranayama is at least 12 times and is termed as poor, twice that amount (24) is medium and thrice that (36) is Uthama (best). 104

In the lowest, there would be sweating, in the medium there would be trembling and in Uthama there is attainment of the objective. After that control the breath. 105

The Yogi should first salute his teacher and Lord Shiva and sit in the lotus posture, concentrate his sight on the edge of the nose and practice pranayama alone. 106

By posture one avoids diseases, by pranayama one avoids sins and by Pratyahara (see 120 below for explanation) he controls his mental activity. 109

By beliefs, the mind becomes strong and Samadhi gives the being wonderful knowledge and he attains salvation after destroying sinful and holy actions. 110

After seeing the Param Jyothi which is spread everywhere, in Samadhi duties and action neither come nor goes. 113

[Slokas 114-115 are not available.]

If we stand together with Pranayama, all diseases would be destroyed. All diseases appear only to those who are not able to do Pranayama. 116

[Slokas 117-119 are not available.]

Pratyahara is the state where sensory organs like the eye do not concern themselves with things outside but turn themselves inwards. 120

Similar to the Sun taking his rays inwards at the third period of dusk, the yogi who is in the third stage would control his mind. 121

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,

Om ! Let there be Peace in me !

Nirvana Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Now we shall expound the Nirvanopanishad.
2. The Paramahamsa: I am He.
3. The mendicant monks who wear marks of renunciation inwardly. [They are the ascetics entitled to study this Upanishad.]
4. (They are) the protectors of the field in which I-ness (indicative of the separateness of the Self) is destroyed.
5. Their settled conclusion is partless like ether.
6. (Their heart) is the river of immortal waves.
7. (Their heart) is imperishable and unconditioned.

10. Their activity is free of family (and other) ties.
11. Their knowledge is not isolated.
12. (They study and/or teach) the higher scripture.
13. (They constitute) the propless monastic centre.
14. Their dedication (is to reveal Brahman) to a group (of worthy disciples).
15. The instruction is the non-existence (of things other than Brahman).
16. This dedication brings joy and purification (to the disciples).
17. Their sight is (like) seeing the twelve suns.
18. Discrimination (of the real from the unreal) is (their) protection.
19. Their compassion aloe is the sport.
20. (They wear) the garland of bliss.
21. In the cave of one seat (is) their audience of happiness, free from restrictions of yoga-postures.

23. Their conduct is in consonance with the realization of the oneness of the Self and Brahman (Hamsa).
24. They demonstrate to disciples (by their conduct) that Brahman is present in all beings.
25. True conviction is their patched garment. Non-alignment is their loin-cloth. Reflection (of the truths of the Vedanta) is their (emblematic-)staff. The vision of Brahman (as non-different from the Self) is their yoga-cloth. Sandals (consist in avoiding contact with worldly) wealth. Activity (for bare living) at the behest of others. Their bondage (is only in the desire to direct) the Kundalini (into the Susumna). Liberated while alive, as they are freed from denial of the highest (Brahman). The oneness with Siva is their sleep. True knowledge (by denying joy in Avidya) or the Khechari-mudra is their supreme bliss.
26. The (bliss of) Brahman is free from the (three) qualities (Sattva, Rajas and Tamas).
27. (Brahman) is realized by discrimination (of the real from the unreal) (and) it is beyond the reach of the mind and speech.
28. The phenomenal world is impermanent as it is produced (from Brahman which alone is real); it is similar to a world seen in a dream and an elephant in the sky (i.e. illusory): similarly the cluster of things such as the body is perceived by a network of a multitude of delusions and it is fancied to exist as a serpent in a rope (due to imperfect knowledge).
29. The (worship of) gods named Vishnu, Brahma and a hundred others culminates (in Brahman).
30. The goad is the path.
31. (The path) is not void, only conventional.

39. Bliss is the alms that he enjoys.
40. Residence even in the great cemetery is as in a pleasure garden.
41. A solitary place is the monastery.
42. Complete quiescence of the mind is the practice of Brahmavidya.
43. His movement is to unmani state.
44. His pure body is the propless seat of dignity.
45. His activity is the bliss of the waves of immortality.
46. The ether of consciousness is the great established conclusion.
47. Instruction in the emancipating mantra results in efficiency of bodily limbs and mind for possessing divine power in practising tranquillity, self-restraint, etc., and in the realization of the oneness of the (so-called) higher and lower Self.

48. The presiding deity (of the Taraka) is the everlasting bliss of non-duality.
49. The voluntary religious observance is the restraint of the inner senses.
50. Renouncing (tyaga) is the giving up of fear, delusion, sorrow and anger.
51. (Renouncing results is) the enjoyment of bliss in the identity of the higher and lower (self).
52. Unrestrainedness is pure power.
53. When the reality of Brahman shines in the self there is the annihilation of the phenomenal world which is enveloped by the power of Shiva (Maya); similarly the burning of the existence or non-existence of the aggregate of the causal, subtle and gross bodies.
54. He realizes Brahman as the prop of the ether.
55. The auspicious fourth state is the sacred thread; the tuft (too) consists of that.
56. (To him) the created world consists of consciousness; (so also) the immovable and the group of various beings.
57. Uprooting (the effect of) karman is (mere) talk; in the cemetery (Self-Brahman), illusion, 'mine-ness' and ego have been burnt.
58. (The realized Parivrajaka) has his body intact.
59. Meditation on the true form which is beyond the three attributes (of Sattva, Rajas and Tamas); (even this) condition (of distinction 'I am Brahman') is a delusion which shall be annihilated The burning of the attitude of passion, etc., (ought to be done). The loin cloth ought to be rough and tight (so that the vital energy moves upward in perpetual celibacy). Deer-skin garment for long (and later to be unclad). The unstruck mantra (the Om in the fourth state turiya) is practised by refraining from (worldly) action. Conducting himself freely (as he has reached a stage which is beyond good and bad, he realizes) his true nature which is liberation.
60. His conduct (of serving a primary Avadhuta) as a ship (to cross the ocean of worldly life and) reach the transcendent Brahman; practising celibacy till tranquillity is attained; getting instruction in the stage of a celibate student, or learning (the truth) in the stage of a dweller in the forest (Vanaprastha) he (embraces) renunciation wherein all (true) knowledge is established; at the end he becomes of the form of the indivisible Brahman, the eternal, the annihilator of all doubts.
61. This Nirvanopanishad (the secret doctrine leading to final beatitude) shall not be imparted to one other than a disciple or a son. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Nirvanopanishad, as contained in the Rig-Veda.

Mandala Brahmana Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

BRAHMANA - I

1. OM. The great Muni Yajnavalkya went to Aditya-Loka (the sun's world) and saluting him (the Purusha of the Sun) said: "O Revered Sir, describe to me the Atman-Tattva (the Tattva or Truth of Atman)." (To which) Narayana (viz., the Purusha of the sun) replied: "I shall describe the eight-fold Yoga together with Jnana. The conquering of cold and heat as well as hunger and sleep, the preserving of (sweet) patience and unruffledness ever and the restraining of the organs (from sensual objects) – all these come under (or are) Yama. Devotion to one's Guru, love of the true path, enjoyment of objects producing happiness, internal satisfaction, freedom from association, living in a retired place, the controlling of the Manas and the not longing after the fruits of actions and a state of Vairagya – all these constitute Niyama. The sitting in any posture pleasant to one and clothed in tatters (or bark) is prescribed for Asana (posture). Inspiration, restraint of breath and expiration, which have respectively 16, 64 and 32 (Matras) constitute Pranayama (restraint of breath). The restraining of the mind from the objects of senses is Pratyahara (subjugation of the senses). The contemplation of the oneness of consciousness in all objects is Dhyana. The mind having been drawn away from the objects of the senses, the fixing of the Chaitanya (consciousness) (on one alone) is Dharana. The forgetting of oneself in Dhyana is Samadhi. He who thus knows the eight subtle parts of Yoga attains salvation.
2. The body has five stains (viz.,) passion, anger, out-breathing, fear and sleep. The removal of these can be affected respectively by absence of Sankalpa, forgiveness, moderate food, carefulness and a spiritual sight of Tattvas. In order to cross the ocean of Samsara where sleep and fear are the serpents, injury, etc., are the waves, Trishna (thirst) is the whirlpool and wife is the mire, one should adhere to the subtle path and overstepping Tattva and other Gunas should look out for Taraka. Taraka is Brahman which being in the middle of the two eyebrows, is of the nature of the spiritual effulgence of Sachchidananda. The (spiritual) seeing through the three Lakshyas (or the three kinds of introvision) is the means to It (Brahman). Susumna which is from the Muladhara to Brahmarandhra has the radiance of the sun. In the centre of it, is Kundalini shining like Crores of lightning and subtle as the thread in the lotus-stalk. Tamas is destroyed there. Through seeing it, all sins are destroyed. When the two ears are closed by the tips of the forefingers, a Phutkara (or booming) sound is heard. When the mind is fixed on it, it sees a blue light between the eyes as also in the heart. (This is Antar-Lakshya or internal introvision). In the Bahir-Lakshya (or external introvision) one sees in order before his nose at distance of 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 digits, the space of blue colour, then a colour resembling Shyama (indigo-black) and then shining as Rakta (red) wave and then with the two Pita (yellow and orange red) colours. Then he is a Yogin. When one looks at the external space, moving the eyes and sees streaks of light at the corners of his eyes, then his vision can be made steady. When one sees Jyotis (spiritual light) above his head 12 digits in length, then he attains the state of nectar. In the Madhya-Lakshya (or the middle one), one sees the variegated colours of the morning as if the sun, the moon and the fire had joined together in the Akasa that is without them. Then he comes to have their nature (of light). Through practice, he becomes one with Akasa, devoid of all Gunas and peculiarities. At first Akasa with its shining stars becomes to him Para-Akasa as dark as Tamas itself and he becomes one with Para-Akasa shining with stars and deep as Tamas. (Then) he becomes one with Maha-Akasa resplendent (as) with the fire of the deluge. Then he becomes one with Tattva-Akasa, lighted with the brightness which is the highest and the best of all. Then he becomes one with Surya-Akasa (Sun-Akasa) brightened by a Crore of suns. By practising thus, he becomes one with them. He who knows them becomes thus.

3. Know that Yoga is twofold through its division into the Purva (earlier) and the Uttara (later). The earlier is Taraka and the later is Amanaska (the mindless). Taraka is divided into Murti (with limitation) and Amurti (without limitation). That is Murti Taraka which goes to the end of the senses (or exist till the senses are conquered). That is Amurti Taraka which goes beyond the two eyebrows (above the senses). Both these should be performed through Manas. Antar-Drishti (internal vision) associated with manas comes to aid Taraka. Tejas (spiritual light) appears in the hole between the two eyebrows. This Taraka is the earlier one. The later is Amanaska. The great Jyotis (light) is above the root of the palate. By seeing it, one gets the Siddhis Anima, etc. Sambhavi-Mudra occurs when the Lakshya (spiritual vision) is internal while the (physical) eyes are seeing externally without winking. This is the great science which is concealed in all the Tantras. When this is known, one does not stay in Samsara. Its worship (or practice) gives salvation. Antar-Lakshya is of the nature of Jala-Jyotis (or water-Jyotis). It is known by the great Rishis and is invisible both to the internal and external senses.

4. Sahasrara (viz., the thousand-petalled lotus of the pineal gland) Jala-Jyotis is the Antar-Lakshya. Some say the form of Purusha in the cave of Buddhi beautiful in all its parts is Antar-Lakshya. Some again say that the all-quiescent Nilakantha accompanied by Uma (his wife) and having five months and latent in the midst of the sphere in the brain is Antar-Lakshya. Whilst others say that the Purusha of the dimension of a thumb is Antar-Lakshya. A few again say Antar-Lakshya is the One Self made supreme through introvision in the state of a Jivanmukta. All the different statements above made pertain to Atman alone. He alone is a Brahma-Nishtha who sees that the above Lakshya is the pure Atman. The Jiva which is the twenty-fifth Tattva, having abandoned the twenty-four Tattvas, becomes a Jivanmukta through the conviction that the twenty-sixth Tattva (viz.,) Paramatman is 'I' alone. Becoming one with Antar-Lakshya (Brahman) in the emancipated state by means of Antar-Lakshya (introvision), Jiva becomes one with the partless sphere of Param-Akasa.

Thus ends the first Brahmana.

BRAHMANA - II

1. Then Yajnavalkya asked the Purusha in the sphere of the sun: "O Lord, Antar-Lakshya has been described many times, but it has never been understood by me (clearly). Pray describe it to me". He replied: "It is the source of the five elements, has the lustre of many (streaks of) lightning and has four seats having (or rising from) 'That' (Brahman). In its midst, there arises the manifestation of Tattva. It is very hidden and Unmanifested. It can be known (only) by one who has got into the boat of Jnana. It is the object of both Bahir and Antar (external and internal) Lakshyas. In its midst is absorbed the whole world. It is the vast partless universe beyond Nada, Bindu and Kala. Above it (viz., the sphere of Agni) is the sphere of the sun; in its midst is the sphere of the nectary moon; in its midst is the sphere of the partless Brahma-Tejas (or the spiritual effulgence of Brahman). It has the brightness of Sukla (white light) like the ray of lightning. It alone has the characteristic of Sambhavi. In seeing this there are three kinds of Drishti (sight), viz., Ama (the new moon), Pratipat (the first day of lunar fortnight) and Purnima (the full moon). The sight of Ama is the one (seen) with closed eyes. That with half opened eyes is Pratipat; while that with fully opened eyes is Purnima. Of these, the practice of Purnima should be resorted to. Its Lakshya (or aim) is the tip of the nose. Then is seen a deep darkness at the root of the palate. By practising thus, a Jyotis (light) of the form of an endless sphere is seen. This alone is Brahman, the Sachchidananda. When the mind is absorbed in bliss thus naturally produced, then does Sambhavi takes place. She (Sambhavi) alone is called Khechari. By practising it (viz., the Mudra), a man obtains firmness of mind. Through it, he obtains firmness of Vayu. The following are the signs: first it is seen like a star; then a reflecting (or dazzling) diamond; then the sphere of full moon; then the sphere of the brightness of nine gems; then the sphere of the midday sun; then the sphere of the flame of Agni (fire); all these are seen in order.

2. (Thus much for the light in Purva or first stage.) Then there is the light in the western direction (in the Uttara or second stage). Then the lustres of crystal, smoke, Bindu, Nada, Kala, star, firefly, lamp, eye, gold and nine gems, etc., are seen. This alone is the form of Pranava. Having united Prana and Apana and holding the breath in Kumbhaka, one should fix his concentration at the tip of his nose and making Shanmukhi with the fingers of both his hands, one hears the sound of Pranava (Om) in which Manas becomes absorbed. Such a man has not even the touch of Karma. The karma of (Sandhya-Vandana or the daily prayers) is verily performed at the rising or setting of the sun. As there is no rising or setting (but only the ever shining) of the sun of Chit (the higher consciousness) in the heart of a man who knows thus, he has no Karma to perform. Rising above (the conception of) day and night through the annihilation of sound and time, he becomes one with Brahman through the all-full Jnana and the attaining of the state of Unmani (the state above Manas). Through the state of Unmani, he becomes Amanaska (or without Manas).

Not being troubled by any thoughts (of the world) then constitutes the Dhyana. The abandoning of all Karmas constitutes Avahana (invocation of god). Being firm in the unshaken (spiritual) wisdom constitutes Asana (posture). Being in the state of Unmani constitutes the Padya (offering of water for washing the feet of god). Preserving the state of Amanaska (when Manas is offered as sacrifice) constitutes the Arghya (offering of water as oblation generally). Being in state of eternal brightness and shoreless nectar constitutes Snana (bathing). The contemplation of Atman as present in all constitutes (the application to the idol of) Sandal. The remaining in the real state of the Drik (spiritual eye) is (the worshipping with) Akshata (non-broken rice). The attaining of Chit (consciousness) is (the worshipping with) flower. The real state of Agni (fire) of Chit is the Dhupa (burning of incense). The state of the sun of Chit is the Dipa (light waved before the image). The union of one-self with the nectar of full moon is the Naivedya (offering of food, etc.,). The immobility in that state (of the ego being one with all) is Pradakshina (going round the image). The conception of 'I am He' is Namaskara (prostration). The silence (then) is the Sruti (praise). The all-contentment (or serenity then) is the Visatjana (giving leave to god or finishing worship). (This is the worship of Atman by all raja-Yogins). He who knows this knows all.

3. When the Triputi are thus dispelled, he becomes the Kaivalya Jyotis without Bhava (existence) or Abhava (non-existence), full and motionless, like the ocean without the tides or like the lamp without the wind. He becomes a Brahmavit (knower of Brahman) by cognising the end of the sleeping state even while in the waking state. Though the (same) mind is absorbed in Sushupti as also in Samadhi, there is much difference between them. (in the former case) as the mind is absorbed in Tamas, it does not become the means of salvation, (but) in Samadhi as the modifications of Tamas in him are rooted away, the mind raises itself to the nature of the Partless. All that is no other than Sakshi-Chaitanya (wisdom-consciousness or the Higher Self) into which the absorption of the whole universe takes place, in as much as the universe is but a delusion (or creation) of the mind and is therefore not different from it. Though the universe appears perhaps as outside of the mind, still it is unreal. He who knows Brahman and who is the sole enjoyer of Brahmic bliss which is eternal and has dawned once (for all in him) – that man becomes one with Brahman. He in whom Sankalpa perishes has got Mukti in his hand. Therefore one becomes an emancipated person through the contemplation of Paramatman. Having given up both Bhava and Abhava, one becomes a Jivanmukta by leaving off again and again in all states Jnana (wisdom) and Jneya (object of wisdom), Dhyana (meditation) and Dhyeya (object of meditation), Lakshya (the aim) and Alakshya (non-aim), Drishya (the visible) and Adrishya (the non-visible) and Uha (reasoning) and Apoha (negative reasoning). He who knows this knows all.

4. There are five Avasthas (states): Jagrat (waking), Swapna (dreaming), Sushupti (dreamless sleeping), the Turya (fourth) and Turyatita (that beyond the fourth). The Jiva (ego) that is engaged in the waking state becomes attached to the Pravritti (worldly) path and is the particular of Naraka (hell) as the fruit of sins. He desires Svarga (heaven) as the fruit of his virtuous actions. This very same person becomes (afterwards) indifferent to all these saying, ‘Enough of the births tending to actions, the fruits of which tend to bondage till the end of this mundane existence’. Then he pursues the Nivritti (return) path with a view to attain emancipation. And this person then takes refuge in a spiritual instructor in order to cross this mundane existence. Giving up passion and others, he does only those he is asked to do. Then having acquired the four Sadhanas (means to salvation) he attains, in the middle of the lotus of his heart, the Reality of Antar-Lakshya that is but the Sat of Lord and begins to recognise (or recollect) the bliss of Brahman which he had left (or enjoyed) in his Sushupti state. At last he attains this state of discrimination (thus): ‘I think I am the non-dual One only. I was in Ajnana for some time (in the waking state and called therefore Vishva). I became somehow (or involuntarily) a Taijasa (in the dreaming state) through the reflection (in that state) of the affinities of the forgotten waking state; and now I am a Prajna through the disappearance of those two states. Therefore I am one only. I (appear) as more than one through the differences of state and place. And there is nothing of differentiation of class besides me’. Having expelled even the smack of the difference (of conception) between ‘I’ and ‘That’ through the thought ‘I am the pure and the secondless Brahman’ and having attained the path of salvation which is of the nature of Para-Brahman, after having become one with It through the Dhyana of the sun’s sphere as shining with himself, he becomes fully ripened for getting salvation. Sankalpa and others are the causes of the bondage of the mind; and the mind devoid of these becomes fit for salvation. Possessing such a mind free from all (Sankalpa, etc.,) and withdrawing himself from the outer world of sight and others and so keeping himself out of the odour of the universe, he looks upon all the world as Atman, abandons the conception of ‘I’, thinks ‘I am Brahman’ and considers all these as Atman. Through these, he becomes one who has done his duty.

5. The Yogin is one that has realised Brahman that is all-full beyond Turya. They (the people) extol him as Brahman; and becoming the object of the praise of the whole world, he wanders over different countries. Placing the Bindu in the Akasa of Paramatman and pursuing the path of the partless bliss produced by the pure, secondless, stainless and innate Yoga sleep of Amanaska, he becomes an emancipated person. Then the Yogin becomes immersed in the ocean of bliss. When compared to it, the bliss of Indra and others is very little. He who gets this bliss is the supreme Yogin.

Thus ends the second Brahmana.

BRAHMANA - III

1. The great sage Yajnavalkya then asked the Purusha in the sphere (of the sun): “O Lord, though the nature of Amanaska has been defined (by you), yet I forget it (or do not understand it clearly). Therefore pray explain it again to me.” Accordingly the Purusha said: “This Amanaska is a great secret. By knowing this, one becomes a person who had done his duty. One should look upon it as Paramatman, associated with Sambhavi-Mudra and should know also all those that can be known through a (thorough) cognition of them. Then seeing Para-Brahman in his own Atman as the Lord of all, the immeasurable, the birthless, the auspicious, the supreme Akasa, the supportless, the secondless the only goal of Brahma, Vishnu and Rudra and the cause of all and assuring himself that he who plays in the cave (of the heart) is such a one, he should raise himself above the dualities of existence and non-existence; and knowing the experience of the Unmani of his Mans, he then attains the state of Para-Brahman which is motionless as a lamp in a windless place, having reached the ocean of Brahmic bliss by means of the river of Amanaska-Yoga through the destruction of all his senses. Then he resembles a dry tree. Having lost all (idea of) the universe through the disappearance of growth, sleep, disease, expiration and inspiration, his body being always steady, he comes to have a supreme quiescence, being devoid of the movements of his Manas and becomes absorbed in Paramatman. The destruction of mans takes place after the destruction of the collective senses, like the cow’s udder (that shrivels up) after the milk has been drawn. It is this that is Amanaska. By following this, one becomes always pure and becomes one that has done his duty, having been filled with the partless bliss by means of the path of Taraka-Yoga through the initiation into the sacred sentences ‘I am pa’, 'That Thou Art', ‘I am thou alone’, ‘Thou art I alone’, etc.

2. When his Mans is immersed in the Akasa and he becomes all-full and when he attains the Unmani state, having abandoned all his collective senses, he conquers all sorrows and impurities through the partless bliss, having attained the fruits of Kaivalya, ripened through the collective merits gathered in all his previous lives and thinking always ‘I am Brahman’, becomes one that has done his duty. ‘I am Thou alone. There is no difference between thee and me owing to the fullness of Paramatman’.” Saying thus, he (the Purusha of the sun) embraced his pupil and made him understand it.

Thus ends the third Brahmana.

BRAHMANA - IV

Then Yajnavalkya addressed the Purusha in the sphere (of the sun) thus: “Pray explain to me in detail the nature of the five-fold division of Akasa”. He replied: “There are five: Akasa, Parakasa, Mahakasa, Suryakasa and Paramakasa. That which is of the nature of darkness, both in and out is the first Akasa. That which has the fire of deluge, both in and out is truly Mahakasa. That which has the brightness of the sun, both in and out is Suryakasa. That brightness which is indestructible, all-pervading and of the nature of unrivalled bliss is Paramakasa. By cognising these according to this description, one becomes of their nature.

He is a Yogin only in name, who does not cognise well the nine Chakras, the six Adharas, the three Lakshyas and the five Akasa.

Thus ends the fourth Brahmana.

BRAHMANA - V

“The Manas influenced by worldly objects is liable to bondage; and that (Mans) which is not so influenced by these is fit for salvation. Hence all the world becomes an object of Chitta; whereas the same Chitta when it is supportless and well-ripe in the state of Unmani, becomes worthy of Laya (absorption in Brahman). This absorption you should learn from me who am the all-full. I alone am the cause of the absorption of Manas.

The Mans is within the Jyotis (spiritual light) which again is latent in the spiritual sound which pertains to the Anahata (heart) sound.

That Manas which is the agent of creation, preservation and destruction of the three worlds – that same

Manas becomes absorbed in that which is the highest seat of Vishnu;
Through such an absorption, one gets the pure and secondless state, owing to the absence of difference then. This alone is the highest truth. He who knows this, will wander in the world like a lad or an idiot or a demon or simpleton. By practising this Amanaska, one is ever contented, his urine and faeces become diminished, his food becomes lessened; he becomes strong in body and his limbs are free from disease and sleep. Then his breath and eyes being motionless, he realises Brahman and attains the nature of bliss. That ascetic who is intent on drinking the nectar of Brahman produced by the long practice of this kind of Samadhi, becomes a Paramahamsa (ascetic) or an Avadhuta (naked ascetic). By seeing him, all the world becomes pure and even an illiterate person who serves him is freed from bondage. He (the ascetic) enables the members of his family for one hundred and one generations to cross the ocean of Samsara; and his mother, father, wife and children – all these are similarly freed. Thus is the Upanishad."
Thus ends the fifth Brahmana.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Mandalabrahmana Upanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Dakshinamurti Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Om. In Brahma Vartha (Land of Brahma), under a banyan tree called Maha Bandira, many sages including Sounaka had assembled to perform a Sathra fire sacrifice. They approached sage Markandeya wearing samiths (dried twigs of banyan tree) as gloves and asked him, “How do you manage to be a Chiram Jeevi (One who does not have death) and how are you always in the happy state?" 1

He replied, “This is because of the knowledge of the most secret philosophy of Shiva. This very secret Shiva philosophy by which Shiva who is the Dakshinamurthy, becomes some thing which is not visible to others. He is that God who at the time of final deluge, who keeps every thing else within himself and shines because of the pleasure of his own spirit. The secret mantras about him are as follows: Brahma is the sage, the meter is Gayathri and the god is Dakshinamurhy for this mantra.

First Mantra of 24 letters: After telling “om”, tell “Namo” and then “Bhagavathe Dakshinamurthaye”, then the fourth form of “asmad” viz “Mahyam”, then “medham Pragnam”, then the root of wind “ya”, added with “chcha”, followed by the name of wife of fire God “swaha”. This is the mantra with 24 letters. That is “Om Namo Bhagwathe Dakshinamurthaye Mahyam, Medham Pragnam Prayacha Swaha!” 2

Then Dhyanam (thinking abut the form in the mind, when mantra is chanted). I salute him who is white like a crystal, who holds in his hands, a chain of pearl beads, the pot of nectar which is the form of knowledge, and the mudhra (symbol) of wisdom, who ties himself with a snake, who wears the moon on his head and who wears different type of ornaments. 3

Second Mantra of nine letters: First Say “Om”, then the first vowel with the visarga and in the end ell Panchakshari with visarga in the end, and this gives the Navakshari mantra (nine letters mantra). That is “Om Aam Aa Sivaya Nama Om!” 4

Then Dhyanam. Let the three eyed god who does only good, who has in his three hands, the sign of protection, deer and axe in three hands and fourth hand kept on his knee, who has tied a snake on his body, who shines white like milk, who sits below a banyan tree and who is surrounded by sages like Shuka, gives us pure thoughts. 5

Third Mantra: Add Broom Nama, Maya Bheeja, Vagbhava Bheeja, Dakshinamurthaye and Jnanam dehi Swaha to Om. The mantra would be “Om Broom, Namo Hreem Im Dakshinamurthaye Jnanam Dehi Swaha!” 7

Then Dhyanam: Let the God Dakshinamurthy, who has a white body due to application of holy ash, who wears the crescent moon on his head, who holds in his hands, Jnana mudra (symbol of wisdom), beaded chain, Veena and books, who wears all ornaments, who wears the elephant hide, who resembles the meditating Rama, who sits on the throne of explanation and who is being served by great sages protect us always. 8

We have to see that lamp of wisdom, which burns with renunciation as oil, devotion as wick and which shines in the full vessel of wake up state. 9

In the beginning of creation, Lord Brahma prayed this Dakshinamurthy, and obtained the capacity of creating beings and became very happy. He became blessed after getting what he desired. That Brahma therefore has become a devotee as well as somebody who deserves our devotion. 10

The one who reads this philosophy of Shiva with understanding, would get rid of all his sins. The ones who know this truly will attain salvation. 11

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Sarabha Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I am saluting that primeval God who is the Lord, who is the best, who is the father of the world, who is the greatest among gods, who has created Brahma, who gave all Vedas to Brahma in the beginning, who is the father of Vishnu and other devas, who merits praise, and who at the time of deluge destroys the world. He is the only one who is greater than every body, who is the best and who rules over others. 1-2

That very strong Maheswara took the horrifying form of Sarabha and killed Narasimha who was destroying the world. (Sarabha is the avatar of Shiva which is a combination of eagle, lion and man.) 3

That god with his sharp claws tore, Vishnu who took the form of Narasimha. He who was wearing the hide became Veerabhadra. 4

For every one desiring to get all occult powers, he is the one who should be meditated. Salutations to that Rudra who tore away the fifth head of Brahma. 5

Salutations to that Rudra who kicked Kala the God of death and made him fall and also him who drank the burning Halahala poison. 6

Salutations to that Rudra whose feet were worshipped by the flower of Vishnu’s eyes and who being pleased gave him the holy wheel (Chakra). 7

The one, who has crossed sorrows, sees that God, who is atom within an atom, gross among the gross, who as Atma hidden in the heart of beings and who is beyond physical action, clearly because of these reasons. 8

Salutations to that Rudra who is the greatest god, who holds the Soola (spear) in his hand, who has a big swallowing mouth, who is the Maheswara and whose blessing has good effects. 9

“Chara”, indicates beings which move and because Brahmam shines in the half of their body as Hari, it is called Sarabham. Hey great sage, that can grant salvation directly. 10

Any twice born who reads this, which is called “the great Sastra of Paippalada” or makes others read it, would get rid of births and deaths and attain salvation. The Upanishad tells that he will become similar to Brahma.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Skanda Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1-5. (Skanda says): Great god ! Owing to an iota of your compassion I am the lapseless being (not lapsing from the identity). I am a mass of knowledge ! I am also the Good – what more (can I need) ? Owing to the waxing of the Internal organ, what is not spiritual appears as such; by its warning, this is nothing but pure knowledge or Hari. I am knowledge alone, unborn – what more ? All that is other (than) It is inert and perishes like a dream.
He who discerns the consciousness as distinct from the inert is the unswerving mass of knowledge. Only he is Shiva, Hari, luminary of luminaries, the supreme god, the Brahman – I am that Brahman surely.
6-7. Jiva is Shiva and Shiva is Jiva; when bound by husk it is paddy, unbound of is rice. Thus the bound one is Jiva, released from karma he is eternal Shiva. Bound by ropes, he is Jiva, unbound, Shiva.
8-9. (I bow) to Shiva of the form of Vishnu and Vishnu who is Shiva; Vishnu is Shiva’s heart and Shiva, Vishnu’s. Just as Vishnu is full of Shiva, so is Shiva full of Vishnu. As I see no difference, I am well all my life.
10-15. The body is said to be the temple, the deity Shiva is Jiva; one should throw away the flowers after worship and worship with the sense of identity. Perception of non-difference is knowledge, meditation the objectless mind. The bath is removal of mental impurity; cleanliness is control of the senses. One should drink the nectar of Brahma, take alms for sustenance, live by oneself devoid of duality. Such a person of wisdom will get liberation.
I bow to the supreme, sacred seat of power, to secure well-being and long life. They know themselves to be Brahman, Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, beyond thought, unmanifest, endless, undecaying, by your grace, Nrisimha.

That high place of Vishnu the wise ones always behold like an eye extended in heaven. The sages, praising and awake exalt that supreme status of Vishnu.
This is the doctrine of liberation according to the Vedas.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Tripadvibhuti Mahanarayana Upanishad

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

OM! May Brahman protect us (the Guru and Sishya) both! May he give us both (enough) to enjoy! Efficiency may we both attain! Effective may our study prove! May we not hate (each other) at all!
Om Shanti! Shanti! Shanti!

I am now going to explain the principles behind the “tripat-narayana” philosophy, which, if understood and grasped fully, can cull out and weed all forms of illusory material that surrounds all living in this materialistic world.

“OM! The Supreme Being, known as Narayana, desired to create living beings. And out of such desire (or vow), the living force of breath called “prana” stems out from the Supreme Being; the mind (manas) and all other sense organs come into being. Also created along with are the Sky, the Air, the Light, the Water and the Earth, which bears all the beings. Out of Narayana arises the Brahma, the deity who is the creator of all beings; and also the Indra, who is the ruler of all Devas. Out of Him comes Prajapati, the deity who originates and controls the people, as well as the twelve Adityas, eleven Rudras and eight Vasus (various controlling forces mentioned in the Vedas – each concerning a distinct and different force of nature). It is only out of the same Narayana that all Vedas came into existence. Thus, all forces come out of Narayana and also finally merge into Him.” – Thus proclaims one of the Upanishads in the Rig Veda.

“Narayanan is ever-present and eternal; He is omnipotent and omnipresent; Brahma, Siva, Indra, all (these deities) are (various forms of) Narayana himself. He indeed, is all forms of time, space and direction. All directions of up, down, sides, in and out are His shadow-cast. All that is existing and the ones to come into existence are Narayana Himself. The Single Supreme Being, devoid of any form of impurity, which cannot be expressed in words, and which is the purest of all pure, is Narayanan. There is nothing above Him and no second power than His. That one who understands this as such becomes (merges with) the Narayana Himself; he becomes (merges with) the Narayana Himself (repeated stress)." – Thus asserts one of the Upanishads in the Yajur Veda.

"First utter the syllable "OM"; then utter the words "Namah" and "Narayanaya". These words respectively are made of one, two and five syllables (as in Sanskrit); thus the entire phrase is made of eight syllables or called as "ashta-aksharam" (ashta-eight; aksharam-syllable). That one who chants this eight-syallable mantra of Narayana, lives long without any disrepute or notoriety; he is blessed with rulership, wealth, cattle and servants and ultimately attains the moksha (or the point of no return) also called as salvation; he attains the moksha (repeated with stress)." – Thus states one of the Upanishads in the Sama Veda.

"That blissful Supreme Being (Brahman) which resides within, is of the form of OM or Pranava. The Pranava (OM) is made of A, U and M. That grew in multiples. The blessed one, who recites and chants the syllable OM, he gets rid of all the bindings and bonds of this material world. The one who chants the words "Om Namo Narayanaya" ultimately attains the Vaikunda, the abode of Sri Narayana (or the Heaven – the Home of Salvation). The Vaikunda is not (to be found) anywhere else but in a pure blessed heart, filled with knowledge (spiritual). From there rises an offshoot of light, as bright as a ray of lightning. That ray of light is representative of the various forms of Narayana – called by names such as son of Devaki, the one sweeter than Honey, the one in the form of Brahma, the one with lotus-like eyes, Vishnu (or the savior of all). He resides within all beings, and controls all their activities. He is the form of non-materialistic syllable OM, the Supreme Being." – Thus states one of the Upanishads in the Atharva Veda.

(Having thus known what each of the four Vedas say about Narayana, now let us understand the fruits of chanting His mantra). That one who chants this (mantra) in the morning, destroys all (his) sins committed during the (previous) night. The one who chants this in the evening destroys all sins committed during the day. That one who chants this during mid-day, looking at the Sun, destroys all the five kinds of major and minor sins described as the worst in the Scriptures. He gets all the benefits of having chanted all the Vedas. Ultimately, he merges into and becomes one with the Supreme Being Narayana.

OM! May Brahman protect us (the Guru and Sishya) both! May he give us both (enough) to enjoy!
Efficiency may we both attain! Effective may our study prove! May we not hate (each other) at all!
Om Shanti! Shanti! Shanti!
Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Tripadvibhuti-Mahanarayanopanishad, as contained in the Atharva-Veda.

Advaya Taraka Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

That which helps you cross from the fear of birth, aging and death is called Tharakam (Tharayathi means Crosses). Understanding the appearance of the living being and God as separate entities is due to illusion and then examining and understanding the differences which exist in the world by the method of, “It is not this”, “It is not this” and at last what remains at last is the Adhvaya Brahman (which does not have two forms). To get it we have to practice three aims. 1

In the middle of body there exists the Sushumna Nadi which is as bright as the sun and as cool as the moon. It starts from Mooladhara and goes up to Brahmarandra which is in the top middle of the skull. It is well known that in the middle of it there exists Kundalani which is as bright as crores of suns and as thin as the lotus thread. The man who sees that with his mind’s eye attains salvation by getting rid of all sins. 2

One who sees constant light in the top portion of his, in the middle of his forehead has attained mastery of yoga. 3

Wherever it is, if there is light above the head of a one, he is a yogi. 4

The yoga within is of two types viz Poorva (pre) and Uthara (post). The pre yoga is tharaka and the post yoga is amanaska (beyond mind). 5

That which can be realized by sensory organs is one which has a form. That which is in between the eye lids is without form. Always for understanding the things within, practice with deep application of mind is necessary. In Tharaka yoga, the concepts like Daharakasa are understood only by the mind's eye. The Uthara (post) yoga is without form. It is beyond the mind. 6

Without batting the eye lids to see inside and outside, what we are aiming to see is called Sambhavi Mudra. The place where an expert in that type of mudra lives becomes very holy. 7

By the help of a great teacher one tries to find the Thuriya state hidden in either the sahasrara (thousand petal lotus) or the cave of the heart or end of the 12 Nadis. Ability to see it is only through the help of a great teacher. 8

If the teacher, who is a scholar in Vedas, who is a devotee of Lord Vishnu, who does not have jealousy in his mind, who is a great expert in yoga, who practices Yoga and who is the personification of Yoga blesses us, all the ties imposed by birth will vanish. At that moment all the sins committed in all the births will be destroyed. The Upanishad tells that he will achieve all the Purusharthas. 9

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Rama Rahasya Upanishad

Translated by Dr. Sunder Hattangadi and P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

[This great Upanishad is in Atharvana Veda and is the authoritative source of Lord Rama's worship methods.]

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I salute that Lord Rama, who is the personification of salvation, who is a great king, who is a great man and who destroys all his enemies.

First Chapter

1-2. Great sages like Mudgala, Sandilya, Paingala, Bikshu, Sanaka and Prahlada approached Lord Hanuman, who was a great devotee of Vishnu and asked him,

3-4. “Which is the greatest principle among the four Veda-s, 18 purana-s, 18 Smriti-s, Sastra-s, all knowledge and among the great powers ruled by the Sun and moon?”
5-6. He replied, “Hey, great sages and devotees of Lord Vishnu! Please hear my words which cut of all attachments, the greatest principle among these is the principle of Brahma Taraka (OM). Rama is Para-Brahma and supreme austerity, and Rama is the Supreme Essence and Brahma Taraka.”

7. They all again asked, Lord Hanuman,"Please tell us the angas (aspects) of Lord Rama."

Lord Hanuman told, "Please understand that Lord Ganesha, Goddess Saraswati, Goddess Durga, all the Kshetra Palaka-s, Sun, Moon, Lord Narayana, Lord Narasimha, Lord Vasudeva, Lord Varaha, Lord Lakshmana, Shatrughna, Bharata, Vibheeshana, Sugreeva, Angada, Jambavanta and Pranava are the angas of Lord Rama. Without these angas, Lord Rama will not remove all roadblocks. They again asked, "How will Brahmins and householders get the capacity to recite Pranava?" He said, "All People (even if they are not eligible to chant "Om",) who chant the six letter mantra would get the capacity to meditate on Pranava. Those who chant silently the mantra of Rama would get the same effect as repeating the letter "Om". After the name of Rishi, Devata and meter, japa of the Rama mantra would give the same effect as repetition of Pranava and further he explained that Rama Himself has said that pranava is a part of Rama mantra.

8. On another occasion answering Vibheeshana's question "How can your angas be made easy to worship? Please tell me an easy way."

Rama replied, "The japa of my name "Rama" removes all sins. Suppose some one is meditating on my six lettered mantra or reads my Gita or thinks of me with devotional fervor, he would get the same effect. He would get rid of the five great sins, viz. killing of father, killing of mother, killing of brothers, killing of teachers, killing of husband or even other well-known great sins, if one repeats my six lettered mantra ten million times. He also would get the immortal and ever lasting bliss.

Vibheeshana again asked him, "What would be the way for people who are not capable of doing It.?"

Rama replied "they can either read my Gita, my thousand names or meditate on my Viswa Roopa or my 108 names, or repeat my name 100 times, or read the king of stotras written by sage Narada, or read the great prayer called mantra raja stavam written by Hanuman, or read the prayer to Sita or daily pray to me by reciting my name; they will doubtless attain Me."

Second Chapter

The great sages led by Sanaka asked Hanuman again, "Please tell us the mantra for meditating (or worshipping) the Taraka Brahma Rama."

Hanuman replied:
1. That king of mantra-s is the Ekakshara (one-syllabled) which is the store house of fire, which is Lord Vishnu who is lying down and which is Lord Shiva who adorned with the crescent moon.

2. Its sage is Brahma, meter is Gayatri, Deity is Lord Rama, its anga is waxing half-Moon and its mind is the soul of fire,

3. Its root is the Beeja Shakti and it has to be chanted for fulfillment of desires.
[The prayer (dhyana sloka) for the mantra is:-]
He who sits on the lotus flower on the shores of river Sarayu,

4. He who is black, seated on the throne of heroes, who shines in the Jnana-Mudra that he shows, whose left side is adorned by Sita and Lakshmana,

5. He who shines as their soul to those souls, who pray to him, who is like the clear crystal, who is the only source to those who wish for salvation,

6. He who is the Paramatma to those thinkers, who shines like the millions of Suns, who is like Narayana residing in the nadi-s, who is digestive fire.

7. The king of mantras with two syllables (Rama) would lead to fulfillment of all desires, and along with the suffix of one letter, it becomes six different mantras, [they are Om, Hrim, Srim, Klim, Aim and Ram.]

8. These king of mantras consisting of three syllables also will fulfill all desires.

9. The two four lettered mantras are Ramachandra and Ramabhadra.

10. These can be chanted with the rishi and others as told before; Viswamithra is its Rishi, the meter is pankti, Devatha is Ramabhadra, The Bheeja is Shakthi.

11. This mantra should be invoked mentally in the middle of the eye brows, head, navel, thighs and feet.

12. One should go to the middle of the forest and sit under the Kalpa-Vriksha (wish-fulfilling or eternal tree) and assume the posture of “Pushpalata” (flowering creeper plant), do the anga nyasa and chant the mantras,

13. With Lakshmana having arranged properly the arrow and the Lord being fanned by Sita.

14. Dhyana mantra:- I salute that Rama, who has lustrous matted hair, who is bluish in colour, who is surrounded by sages, who is being fanned by Janaki, who is protected by Lakshmana holding an umbrella,

15. The one who killed Ravana, who is extremely peaceful, and before whom stand Sugreeva and Vibeeshana. For achieving victory one should chant this sloka ten million times.

16. The five lettered mantra-s are formed by adding the root letters for Manmatha, Durga, Saraswati and Lakshmi at the beginning of the four lettered mantra, [adding OM to make it six-syllabled] and lead to the realization of the four Purushartha-s.

17. When each of the fifty mystic syllables of the Sanskrit alphabet (nasalized), as well as the root letters of Lakshmi, Saraswati, Manmatha and OM are added as the first syllable several varieties of six lettered mantras are formed.

18. Chanting the four letter mantras by adding the root letters of Sri, Maya and Manmatha as prefix and suffix of the four and six letter mantras grants all ones wishes.

19. Adding svaha, or hum phat or namah at the end, in various combinations, make up the 18-lettered mantra-s.

20. In these mantra-s, Brahma as sammohana shakti, Dakshinamurty, Agastya, and Shiva are said to be the ascetics, in that order.

21. The meter (chanda) is Gayatri, and the Deity is Shri Rama. Or, Kama-bija at the beginning and Vishvamitra the Rishi.

22. The meter Gayatri of different deities and Ramabhadra the ‘devata’. The shakti-bija is invoked as before as with the 6-lettered mantra.

23. Touching on the top of the head, in the middle between the eye-brows, heart, thighs, and feet, the mantras are recited with bija-s and anga-nyasa.

24. Dhyana:
I worship Sri Rama,
Whose body shines with various ornaments,
Who is as brilliant as lightning,
Who assumes the Virasana posture,
Who shows jnana Mudra by one hand,
Who keeps the other hand on his thigh,
And who wears the crown.

25. Then one should, with prostrations, recite “Ramachandraya and Ramabhadraya Namah”, and the king of seven lettered mantras and the fulfiller of all wishes.

26. Eight lettered mantra: Adding OM at the beginning to the two seven lettered mantras gives rise to two eight lettered mantras. OM added to the four lettered “Ramaya” and “Hum Phat svaha” is another 8 lettered mantra.

27. The Rishis and other adjuncts for the 8-lettered mantra are the same as for the 6-lettered ones. Again, the 8-lettered mantra also has Rama as the Rishi.

28. The meter is Gayatri, the Deity is Rama, OM, the pair of Shri bija-s, and Shakti bija and others are also (added).

29. Thereafter one recites the mantra-s with the 6-limbed nyasa, and recites Ramaya Namah with OM and a pair of Shri-bija-s.

30. Shiva Rama Mantra: Glaum OM, Maya-bija (heart-abiding) Ramaya Namah is recited again. Shiva, Om, Rama mantra is the giver of all excellence.

31. Sadashiva is spoken of as the Rishi, Gayatri as the meter, and Shiva-OM-Ramachandra as the Deity.

Dhyanam:
I worship that Rama,
Who has three eyes,
Who wears the crescent,
Who holds the trident,
Who is anointed all over by ash,
And who is with matted hair.

32. I worship the three eyed one,
Who is Abhirama, the pinnacle of beauty,
Who wears the crescent as ear ring,
And who holds the noose, the goad, the bow and the arrow,

34. Thus meditating, devoted wholly to recitation and oblations one shall chant mantra-s one-hundred thousand times, offering bilva leaves, fruits, flowers, gingili seeds, and lotuses.

35. Rama Brahma Gayatri: Even the treasures and powers, wished for by the celestials, come by themselves, when the 8-lettered Raghava brahma-gayatri (is chanted).

36. The Rishis knowing Shri-bija as my Shakti, chant the mantra-s with the limbs, as viniyoga for its adoration.

37. Dhyanam:
I worship that blue complexioned Rama,
Who wears the bracelet on upper arm and bangle,
Which are studded with shining gems,
Who has the royal umbrella held over his head,
Who shines like millions of waxing moons,
Who sits in the hall of one thousand sixteen golden pillars,
And who is surrounded by Bharata and others.

38. Rama Sharana Mantra: The chanting of "Ramam sharanam mama" (i.e. Rama is my refuge) achieves much more than many other mantras which lead with difficulty to mere ephemeral gains and productive of the misery of samsara due to the greed for the transient fruits. This mantra gives the fruits of all of them without the taint of greed and other defects. There is also the 8-lettered mantra which is well-known in seven-fold ways. It is Om added to the seven lettered mantra.

39. Other mantras with more letters: The 8-syllabled mantra is (chanted) seven-fold ways. OM is added at the beginning and end of the seven lettered (mantra).

40. Nine lettered mantra: This 9-lettered mantra is offered like the 6-lettered one, to Sita in the beginning and to the consort of Janaki at the end.

41. Ten lettered mantra: The 10-lettered mantra gives all that is desirable wished-for fruits. The great Vasishtha is the Rishi of this 10-lettered mantra; the meter is Virat,

42. The Deity is Rama holding Sita's hand; The beginning bija Visarga is the shakti. With the anga-nyasa for the wishes,

43. The 10 lettered mantra is offered mentally to the head, forehead, middle of the eye-brows, palate, ears, heart, navel, thighs, knees, and feet.

44. Dhyanam:
I think of that Rama,
Who is in the city of Ayodhya,
Who is decorated by various gems,

Who sits under a golden canopy,
Whose doorways are decorated by mandara flowers,

45. Who is seated on a throne,
Surrounded by celestial vehicles,

46. Who is praised by sages with reverence,
Who is adorned on the left by Sita,
Who is being served by Lakshmana,

47. Who is blue complexioned,
Who has a tranquil face,
And who is adorned by ornaments.
This mantra should be recited a hundred-thousand times with exclusive devotion.

48. The form of Rama holding the bow in his hands and Sita within. Brahma is the Rishi of the 10-lettered mantra. The meter is Virat,

49. The Deity is Rama, the slayer of demons. Rest of the worship is similar to the previous one. One should remember Rama holding the bow and arrow.

50. Eleven lettered mantra: With the six-fold addition of OM-Maya-Rama-Kama-Vac-sva- bija-s, and recite the 10-lettered mantra for Rudra.

51. The remainder (ritual) is the same as for the 6-lettered mantra, as regards nyasa and dhyana, according to the wise. Of the 12-lettered mantra Sri Rama is the Rishi;

52. The meter is jagati and Sri Rama the Deity; the pranava is said to be the bija, kliim is Shakti, and hrim is kilaka.

53. Reciting the mantra-s with the anga-nyasa, the rest is performed as previously. Also to be added are OM, kiim and also Bharatagraja.

54. Twelve lettered mantra: This 12-lettered mantra ends with Rama, kliim and svaha. OM Hrridbhagavate Ramachandrabhadraya;

55. As before, the Rishi and dhyana, and [arna meter (12-feet) or the 12 suryas??]; Jagati meter, and the mantra-s with anga-nyasa.

Thus ends Second Chapter of Rama-rahasya Upanishad.

Third Chapter

Sanaka and other ascetics asked Hanuman:
"O mighty son of Anjana! Tell us about the altar (yantra) for the worship by the aforesaid mantra-s.”

Hanuman replied:
“To begin with, the altar is six-sided (hexagonal) and in the center is written the seed-letter (bijakshara) of Rama (Ram), with shrim.

Below that in the second corner is the Sadhya (food offering).
Above it on the sixth corner is the Sadhakam (Constant devotion).
On the surrounding sides are the seed letters of Jiva-Prana-Shakti.
Encircling all these is OM.

In the South-East, North-East, North-West, & South-West, on the front corners, are kept the cooked rice.

Then sequentially the Heart mantra-s viz Ram, rim, rum, raim, raum, rah bija-akshara-,s the heart ‘astra mantras’ are to be recited.

Behind the corners are the bija-akshara of Rama and Maya, on the corners varaham hum; over this is the Kama-bija (Ram) and surrounding it, is the Vac (kiim).

Thereafter are three circles of eight leaves. On the leaves, garlands of syllables in eight groups of six-lettered mantras are inscribed.

Ending with five-lettered mantra.

On the face of each leaf the eight-lettered (mantras).

Again, the 8-petalled lotus.

On the petals, the 8-lettered Narayana mantra. OM namo Narayanaya

On the face of each petal shri bija.

Then the first round.

Then the 12-petalled.
On them, the 12-lettered Vasudeva mantra. (OM namo bhagavate vasudevaya)
As well as on their fronts, in all directions. In a circular manner.
On the petals hum phat with the 12-lettered Rama mantra – (OM namo bhagavate ramachandraya .)
On the front of the petal, Maya bija (kiiM).
On the front of each in two circles – hram, sram, bhram, bram, bhramam, shrum, jram. Then in a circle.

Thereafter, the 32-petalled.
On them, the king of mantra-s – Nrisimha anushtubh.
On front of these, the 8 vasu-s, 11 rudra-s, 12 aditya mantra-s, along with OM and namo, in sequence, in dative case.
Outside and surrounding is vashat.

Then the Bhupura of three lines.
In 12 directions, adorned with the rashi-s (Zodiac signs).
Abiding there the 8 naga-s (serpents).
In the 4 directions, the Narasimha bija.
In the intermediate directions, the Varaha bija.

This all-encompassing yantra fulfills all wishes and grants liberation.

Beginning with the 1–lettered and ending with the 9-lettered (mantra-s), this is the yantra and the tenth becomes the avarana (covering for it).

One should worship Raghava, with ‘anga-nyasa’, in the center of the hexagon.

In the first round, the anga-nyasa is done at all the corners.

At the root of the 8 petals, the initial cover of oneself.

Then the covering by Vasudeva and others.

At the base of the second 8-petals, the ‘cow covering’.

Then covers of Hanuman and other.

For the 12-petalled, Vasishtha covering.

For the 16-petalled, the blue lotus covering.

For the 32-petalled, Dhruva covering.

In the Bhupura, Indra covering.

Outside this is the vajra covering.

Offering thus, one should silently chant.

Now, the altar is described for the mantras starting with 10 syllables and ending with 32 syllables.

First the hexagon.
In its center the name of the ‘ishta’.
Thus surrounded by Kama bija.
The remaining nine surround this.

At the six corners, the 6-fold anga-nyasa, in the front and back of the intermediate directions (S-E, N-E, N-W, S-W).
On the face, the Shri-Maya (bija)
In the corners, krodha.

Then the first round.

Then the 8-petals; on the petals, garlands of syllables, in multiples of 6. In a circular manner.
Surrounding this, in all directions.
Outside this the Bhupura, with 8 spear-points.

In all directions, Narasimha and Varaha.
This is the Great Yantra.

Adhara-shakti (basic power) is the seat of Vishnu's worship.

The first round is of anga-nyasa.

In their front, the bow and the arrow.

At the base of the 8 petals, two avarana-s of Hanuman.

The third avarana of cow.

Fourth of Indra.

Fifth of Vajra.

Thus worshipping the yantra with devotion, one should recite the 10-lettered and other mantra-s.

Thus ends the Third Chapter of Rama-Rahasya Upanishad.

Fourth Chapter

Sanaka and other ascetics asked Hanuman: "Describe the ritual for recitation of Rama mantras." Hanuman replied, "The one who intends to recite this mantra should follow the following procedures:

1. He should bathe thrice a day.

2. He should take only sathvic foods like milk, roots, fruits or naivedya (rice pudding offered to the God)

3. He should follow the prescribed Karmas of the stage of his life (Brahmachari, Grahastha, Vanaprastha or Sanyasi)

4. He should give up the six negative emotions like anger, jealousy etc.

5. He should observe purity and practice dispassionate speech.

6. He should also observe dispassionate action and show respect to all women.

7. He should observe celibacy and sleep on the bare ground.

8. He should not have any desires.

9. He should be devoted to his teacher.

10. He should scrupulously observe bath, worship, recitation, meditation and oblation to the fire.

11. He should meditate with utmost concentration on Rama as instructed by his teacher.

12. He should invoke the sun, moon, Teacher, lamp, cow, Brahmin, etc.

13. The ascetic doing this japa should sit on a tiger skin and adopt postures prescribed like the Swasthikasana in rotating sequence.

14. He should seat himself below plants like Thulasi or trees like Parijata, Bilwa etc.

15. He should count using a rosary whose beads are either made of thulasi plant or use rudraksha.

16. The counting should be done mentally using the beads and should be one hundred thousand times at the altar of Maha Vishnu.

17. Tharpana should be offered after every ten total count. After ten counts offer rice pudding, pour over it clarified butter made from cow's milk and eat what remains after the next tenth portion.

18. After this along with chanting flowers have to be offered along with the chanting of moola mantra,.

The ascetic who does this japa becomes liberated in life and the supernatural powers follow him like a bride follows her groom.

This Rama-mantra is not only a means to liberation, but if you remember me who am Rama's servant, it will ensure success in these worldly affairs too.

To the one who for ever remembers Rama with total devotion as the final refuge of the mind, I am empowered to fulfill all their chosen wishes.

Towards the task of fulfillment of the wishes of the devotees of Rama, I – as an expert in carrying out Rama's commands - am always wholly alert.

Thus ends the Fourth Chapter of Rama-rahasya Upanishad.

Fifth Chapter [Conclusion]

Sanaka and other ascetics asked Hanuman: " Tell us the meaning of Sri Rama mantra".

Hanuman replied: “Among the Rama mantras the 6-lettered is the king among them all; though as mentioned earlier they exist as one-, or two-, or three, or four, or five syllables or even as six-, or seven-, or eight, or even as many more syllables. Lord Shiva knows in essence the glory of the six-syllables (mantra);

The true meaning of the king among the Rama mantras, as well as of the eight-lettered Narayana and five-lettered Shiva mantras, is spoken of as thus:

Where yogi-s revel in the 2 syllable mantra viz. ‘Ra ma’ where the ra syllable denotes fire wherein abides illumination.

Its nature as Existence-Consciousness-Bliss is regarded as the supreme meaning, the consonant denoting the unchanging Brahman, and the syllable the energy of manifestation.

Know that Consonants joined to Syllables are used in breathing; the sound ‘r’, of the nature of light, is therefore used in action.

The sound ‘ma’, is known as ‘maya’ indicating prosperity; being itself the seed-letter (bijakshara) is also equal to Brahman itself.

With the ‘bindu’ (anusvara), the Purusha takes on the form of Shiva-Sun-Moon, the flame as the crest, and the sound as the Prakriti.

Both Purusha and Prakriti jointly are considered as Brahman; the bindu, sound and the indwelling seed-letter as Fire and digits of the Moon.

Fire and OM by their very nature abide in the seed-syllables of Rama, just as the great tree in the mundane life is contained in its seed.

Similarly, in the seed-syllables Rama, is contained this whole moving and unmoving world. The name Rama is thus regarded as the seed with both these meanings.

When freed of the Maya-seed (kiim), the Supreme Spirit is said to exist (alone). This grants liberation to aspirants, and the ‘ma’ sound is regarded as the liberator.

Formless ‘ma’ in Rama is the grantor of enjoyment and liberation.The first letter ‘ra’ stands for the term ‘tat’ (That), and ‘ma’ stands for the term ‘tvam’ (You).

The wise knower of Truth declare that the confluence of the above two terms end in the meaning ‘asi’ (Are). The word ‘namah’ has the meaning of tvam (you) and tat is denoted by the word Rama.

When used in the dative case (Ramaya), the meaning asi (are) is indicated in the mantra. Wherefore, the sentence ‘tattvamasi’ grants the unitive salvation.

Therefore, this (mantra) giver of enjoyment and liberation surpasses the afore-said sentence (tattvamasi). All embodied human beings are qualified for this mantra.

For those desiring liberation, the dispassionate ones, as well as house-holders and in all stages of life, constant meditation of OM, and especially for ascetics, is enjoined; for the knower of the meaning of Rama-mantra doubtless become liberated while alive.

One who studies this Upanishad becomes sanctified by fire, purified by air, is freed from the sin of consuming intoxicants or of theft of gold or of the slaying of a Brahmin.

One who recites the Rama-mantra repeatedly merges in Ramachandra himself.

Therefore, this sacred hymn: Those whoever say "I am Rama in essence", will not feel any want in this life, and without a doubt is Rama Himself".

This is the Truth. This is the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Rama-Rahasyopanishad, as contained in the Atharva-Veda.

The Tatva (principle/philosophy) of Rama exists in this world, with his life showing the way to live, with his name showing the way of ethereal knowledge, and also blessing all those who meditate or worship it with wealth and renunciation.

The word ‘Rama’ on which yogis devote themselves is immeasurable and forever joyful and indicates Para Brahman itself.

The body has been ascribed to Para Brahman which is holy, without any second, which does not have any blemishes and which is bodiless, so that the worshippers are shown the path. 1

Similar to the whole banyan tree existing in the seed of the banyan tree, the entire world exists in the seed “Rama”. 2

Rama when incarnated shone along with Sita, who is nature herself, like the moon shining with its moonlight. He who was born to Mother Kousalya, was black in colour, wore yellow silk, had his hair made up, wore ear studs and chains of precious stones, had in his hand the bow, had two hands, had a very pleasant smiling face and was heroic and blessed with victory and ruled with the help of eight ministers lead by Drishti. He was keeping the Parameshwari who was the mother of the world, who was nature, who had two hands, who was well made up and was holding lotus flower in her hand, on his lap and lightly embracing her. 3

He with Sita formed a triangle with Lakshmana who was holding a bow in his hand and was golden in colour. The devas approached him who was sitting below “the wish giving tree” in the form of a triangle and prayed, “Our salutations to you, who is personification of passion and illusion and also a god primeval to Vedas. Our salutations to the Raghu Veera, who killed Ravana, who is drowned in joy by keeping Goddess Lakshmi on his chest, who is the personification of all souls, who is an ornament to the body of Janaki (daughter of Janaka), who killed Rakshasas, who is very handsome and who is personification of all that is good.” 4

The devas further told “Hey, the killer of Ravana, please give us your protection and your grace.” Then they were with him and became very happy. 5

On his left with Satrugna, on his right with Bharata and on his front Hanuman who was listening to his advices, there was another triangle. Below Bharata was Sugreeva and below him was Vibheeshana. Behind him Lakshmana was holding an umbrella and below him Vibheeshana and Sugreeva were holding fans made of palm leaves. This was another inverted triangle. So the long armed Lord Rama who was shining was meditating in between this figure with six vertices. This is the first row surrounding him. The second is surrounded by Vasudeva and others (Santhi, Sankarshana, Sree Pradyumna, Saraswathi, Anirudha and Rathi) as well as fire and others in different directions.

Third is surrounded by Hanuman, Sugreeva, Bharata, Vibheeshana, Lakshmana, Angada, Jambhavan, Satrugna as well as Drushti, Jayantha, Vijaya, Surashtra, Rashtra Vardhana, Ashoka, Darmapala and Sumandra.

Fourth is surrounded by the 10 dig-balakas (protectors of directions) viz., Indra, Agni (fire God), Yama (god of death), Nirruthi, Varuna, Chandra, Isana, Brahma and Anantha.

Fifth is beyond the Dig-balakas and consists of their principal arms viz., Vajra, Shakthi, Danda, Vara, Pasa, Angusa, Gada, Soola, Madma and chakra; these should be worshipped.

Sixth: After the arms, Neela and other monkeys. Vasishta, Vamadeva and other sages worship him. He should be meditated and worshipped. 6

Thus worship Sri Rama who has the form which is the foundation of this world and who is forever joyful. All people who worship him as the one carrying mace, sword, conch and lotus and who is known as the one who removes births and deaths will attain salvation.

Thus ends the Sri Rama Poorva Tapaniya Upanishad.

II. Rama Uttara Tapaniya Upanishad

Om ! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

In Varanasi Lord Shiva did Japa (chanted) of the Rama Mantra. Pleased because of this, Sri Rama told Lord Sankara as follows:

In this temple (city) whoever worships me with devotion, I would help him get rid of sins like Brahma Hathi (killing of a Brahmin). Those of them who get the six letter mantra (Ram Ramaya NamaH) either from you or Brahma or his disciple line, would live with mastery over the mantra or attain salvation. At the time of death, if you tell this mantra in their ears, they would get salvation. 1

Brahma then thought in his mind about that Maha Vishnu, who is the foundation of this world, who is that Narayana, who does not have any deficiencies and who is that Parameshwara, who is of the form of Para Brahman and who is full of complete joy and then worshipped him as follows: 2

Om! He who is Ramachandra is verily the God. He is the ‘non-dual soul of great happiness’. I salute him again and again in earth, bhuvar loka and Suvar loka. 3.1

Thus ends the Sri Rama Uttara Tapaniya Upanishad.

Vasudeva Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Om. The God like sage Narada saluted Lord Vasudeva and requested him, “Oh God, please teach me the rules of Urdhva Pundra (the religious mark of Vaishnavas which is vertical and points upward)”. 1

God Vasudeva addressing him told as follows:

The Brahmachari (unmarried student of Vedas) and Grahastha (householder) after reciting the following prayer: “Oh God who holds the wheel, mace and conch, Oh Achyutha who is staying in Dwaraka, Oh Govinda, Oh Lotus eyed one, please protect me, who has surrendered to you.” should apply Urdhva Pundra in his forehead and other 12 places with his pure finger (finger next to the little finger) reciting either the Vishnu Gayathri or the 12 names of the Lord viz., Kesava, Narayana, Madhava, Govinda, Vishnu, Madhusudana, Trivikrama, Vamana, Sreedhara, Hrishikesa, Padmanabha and Damodhara. 2

The Sanyasi should wear the Urdhva Pundra with his fourth finger on the head, forehead and chest chanting the Pranava (Om). 3

Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva are three in number: Sthoola (macro), Sookshma (micro) and Karana (cause); are three worlds above: Bhoo, Bhuva and Suva; are three Vedas: Rig, Yajur and Sama; are three states: waking up, dream and sleep. The Urdhva Pundras are three viz., Aa, Uu and Ma. These Urdhva Pundras are full of Pranava and full of the letter Om. That one pranava has only become any. The Lord of the 'Om' takes you above. So you have to wear Urdhva Pundra. 4

That sage who wears four things upward viz., stick, bravery, yoga and Urdhva Pundra would reach the high status of salvation. This stable knowledge would reach me naturally through devotion. 5

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Vasudevopanishad, included in the Sama-Veda.

Mudgala Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I. A SUMMARY OF PURUSHASUKTA

We shall explain the Purusha-sukta: In 'a thousand-headed' thousand means countless; the word 'ten fingers', means infinite distance, by the first stanza Vishnu's pervasion in space is stated, by the second the pervasion in time; the third speaks of his giving liberation. The glory of Vishnu is given in 'Etavan' (so much is his greatness). The same stanza states his four-fold nature. 'Tripad' etc., speaks of the glory of Aniruddha. In 'from that Virat was born' has been shown the origin of Prakriti and Purusha from a quarter of Hari. By 'Yat Purushena' the sacrifice of creation is stated as well as Moksha. In 'Tasmad' world creations are stated. 'Vedaham' speaks of Hari's glory. By 'Yajnena' is stated the end of creation and liberation. One who knows it becomes liberated.

II. THE SUPREME MYSTERY

In Mudgalopanishad the greatness of Purusha-sukta has been stated in detail. Vasudeva instructed the knowledge of Bhagavan to Indra; again imparted to the humble Indra the great mystery with two sections of the Purusha-sukta. These two are: The Purusha described above gave up the object which was beyond the scope of name and form, hard for worldly people to understand and took a form with a thousand parts and capable of giving Moksha on sight, for uplifting the suffering Devas and others. In that form, pervading the world he was beyond it by an infinite distance. This Narayana was the Past, Present and the Future. And was the giver of Moksha to all. He is greater than the greatest – none is greater than He.

He made himself into four parts and with three of them exists in the heaven. By the fourth, the Aniruddha (for of) Narayana, all worlds have come to be. This (part of) Narayana created Prakriti (Matter) for making the worlds (Prakriti stands for the four-faced Brahma). In full form the latter did not know the work of creation – this Aniruddha-Narayana told him.

Brahman ! Meditate upon your organs as the sacrifice, the firm body of the sheaths as the oblation, me as Agni, the spring season as ghee, summer as fuel, autumn as the six tastes of food and make the offering in Agni and touch the body – this will make the body (strong like) Vajra (diamond). Thence will appear the products like animals. From the, the world of moving and unmoving things. It must be understood that the manner of liberation is stated by the combination of Jiva and Paramatman. Whoever knows this Creation and Liberation lives a full life.

III

The single God becoming many; unborn, is born as many. The Adhvaryus worship him as Agni. This as Yajus unites everything. The Samavedins worship as Saman. All is established in him. The serpents meditate on his as poison. The knowers of snake-lore as snake, gods as energy, men as wealth, Demons as Magic, the manes as sustenance. The knowers of the superhuman as superhuman. Gandharvas as beauty, Apsarases as perfume. He becomes whatever he is worshipped as; so, one should think 'I am the supreme being' and will become that (who knows this).

IV. ONLY BRAHMAN WITH THE THREEFOLD MISSING IS JIVA

Beyond the threefold misery, free from layers devoid of the six waves, other than the five sheaths, unaffected by the six transformations is the Brahman. The three miseries are Adhyatmika (body disease), Adhibhautika (robbers, wild animals etc.,) and Adhidaivika (rains etc.,). They relate to agents, action and effect; knower, knowledge and the known; experiencer, experience and the experienced. The six layers are skin, flesh, blood, bones, tendons and morrow. The six enemies are lust etc. The five sheaths are those of food, vital airs, mind cognition and bliss. The six transformations are: being, birth, growth, change, decline and destruction. The six waves are hunger, thirst, sorrow, delusion, old age and death. The six delusions are about family, lineage, class, caste, stations (ashrama) and forms. Through contact with the supreme spirit becomes the Jiva – he is none other.

He who studies this is purified in fire, wind and sun; has health and wealth, becomes rich in children and grandchildren, a scholar, purified from great sin, drink, improper contact with mother, daughter and daughter-in-law, stealing gold, forgetting Vedic learning, failure to serve elders, sacrificing for the unfit, eating what should not be, wrong gifts, contact with another's wife, unaffected by lust etc., becomes the pristine Brahman in this birth. Therefore one should not impart to an uninitiated person this Purusha-sukta which is a secret, nor to one who does not know the Vedas, a non-sacrificer, a non-Vaishnava, non-Yogin, a talkative person, a harsh talker, one who takes more than a year to learn, the discontented. The Guru shall impart this in a pure place, on a sacred star, after regulating the vital airs to the humble disciple, in the right ear. It should not be done too often – it would become stale but as often as needed, in the ear.

Thus both the teacher and the taught will become Purusha in this birth.

This is the Upanishad.

Om! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Mudgalopanishad, as contained in the Rig-Veda.

Sandilya Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

CHAPTER - I

1. Sandilya questioned Atharvan thus: "Please tell me about the eight Angas (parts) of Yoga which is the means of attaining to Atman".

Atharvan replied: "The eight Angas of Yoga are Yama, Niyama, Asana, Pranayama, Pratyahara, Dharana, Dhyana and Samadhi. Of these, Yama is of ten kinds; and so is Niyama. There are eight Asanas. Pranayama is of three kinds; Pratyahara is of five kinds; so also is Dharana. Dhyana is of two kinds and Samadhi is of one kind only. Under Yama (forbearance) are ten: Ahimsa, Satya, Asteya, Brahmacharya, Daya, Arjava, Kshama, Dhriti, Mitahara and Saucha. Of these, Ahimsa is the not causing of any pain to any living being at any time through the actions of one's mind, speech, or body. Satya is the speaking of the truth that conduces to the well-being of creatures, through the actions of one's mind, speech, or body. Asteya is not coveting of another's property through the actions of one's mind, speech, or body. Brahmacharya is the refraining from sexual inter-course in all places and in all states in mind, speech or body. Daya is kindliness towards all creatures in all places. Arjava is the preserving of equanimity of mind, speech, or body in the performance or non-performance of the actions ordained or forbidden to be done. Kshama is the bearing patiently of all pleasant or unpleasant things, such as praise or blow. Dhriti is the preserving of firmness of mind during the period of gain or loss of wealth or relatives. Mitahara is the taking of oily and sweet food, leaving one-fourth of the stomach empty. Saucha is of two kinds, external and internal. Of these, the external is the cleansing of the body by earth and water; the internal is the cleansing of the mind. This (the latter) is to be obtained by means of the Adhyatma-Vidya (Science of Self).

2. Under Niyama (religious observances), are ten, viz., Tapas, Santosha Astikya, Dana, Ishvarapujana, Siddhanta-Sravana, Hrih, Mati, Japa and Vrata. Of these Tapas, is the emancipation of the body through the observances of such penances as Krichchhra, Chandrayana, etc., according to rules. Santosha is being satisfied with whatever comes to us of its own accord. Astikya is the belief in the merits or demerits of actions as stated in the Vedas. Dana is the giving with faith to deserving persons, money, grains, etc., earned lawfully. Ishvarapujana is the worshipping of Vishnu, Rudra, etc., with pure mind according to one's power. Siddhanta-Sravana is the inquiry into the significance of Vedanta. Hrih is the shame felt in the performance of things contrary to the rules of the Vedas and of Society. Mati is the faith in the paths laid down by the Vedas. Japa is the practising of the Mantras into which one is duly initiated by his spiritual instructor and which is not against (the rules of) the Vedas. It is of two kinds – the spoken and the mental. The mental is associated with contemplation by the mind. The spoken is of two kinds – the loud and the low. The loud pronunciation gives the reward as stated (in the Vedas): (while) the low one (gives) a reward thousand times (that). The mental (gives) a reward a Crore (of times that). Vrata is the regular observance of or the refraining from the actions enjoined or prohibited by the Vedas.

3. Asanas (the postures) are (chiefly) eight, viz., Svastika, Gomukha, Padma, Vira, Simha, Bhadra, Mukta and Mayura. Svastika is the sitting at ease with the body erect, placing each foot between the thighs and knees of the other.

4. Gomukha is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) placing the hollow of the left foot under the side of the right posteriors and the hollow of the right foot under the side of the left posteriors, resembling Gomukha (cow's face).

5. Padma is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) placing the back of each foot in the thigh of the other, the right hand grasping the right toe and the left hand to left toe. This, O Sandilya, is praised by all.

6. Vira is the sitting at ease (with the body erect), placing one foot on the thigh of the other and the other foot underneath the corresponding (opposite thigh).

7-8. Simha is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) pressing the right side (of the thigh) with the hollow of left heel and vice versa. Rest your hands on the knees, spread out the fingers, open your mouth and carefully fix your gaze on the tip of your nose. This is always praised by the Yogins.

9. Siddha is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) pressing the perineum with the left heel and placing the heel of the right foot above the genital organ, concentrating the mind between the two eyebrows.

10. Bhadra is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) pressing the two ankles of the two feet firmly together against the Sivini (viz., lower part of the seed) and binding the knees firmly with the hands. This is the Bhadra which destroys all diseases and poisons.

11. Mukta is (the sitting at ease with the body erect) pressing with the left heel the right side of the tender part of the Sivini and with the right heel the lest side of the tender part of the Sivini.

12-13. Mayura (lit., peacock): Rest your body upon the ground with both palms and place your elbows on the sides of the navel, lift up the head and feet and remain like a stick in the air, (like the plant balance in gymnastics). This is the Mayura posture which destroys all sins.

14. By these, all the diseases within the body are destroyed; all the poisons are digested. Let the person who is unable to practise all these postures betake himself to any one (of these) which he may find easy and pleasant. He who conquers (or gets mastery over) the postures - he conquers the three worlds. A person who has the practice of Yama and Niyama should practise Pranayama; by that the Nadis become purified."

15. Then Sandilya questioned Atharvan thus: "By what means are the Nadis purified ? How many are they in number ? How do they arise ? What Vayus (vital airs) are located in them ? What are their seats? What are their functions? Whatever is worthy of being known in the body, please tell me". To that Atharvan replied (thus): "This body is ninety-six digits in length. Prana extends twelve digits beyond the body. He who through the practice of Yoga reduces his Prana within his body to make it equal to or not less than the fire in it becomes the greatest of the Yogins. In men, the region of fire which is triangular in form and brilliant as the molten gold is situated in the middle of the body. In four-footed animals, it (fire) is quadrangular. In birds, it is round. In its (the region of life's) centre, the purifying, beneficial and subtle flame is situate. Two digits above the anus and two digits below the sexual organ is the centre of the body for men. For four-footed animals, it is the middle of the heart. For birds, it is the middle of the body. Nine digits from (or above) the centre of the body and four digits in length and breadth is situated an oval form. In its midst is the navel. In it, is situated the Chakra (viz., wheel) with twelve spokes. In the middle of the Chakra, the Jiva (Atman) wanders, driven by its good and bad deeds. As a spider flies to and fro within a web of fine threads, so Prana moves about here. In this body, the Jiva rides upon Prana. Lying in the middle of the navel and above it, is the seat of Kundalini. The Kundalini Sakti is of the form of eight Prakritis (matter) and coils itself eight ways or (times). The movement of Vayus (vital airs) checks duly the food and drink all round by the side of Skandha. It closes by its head (the opening of) the Brahmarandhra and during the time of (the practice of) Yoga is awakened by the fire (in the Apana); then it shines with great brilliancy in the Akasa of the heart in the shape of wisdom. Depending upon Kundalini which is situated in the centre, there are fourteen principal Nadis (viz.,) Ida, Pingala, Susumna, Sarasvati, Varuni, Pusha, Hastijihva, Yasasvini, Visvodhari, Kuhuh, Sankhini, Payasvini, Alambusa and Gandhari. Of them, Susumna is said to be the sustainer of the universe and the path of salvation. Situated at the back of the anus, it is attached to the spinal column and extends to the Brahmarandhra of the head and is invisible and subtle and is Vaishnavi (or has the Sakti force of Vishnu). On the left of Susumna is situated Ida and on the right is Pingala. The moon moves in Ida and the sun in Pingala. The moon is of the nature of Tamas and the sun of Rajas. The poison share is of the sun and the nectar of the moon. They both direct (or indicate) time and Susumna is the enjoyer (or consumer) of time. To the back and on the side of Susumna are situate Sarasvati and Kuhuh respectively. Between Yasasvini and Kuhuh stands Varuni. Between Pusha and Sarasvati lies Payasvini. Between Gandhari and Sarasvati is situated Yasasvini. In the centre of the navel is Alambusa. In front of Susumna there is Kuhuh, which proceeds as far as the genital organ. Above and below Kundalini is situated Varuni, which proceeds everywhere. Yasasvini which is beautiful (or belonging to the moon), proceeds to the great toes. Pingala goes upwards to the right nostril. Payasvini goes to right ear. Sarasvati goes to the upper part or the tongue and Sankhini to the left ear, (while) Gandhari goes from the back of Ida to the left eye. Alambusa goes upwards and downwards from the root of the anus. From these fourteen Nadis, other (minor) Nadis spring; from them springing others and from them springing others; so it should be known. As the leaf of the Asvattha tree (ficus religiosa) etc., is covered with minute fibres so also is this body permeated with Nadis.

"Prana, Apana, Samana, Udana, Vyana, Naga, Kurma, Krikara, Devadatta and Dhananjaya these ten

Vayus (vital airs) move in all the Nadis. Prana moves in the nostrils, the throat, the navel, the two great toes and the lower and the upper parts of Kundalini. Vyana moves in the ear, the eye, the loins, the ankles, the nose, the throat and the buttocks. Apana moves in the anus, the genitals, the thighs, the knees, the stomach, the seeds, the lions, the calves, the navel and the seat of the anus of fire. Udana lives in all the joints and also in the hands and legs. Samana lives, permeating in all parts of the body. Along with the fire in the body, it causes the food and drink taken in, to spread in the body. It moves in the seventy-two thousand Nadis and pervades all over the body along with the fire. The fire Vayus beginning with Naga go towards the skin, the bones, etc. The Prana which is in the navel separates the food and drink which is there and brings about the Rasas (juices) and others. Placing the water above the fire and the food above (or in) the water, it goes to the Apana and along with it, fans up the fire in the centre of the body. The fire thus fanned up by the Apana gradually increases in brightness in the middle of the body. Then it causes through its flames the water which is brought in the bowels by the Prana to grow hot. The fire with the water causes the food and conditions, which are placed above, to be boiled to a proper degree. Then Prana separates these into sweat, urine, water, blood, semen, the faeces and the like. And along with the Samana, it takes the juice (or essence) to all the Nadis and moves in the body in the shape of breath. The Vayus excrete the urine, the faeces, etc., through the nine openings in the body which are connected with the outside air. The functions of Prana are inspiration, expiration and cough. Those of Apana are the excretion of the faeces and the urine. Those of Vyana are (such actions as) giving and taking. Those of Udana are keeping the body straight, etc. Those of Samana are nourishing the body. Those of Naga are vomiting, etc.; of Kurma, the movement of the eyelids; of Krikara, the causing of hunger, etc., of Devadatta, idleness, etc., and Dhananjaya phlegm. Having thus acquired a thorough knowledge of the seat of the Nadis and of the Vayus with their functions, one should begin with the purification of the Nadis.

16. A person possessed of Yama and Niyama, avoiding all company, having finished his course of study, delighting in truth and virtue, having conquered (his) anger, being engaged in the service of his spiritual instructor and having been obedient to his parents and well instructed in all the religious practices and the knowledge of his order of life, should go to a sacred grove abounding in fruits, roots and water. There he should select a pleasant spot always resounding with the chanting of the Vedas, frequented by the knowers of Brahman that persevere in the duties of their orders of life and filled with fruits, roots, flowers and water. (Else) either in a temple or on the banks of a river or in a village or in a town, he should build a beautiful monastery. It should be neither too long nor too high, should have a small door, should be besmeared well with cow-dung and should have every sort of protection. There listening to the exposition of Vedanta, he should begin to practise Yoga. In the beginning having worshipped Vinayaka (Ganesha), he should salute his Ishta-Devata (tutelary deity) and sitting in any of the above-mentioned postures on a soft seat, facing either the east or the north and having conquered them, the learned man keeping his head and neck erect and fixing his gaze on the tip of his nose, should see the sphere of the moon between his eyebrows and drink the nectar (flowing therefrom through his eyes). Inhaling the air through Ida for the space of twelve matras, he should contemplate on the sphere of fire situated in the belly as surrounded with flames and having as its seed 'ra'; then he should exhale it through Pingala. Again inhaling it through Pingala and retaining it (within), he should exhale it through Ida. For the period of twenty-eight months, he should practise six times at every sitting through the three Sandhyas (morning, noon and evening) and during the intervals. By this, the Nadis becomes purified. Then the body becomes light and bright, the (gastric) fire is increased (within) and there is the manifestation of Nada (internal sound).

17. Pranayama is said to be the union of Prana and Apana. It is of three kinds - expiration, inspiration and cessation. They are associated with the letters of the (Sanskrit) alphabet (for the right performance of Pranayama). Therefore Pranava (OM) only is said to be Pranayama. Sitting in the Padma posture, the person should meditate that there is at the tip of his nose Gayatri, a girl of red complexion surrounded by the numberless rays of the image of the moon and mounted on a Hamsa (swan) and having a mace in her hand. She is the visible symbol of the letter ‘A’. The letter ‘U’ has as its visible symbol Savitri, a young woman of white colour having a disk in her hand and riding on a Garuda (eagle). The letter ‘M’ has as its visible symbol Sarasvati, an aged woman of black colour riding on a bull, having a trident in her hand. He should meditate that the single letter – the supreme light – the Pranava (OM) – is the origin or source of these three letters ‘A’, ‘U’ and ‘M’. Drawing up the air through Ida for the space of sixteen matras, he should meditate on the letter ‘A’ during that time; retaining the inspired air for the space of sixty-four matras, he should meditate on the letter ‘U’ during the time; he should then exhale the inspired air for the space of thirty-two matras, meditating on the letter ‘M’ during that time. He should practise this in the above order over and over again.

18. Then having become firm in the posture and preserved perfect self-control, the Yogin should, in order to clear away the impurities of the Susumna, sit in the Padmasana (Padma posture) and having inhaled the air through the left nostril, should retain it as long as he can and should exhale it through the right. Then drawing it again through the right and having retained it, he should exhale it through the left in the order that he should draw it through the same nostril by which he exhaled it before and retained it. In this context, occur (to memory) the following verses:
"In the beginning having inhaled the breath (Prana) through the left nostril, according to the rule, he should exhale it through the other; then having inhaled the air through the right nostril should retain it and exhale it through the other. To those who practise according to these rules through the right and left nostrils, the nadis become purified within three months.

19. He should practise cessation of breath at sunrise, in the midday, at sunset and at midnight slowly till eighty (times a day) for four weeks.

20. In the early stages, perspiration is produced; in the middle stage the tremor of the body and in the last stage levitation in the air. These (results) ensure out of the repression of the breath, while sitting in the Padma posture.

21. When perspiration arises with effort, he should rub his body well. By this, the body becomes firm and light.

22. In the early course of his practice, food with milk and ghee is excellent. One sticking to this rule becomes firm in his practice and gets no Tapa (or burning sensation in the body).

23. As lions, elephants and tigers are gradually tamed, so also the breath when rightly managed (comes under control); else it kills the practitioner.

24. He should (as far as is consistent with his health and safety) properly exhale it, properly inhale it or retain it properly. Thus (only) will he attain success.

25. By thus retaining the breath in an approved manner and by the purification of the Nadis, the brightening of the (gastric) fire, the hearing distinctly of (spiritual) sounds and (good) health result.

26-30. When the nervous centres have become purified through the regular practice of Pranayama, the air easily forces its way up through the mouth of the Susumna which is in the middle. By the contraction of the muscles of the neck and by the contraction of the one below (viz.,) Apana, the Prana (breath) goes into the Susumna which is in the middle from the west Nadi. Drawing up the Apana and forcing down the Prana from the throat, the Yogin free from old age becomes a youth of sixteen.

31. Seated in a pleasant posture and drawing up the air through the right nostril and retaining it inside from the top of the hair to the toe nails, he should exhale it through the same nostril. Through it, the brain becomes purified and the diseases in the air Nadis are destroyed. Drawing up the air through the nostrils with noise (so as to fill the space) from the heart to the neck and having retained it (within) as long as possible, he should exhale it through the nose. Through this hunger, thirst, idleness and sleep do not arise. Taking in the air through the mouth (wide open) and having retained it as long as possible, he should expel it through the nose. Through this, (such diseases as) Gulma; Pleeha (both being splenetic diseases), bile and fever as also hunger, etc., are destroyed. Now we shall proceed to Kumbhaka (restraint of breath). It is of two kinds - Sahita and Kevala. That which is coupled with expiration and inspiration is called Sahita. That which is devoid of these is called Kevala (alone). Until you become perfect in Kevala, practise Sahita. To one who has mastered Kevala, there is nothing unattainable in the three worlds. By Kevala-restraint of breath, the knowledge of Kundalini arises. Then he becomes lean in body, serene in face and clear eyed, hears the (spiritual) sounds distinctly, becomes free from all diseases and conquers his (Bindu) seminal fluid, his gastric fire being increased. Centring one's mind on an inward object whilst his eyes are looking outside without shutting and opening of his eyelids, has been called Vaishnavi-mudra. This is kept hidden in all the Tantric works.

32. With his mind and breath absorbed in an internal object, the Yogin, though he does not really see the objects outside and under him, still (appears to) see them with eyes in which the pupils are motionless. This is called Khechari-mudra. It has as its sphere of extension one object and is very beneficial. (Then) the real seat of Vishnu, which is void and non-void, dawns on him.

33. With eyes half closed and with a firm mind, fixing his eyes on the tip of his nose and becoming absorbed in the sun and moon, he after remaining thus unshaken (becomes conscious of) the thing which is resplendent, which is the supreme truth and which is beyond. O Sandilya, know this to be Tat (That).

34. Merging the sound in the light and elevating the brows a little, this is of the way of (or is a part of) the former practice. This brings about the state of Unmani which causes the destruction of the mind.

35. Therefore he should practise the Khechari-mudra. Then he attains to the state of Unmani and falls into the Yoga sleep (trance). To one who obtains this Yoga sleep, time does not exist. Placing the mind in the midst of Sakti and Sakti in the midst of the mind and looking on the mind with the mind, O Sandilya be happy.

36. Place the Atman in the midst of Akasa and Akasa in the midst of Atman and having reduced everything to Akasa, do not think of anything else.

37. You should not (then) entertain thoughts, either external or internal. Abandoning all thoughts, become abstract thought itself.

38. As camphor in fire and salt in water become absorbed, so also the mind becomes absorbed in the Tattva (Truth).

39. What is termed Manas (mind) is the knowledge of everything that is known and its clear apprehension. When the knowledge and the object cognised are lost alike, there is no second path (or that is the only path).

40. By its giving up all cognition of objects, it (the mind) is absorbed and when the mind is absorbed, Kaivalya (isolation) alone remains.

41. For the destruction of the Chitta, there are two ways - Yoga and Jnana. O prince of sages, Yoga is the (forcible) repression of the modifications of the mind and Jnana is the thorough inquiry into them.

42-45. When the modifications of the mind are repressed, it (the mind) verily obtains peace. Just as the actions of the people cease with the stopping of the fluctuations of the sun (viz., with sunset), so when the fluctuations of the mind cease, this cycle of births and deaths comes to an end. (Then) the fluctuations of Prana are prevented, when one has no longing for this mundane existence or when he has gratified his desires therein - through the study of religious books, the company of good men, indifference (to enjoyments), practice and Yoga or long contemplation with intentness on any desired (higher) object or through practising one truth firmly.

46. By the repression of the breath through inhalation, etc., by continual practice therein which does not cause fatigue and by meditating in a secluded place, the fluctuations of the mind are arrested. Through the right realisation of the true nature of the sound which is at the extreme end of the pronunciation of the syllable OM (viz., Ardhamatra) and when Sushupti (dreamless sleeping state) is rightly cognised through consciousness, the fluctuations of Prana are repressed.

47. When the passage at the root of the palate which is like the bell, viz., Uvula, is closed by the tongue with effort and when the breath goes up through (the upper hole), then the fluctuations of Prana are stopped.

48-50. When the consciousness (Samvit) is merged in Prana and when through practice the Prana goes through the upper hole into the Dvadasanta (the twelfth centre) above the palate, then the fluctuations of Prana are stopped. When the eye of consciousness (viz., the spiritual or third eye) becomes calm and clear so as to be able to distinctly see in the transparent Akasa at a distance of twelve digits from the tip of his nose, then the fluctuations of Prana are stopped. When the thoughts arising in the mind are bound up in the calm contemplation of the world of Taraka (star or eye) between one's eyebrows and are (thus) destroyed, then the fluctuations cease.

51. When the knowledge which is of the form of the knowable, which is beneficent and which is untouched by any modifications arises in one and is known as OM only and no other, then the fluctuations of Prana cease.

52. By the contemplation for a long time of the Akasa which is in the heart and by the contemplation of the mind free from Vasanas, then the fluctuations of Prana cease.

53. By these methods and various others suggested by (one's) thought and by means of the contact of the many (spiritual) guides, the fluctuations cease.

54. Having by contraction opened the door of Kundalini, one should force open the door of Moksha. Closing with her mouth the door through which one ought to go, the Kundalini sleeps spiral in form and coiled up like a serpent. He who causes this Kundalini to move - he is an emancipated person. If this Kundalini were to sleep in the upper part of the neck of any Yogin, it goes towards his emancipation. (If it were to sleep) in the lower part (of the body), it is for the bondage of the ignorant. Leaving the two Nadis, Ida and the other (Paingala), it (Prana) should move in the Susumna. That is the supreme seat of Vishnu. One should practise control of breath with the concentration of the mind. The mind should not be allowed by a clever man to rest on any other thing.

55. One should not worship Vishnu during the day alone. One should not worship Vishnu during the night alone; but should always worship Him and should not worship Him merely during day and night.

56. The wisdom-producing opening (near Uvula) has five passages. O Sandilya, this is the Khechari-mudra; practise it.

57. With one who sits in the Khechari-mudra, the Vayu which was flowing before through the left and right Nadis now flows through the middle one (Susumna. There is no doubt about it.

58. You should swallow the air through the void (Susumna) between Ida and Pingala. In that place is Khechari-mudra situated and that is the seat of Truth.

59. Again that is Khechari-mudra which is situated in the Akasa-Chakra (in the head) in the Niralamba (supportless) seat between the sun and moon (viz., Ida and Pingala).

60-61. When the tongue has been lengthened to the length of a Kala (digit) by the incision (of the fraenum lingum) and by rubbing and milking it (viz., the tongue), fix the gaze between the two eyebrows and close the hole in the skull with the tongue reversed. This is Khechari-mudra. With the tongue and the Chitta (mind) both move in the Akasa (Khechari), then the person with his tongue raised up becomes immortal. Firmly pressing the Yoni (perineum) by the left heel, stretching out the right leg, grasping the feet with both hands and inhaling the air through the nostrils, practise Kantha-Bandha, retaining the air upwards. By that, all afflictions are destroyed; then poison is digested as if it were nectar. Asthma, splenetic disease, the turning up of the anus and the numbness of the skin are removed. This is the means of conquering Prana and destroying death. Pressing the Yoni by the left heel, place the other foot over the left thigh: inhale the air, rest the chin on the chest, contract the Yoni and contemplate, (as far as possible), your Atman as situated within your mind. Thus is the direct perception (of truth) attained. Inhaling the Prana from outside and filling the stomach with it, centre the Prana with the mind in the middle of the navel at the tip of the nose and at the toes during the Sandhyas (sunset and sunrise) or at all times. (Thus) the Yogin is freed from all diseases and fatigue.

62. By centring his Prana at the tip of his nose, he obtains mastery over the element of air; by centring it at the middle of his navel, all diseases are destroyed; by centring it at the toes, his body becomes light. He who drinks the air (drawn) through the tongue destroys fatigue, thirst and diseases.

63. He who drinks the air with his mouth during the two Sandhyas and the last two hours of the night, within three months the auspicious Sarasvati (goddess of speech) is present in his Vak (speech) (viz., he becomes eloquent and learned in his speech).

64. In six months, he is free from all diseases. Drawing the air by the tongue, retain the air at the root of the tongue. The wise man thus drinking nectar enjoys all prosperity.

65. Fixing the Atman in the Atman itself in the middle of the eyebrows, (having inhaled) through Ida and breaking through that (centre) thirty times, even a sick man is freed from disease.

66. He who draws the air through the Nadis and retains it for twenty-four minutes in the navel and in the sides of the stomach becomes freed from disease.

67-69(a). He who for the space of a month during the three Sandhyas (sunset, sunrise and midnight or noon) draws the air through the tongue, pierces thirty times and retains his breath in the middle of his navel, becomes freed from all fevers and poisons. He who retains the Prana together with the mind at the tip of his nose even for the space of a Muhurta (forty-eight minutes), destroys all sins that were committed by him during one hundred births.

69(b). Through the Samyama of Tara (Om), he knows all things. By retaining the mind at the tip of his nose, he acquires a knowledge of Indra-world; below that, he acquires a knowledge of Agni (fire) world. Through the Samyama of Chitta in the eye, he gets a knowledge of all worlds; in the ear, a knowledge of Yama (the god of death) world); in the sides of the ear, a knowledge of Nrriti-world; in the back of it (the ear), a knowledge of Varuna-world; in the left ear, a knowledge of Vayu-world; in the throat, a knowledge of Soma (moon) world; in the left eye, a knowledge of Shiva-world; in the head, a knowledge of Atala world; in the feet, a knowledge of Vitala world; in the ankles, a knowledge of Nitala (rather Sutala) world; in the calves, a knowledge of Sutala (rather Talatala) world; in the knees, a knowledge of Mahatala world; in the thighs, a knowledge of Rasatala world; in the loins, a knowledge of Talatala (rather Patala) world; in the navel, a knowledge of Bhur (earth) world; in the stomach, a knowledge of Bhuvar world; in the heart, a knowledge of Suvar world; in the place above the heart, a knowledge of Mahar world; in the throat, a knowledge of Jana world; in the middle of the brows, a knowledge of Tapa world; in the head, a knowledge of Satya world. By conquering Dharma and Adharma, one knows the past and the future. By centring it on the sound of every creature, a knowledge of the cry (or language) of the animal is produced. By centring it on the Sanchita-Karma (past Karma yet to be enjoyed), a knowledge of one’s previous births arises in him. By centring it on the mind of another, a knowledge of the mind (or thoughts) of others is induced. By centring it on the Kaya-Rupa (or form of the body), other forms are seen. By fixing it on the Bala (strength). The strength of persons like Hanuman is obtained. By fixing it on the sun, a knowledge of the worlds arises. By fixing it on the moon, a knowledge of the constellation is produced. By fixing it on the Dhruva (Polar star) a perception of its motion is induced. By fixing it on his own (Self), one acquires the knowledge of Purusha; on the navel, he attains a knowledge of the Kaya-Vyuha (mystical arrangement of all the particles of the body so as to enable a person to wear out his whole Karma in one life); on the well of the throat, freedom from hunger and thirst arises; on the Kurma Nadi (which is situated in the well of the throat), a firmness (of concentration) takes place. By fixing it on the Tara (pupil of the eye), he obtains the sight of the Siddhas (spiritual personages). By conquering the Akasa in the body, he is able to soar in the Akasa; (in short) by centring the mind in any place, he conquers the Siddhis appertaining to that place. Then comes Pratyahara, which is of five kinds. It is the drawing away of the organs from attaching themselves to the objects of senses. Contemplating upon everything that one sees as Atman is Pratyahara. Renouncing the fruits of one’s daily actions is Pratyahara. Turning away from all objects of sense is Pratyahara. Dharana in the eighteen important places (mentioned below) is Pratyahara, (viz.,) the feet, the toes, the ankles, the calves, the knees, the thighs, the anus, the penis, the navel, the heart, the well of the throat, the palate, the nose, the eyes, the middle of the brows, the forehead and the head in ascending and descending orders.

70. Then (comes) Dharana. It is of three kinds, (viz.,) fixing the mind in the Atman, bringing the external Akasa into the Akasa of the heart and contemplating the five Murtis (forms of Devatas) in the five elements - earth, Apas, fire, Vayu and Akasa.

71. Then comes Dhyana. It is of two kinds, Saguna (with Gunas or quality) and Nirguna (without quality). Saguna is the meditation of a Murti. Nirguna is on the reality of Self.

72. Samadhi is the union of the Jivatma (individual self) and the Paramatman (higher Self) without the threefold state (viz., the knower, the known and the knowledge). It is of the nature of extreme bliss and pure consciousness.

Thus ends the first chapter.

CHAPTER - II

Then the Brahma-Rishi Sandilya not obtaining the knowledge of Brahman in the four Vedas, approached the Lord Atharvan and asked him: "What is it? Teach me the science of Brahman by which I shall obtain that which is most excellent."

Atharvan replied: "O Sandilya, Brahman is Satya, Vijnana and Ananta in which all this (world) is interwoven, warp-wise and woof-wise, from which all originated and into which all are absorbed and which being known makes everything else known. It is without hands and feet, without eyes and ears, without tongue or without body and is unreachable and undefinable. From which, Vak (speech) and mind return, being unable to obtain (or reach) It. It is to be cognised by Jnana and Yoga. From which, Prajna of old sprang. That which is one and non-dual, that which pervades everything like Akasa, which is extremely subtle, without a blemish, actionless, Sat (be-ness) only, the essence, of the bliss of consciousness, beneficent, calm and immortal and which is beyond. That is Brahman. Thou art That. Know That by wisdom. He who is the one, the shining, the giver of the power of Atman, the omniscient, the Lord of all and the inner Soul of all beings, who lives in all beings, who is hidden in all beings and the source of all beings, who is reachable only through Yoga and who creates, supports and destroys everything - He is Atman. Know the several worlds in the Atman. Do not grieve, O knower of Atman, thou shalt reach the end of pains."

Thus ends the second chapter.

CHAPTER - III

Then Sandilya questioned Atharvan thus: "From the Brahman that is OM, imperishable, actionless, beneficial, Sat (be-ness) only and supreme, how dissolution this universe arise ? How does it exist in It ? And how is it absorbed in It ? Please solve me this doubt."

Atharvan replied: "The Supreme Brahman, the Truth, is the imperishable and the actionless. Then from the formless Brahman, three forms (or aspects) arose, (viz.,) Nishkala (partless), Sakala (with parts) and Sakala-Nishkala (with and without parts). That which is Satya, Vijnana and Ananda; That which is actionless, without any impurity, omnipresent, extremely subtle, having faces in every direction, undefinable and immortal - that is His Nishkala aspect. Maheshvara (the great Lord) who is black and yellow rules with Avidya, Mula-Prakriti or Maya that is red, white and black and that is co-existent with him. This is his Sakala-Nishkala aspect. Then the Lord desired (or willed) by his spiritual wisdom (thus): May I become many ? May I bring forth ? Then from this Person who was contemplating and whose desires are fulfilled, three letters sprang up. Three Vyahritis, the three-footed Gayatri, the three Vedas, the three Devas, the three Varnas (colours or castes) and the three fires sprang. That Supreme Lord who is endowed with all kinds of wealth, who is all pervading, who is situated in the hearts of all beings, who is the Lord of Maya and whose form is Maya; He is Brahma; He is Vishnu; He is Rudra; He is Indra; He is all the Devas; He is all the Bhutas (elements or beings); He only is before; He only is behind; He only is on our left; He only is on our right; He only is below; He only is above; He only is the all. That form of him as Dattatreya, who sports with his Sakti, who is kind to his devotees, who is brilliant as fire, resembling the petals or a red lotus and is of four hands, who is mild and shines sinlessly - this is His Sakala form."

Then Sandilya questioned Atharvan, "O Lord, that which is Sat only and the essence of the bliss of consciousness - why is He called Parabrahman?"

Atharvan replied: "Because He increases Brihati and causes to increase everything (Brimhayati); so he is called Parabrahman.

Why is He called Atman ?

Since He obtains (Apnoti) everything, since He takes back everything and since He is everything, so he is called Atman.

Who is He called Maheshvara (the great Lord)?

Since by the sound of the words Mahat-Isha (the great Lord) and by His own power, the great Lord governs everything.

Why is He called Dattatreya?

Because the Lord being extremely pleased with Atri (Rishi) who was performing a most difficult penance and who had expressed his desire to see Him who is light itself, offered Himself (Datta) as their son and because the woman Anasuya was his mother and Atri was his father.

Therefore he who knows the (secret) meaning knows everything. He who always contemplates on the supreme that It is himself becomes a knower of Brahman. Here these Shlokas (stanzas) occur (to memory): 1-4: He who contemplates always the Lord of Lords and the ancient thus - as Dattatreya, the beneficent, the calm, of the colour of sapphire, one who delights in his own Maya and the Lord who has shaken off everything, as naked and as one whose whole body is besmeared with the holy ashes, who has matted hair, who is the Lord of all, who has four arms, who is bliss in appearance, whose eyes are like full-blown lotus, who is the store of Jnana and Yoga, who is the spiritual instructor of all the worlds and who is dear to all the Yogins and one who is merciful towards His devotees, who is the witness of all and who is worshipped by all the Siddhas is freed from all sins and will attain (the Spirit)."

Om Satyam (Truth).

Thus ends the third chapter.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Sandilya Upanishad, included in the Atharva-Veda.

Paingala Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I-1. Then indeed Paingala approached Yajnavalkya as a disciple, and, having served him for twelve years, said: Instruct me in regard to the supreme mystery of Aloneness.
I-2. The eminent Yajnavalkya replied: Dear one, in the beginning this indeed existed. It was the eternally free, immutable, everlastingly one, secondless Brahman, full of Truth, Knowledge and Bliss.
I-3. In it existed the primordial and indefinable Prakriti, consisting of Gunas in a state of equipoise, red, white and dark, resembling (the existence of) water, silver, a man and outlines (respectively) in the mirage oyster-shell, a stump and a mirror; what was reflected in it was the Witness Consciousness.
I-4. Having been modified, with the preponderance of Sattva, and named Avyakta (the Unmanifest), it (Prakriti) became the power of concealment. What was reflected in it became God Consciousness. He has Maya under His control, is omniscient, is the initial cause of creation, sustenance and dissolution (of the world) and has the form of the sprouting world. He manifests the entire world dissolved in Him. Due to the power of the Karmas of living beings is the (world) spread out like this cloth and due to their exhaustion again is (the world) concealed. In Him alone does the entire world exist as a folded cloth.
I-5.From the power of concealment controlled by God arose the Power of Projection called Mahat. What is reflected in it is the consciousness of Hiranyagarbha. He has the conceit of ownership as regards Mahat and has a body partly manifest and partly unmanifest.
I-6. From the projective power controlled by Hiranyagarbha arose the gross power called the ego, with the preponderance of Tamas. What was reflected in it was the consciousness of Virat. That Virat who has conceit in the Ego, a manifest body, and is the Chief Person, Vishnu is the protector of all gross things. From that Self (Virat) arose ether; from the ether, air; from air, fire; from fire, water; from water, earth. These five root-elements are composed of the three Gunas.

I-7. Desiring to create, that world-Cause (God), controlling the quality of Tamas, sought to render the subtle root-elements gross. He bifurcated each of the extremely limited elements and again made (the halves) four-fold and added each of the five halves to one-eighths of the other four. With those quintuplicated elements he created endless Crores of macrocosms and for each of these fourteen appropriate worlds and globular gross bodies fit for each planes of them all.

I-8. Having divided into four the Rajas part of the five elements he made Prana with its five fold activity from three parts of it. From the fourth part (of rajas) he fashioned the organ of action.

I-9. Having divided into four their Sattva part, out of the combination of three of them, he made the inner organ with its five-fold activity. From the fourth, he made the organs of Cognition.

I-10. From the combination of Sattva he made the guardians of sense-organs. He cast them, having created them into the macrocosm. Due to his command, conjured with the ego, the Virat protected the gross elements (of the cosmos). Commanded by him, Hiranyagarbha protected the subtle ones.

I-11. In the cosmos they could not, without God, pulsate or act. He desired to vivify them. Splitting open the macrocosm, the channels of Brahman, and the crowns of individuals, he entered into them. Though they were inert, like sentient (beings) they performed each its own functions.

I-12. The omniscient Lord, conjoined with a streak of Maya, on entering the individual bodies, and deluded by it, became the Jiva; due to self-identification with the three bodies (he) became both agent and reaper (of action’s fruits). Possessing the attributes of wakefulness, dream, deep sleep, swoon and death, like a chain of buckets (attached to a water wheel) he becomes troubled and as it were is born and dies, revolving like a potter’s wheel.

II-1. Now Paingala asked Yajnavalkya: How did the omnipotent Lord of all worlds, the author of their manifestation, sustenance and dissolution become Jiva ?

II-2. Yajnavalkya replied: I shall speak distinguishing between the forms of the Jiva and of God, following the generation of the gross, subtle and causal bodies. Listen with exclusive attention. Employing parts of quintuplicated gross elements, the Lord made individual and collective gross, bodies, respectively. Earthy are the skull, skin, intestines, bones, flesh and nails. Watery are the blood, urine, saliva, perspiration and so forth. Fiery are hunger, thirst, heat, lassitude, sexual union, etc. Airy are the movements, the transporting, breathing, etc. Ethereal are lust, anger, etc. The gross body with skin, etc.; is a combination of all this, fashioned through deeds; (it is) the basis of states like childhood, etc., conceit and numerous failings.

II-3. Then he (God) manifested Prana (the Principle of life) from the non-quintuplicated aggregate of the three Rajas parts of the gross elements. The modification of the life principle are the Prana, Apana, Vyana, Udana and Samana. The subordinate functions of Prana are named Naga, Kurma, Krikara, Devadatta and Dhananjaya. Their bases are the heart, the anus, navel, throat and all the limbs. With the fourth part of the Rajas of Akasa, he manifested the organ of action. Its functions are (performed by) the tongue, the hands, the feet, the anus and the generative organ. The objects of these are speech, grasping, movement, excretion and (sex) enjoyment. Similarly from the aggregate of the three Sattva parts of the elements, he manifested the inner organ. Its functions are the mind, the intellect, thought and the ego. The objects of these are imagination, determination, memory, conceit and investigation. Their bases are the throat, the mouth, the navel, the heart and the junction of the eye-brows. With the fourth part of the Sattva of the elements, he manifested the sense of Cognition. Its functions are the ears, the skin, the eyes, the tongue and the nose. Their objects are sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The overlords of the organs (of perception and action) are the directions, the wind, the sun, Prachetas, Asvins, Fire, Indra, Upendra, Death, the moon, Vishnu, Brahma and Sambhu.

II-4. Now, there are five sheaths, that of food, of vital breaths, of mind, of knowledge and of bliss. The sheath of food comes into being from the essence of food alone, develops by it, and is dissolved in the earth that is predominantly of the nature of food. That alone is the gross body. The five breaths, Prana, etc.; together with the five organs of actions constitute the sheath of vital breaths. The sheath of mind is the mind together with the organs of cognition. The sheath of knowledge is the intellect together with the organs of cognition. These three sheaths constitute the subtle body. The sheath of bliss is the knowledge of one's essence. This is the causal body.

II-5. The eight-fold city (the total subtle body) consists of the five organs of cognition, the five organs of action, the five breaths, the five elements like ether, etc., the five-fold inner organ, desire, action and Tamas.

II-6. Vishva (is) the self of knowledge, a reflection of sat, the empirical (being), having conceit in the gross body of the waking state. The field of actions (or born of actions) is also a name of Vishva.

II-7. By God's command, the Sutratman (Hiranyagarbha) entered the subtle body of the individual and supervising the mind became the Taijasa. Taijasa is the appearance. Dream fashioned is a name of Taijasa.

II-8. By God's command (the Self) with the adjunct of Maya together with the Unmanifest, entering the individual causal body became Prajna. The Prajna is undifferentiated, real, 'Having conceit-in-deep-sleep' is the name of Prajna.

II-9. Texts like Tattvamasi declare the identity with Brahman of the real Jiva concealed by ignorance and part of the unmanifest; not of the other two, the empirical and the illusory Jivas (in the waking and dream-state).

II-10. The Consciousness reflected in the inner organ participated in the three states. Merged in the states of wakefulness, dream and deep sleep, like a chain of buckets attached to the water wheel, and afflicted, he (the Jiva) is as it were born and dead.

II-11. Now there are five states – Wakefulness, dream, deep sleep, swoon and death. The wakeful state consists in the cognition of objects like sound, etc.; by means of the organs of cognition like ears, etc.; when aided by the respective (guardian) deities. The Jiva stationed at the junction of the eye-brows and pervading the whole (body) from the foot to the head becomes the agent of all kinds of activities like tilling and heaving. Also the reaper of their respective fruits. Migrating to the other world(s) alone he reaps the fruit of (his) activities. Tired due to activities, like an emperor, he takes to the way leading to the inner chamber (a new body).

II-12. When the instruments of (cognition and action) cease to operate, the dream state comes into being in which there is knowledge of objects and their cognition due to the half-awakened impressions of the waking state. There, Vishva himself, due to the cessation of empirical activities, moving in the system of nerves and becoming Taijasa, enjoys freely the rarity of the world consisting of latent impressions which he illumines with his light.

II-13. The instrument of deep sleep is mind alone. Just as a bird, exhausted by random flights, folds its wings and moves towards its nest, so the Jiva, too, sporting in the spheres of wakefulness and dream and exhausted, plunges into ignorance and enjoys its own bliss.

II-14. The (state of) swoon is like that of death with the sense organs stirring due to fear and unconsciousness when struck with a club, stick, etc., accidentally.

II-15. Different from the states of wakefulness, dream, deep sleep and swoon and occasioning fear to all Jivas from Brahma down to a clump (of grass, etc.,) and resulting in the fall of the body is the state of death.

II-16. Withdrawing the organs of action and cognition and the vital breaths corresponding to varied objects, and attended by desires and actions, and enveloped in ignorance and (the subtle) elements, the Jiva goes to another world. Due to the ripening of the fruits of prior actions, like a worm caught up in a whirl pool (the Jiva) now wins rest.

II-17. As a result of past good deeds, at the end of many lives, men seek liberation. Then resorting to a teacher of Self-realization and (faithfully) serving him long one inquiries into bondage and liberation.

II-18. Bondage results from lack of inquiry; liberation results from inquiry. Therefore investigate at all times. One's own nature may be determined through superimposition and its repudiation. Therefore always inquire (into the nature of) the individual Self and the supreme Self. When the state of Jiva and that of the world are sublated, Brahman alone, non-different from the inner Self, remains.

III-1-2. Then Paingala said to Yajnavalkya: Set forth the explanation of the major text(s) [Maha-vakyas]. Yajnavalkya replied: Thou art That; Thou That art; Thou Brahman art; I am Brahman – One should meditate thus.

III-3. The expressed sense of the word 'tat' is the world-cause, marked by 'other-ness' (mediacy), having Being, Consciousness and Bliss as his characteristics, Maya as his adjunct and omniscience, etc., as his features. The very same with awareness mixed up with the inner sense, the object of the I-notion, is the expressed meaning of 'tvam'. Rejecting the adjuncts of the supreme (God) and the Jiva, viz.: Maya and avidya, the indicated sense of tat and tvam is Brahman, non-different from the inner Self.

III-4. 'Hearing' is investigation into the import of propositions like 'That Thou art' and 'I am Brahman'. Reflection is the exclusive dwelling on the content of what has been heard. Meditation is the fixing of the mind one-pointedly on the reality, made doubtless through investigation and reflection. Concentration, resembling a flame in a windless spot, is the thought (chitta) whose content is solely the object meditated, exclusive of the agent, and the act, of meditation.

III-5. Then (mind's) modifications referring to the Self, though shooting up, remain uncognised; they are only inferred from memory. By this (Samadhi) alone are dissolved Crores of deeds accumulated in the course of beginningless transmigratory existence. Through skilful practice, thence, then, flow, in a thousand ways, streams of nectar. Therefore, the best knowers of Yoga call (this) Concentration dharmamegha, cloud of virtues. When the meshes of latent impressions are entirely obliterated by virtue of it and the accumulation of deeds, good and evil, pulled up by their roots, the proposition (whose content was) earlier mediated on generates unimpeded and immediate realization (resembling, in its certitude) the gooseberry in the palm (of one's hand). Then one becomes liberated in life.

III-6. God desired the non-quintuplication of the quintuplicated elements. Leading the effected macrocosm and the worlds included in it to their causal state, unifying the subtle organs of action, vital breaths, organs of cognition and the four-fold inner sense, reducing all elemental (effects) to the five-fold cause, (he) dissolves in (due) order the earth in water, water in fire, fire in air, air in ether, ether in the ego, the ego in the Mahat, the Mahat in the unmanifest and the unmanifest in the Spirit (Purusha). Due to the dissolution of the adjuncts, Virat, Hiranyagarbha and God are dissolved in the supreme Self.

III-7. Having become non-quintuplicated through the attenuation of (the accumulated) deeds and the ripening of good deeds, and one with the subtle (body), returning to the cause and its cause, the gross body generated by deeds done through the quintuplicated gross elements becomes non-quintuplicated and gets dissolved in the immutable inner Self. Vishva, taijasa and Prajna dissolve in the same due to the dissolution of their adjuncts.

III-8. The microcosm consumed in the fire of knowledge together with (its) causes is dissolved in the supreme Self. Therefore the Brahmana should concentratedly dwell on the identity (of the contents) of the terms tat and tvam. Thence, when the clouds are dispelled as the sun (shines forth), the Self is manifested.

III-9-10. Meditating on the Self, of the size of a thumb, in the centre (of the heart ?) like a smokeless flame, meditate on the illumining Self in the centre, immutable and immortal. The silent sage Liberated-in-life, sits meditating till sleep, till death; he is the blessed one who has performed his duty.

III-11. Giving up the status of Liberation-in-life, when one's body is consumed by time, he reaches the status of disembodied liberation like the wind becoming stirless.

III-12. That immortal and certain (one), devoid of sound, touch, form, taste or smell, without beginning and end, beyond the Mahat, alone remains without impurity and suffering.

IV-1. Then Paingala asked Yajnavalkya: How does a knower (Jnanin) act ? How does he stay in repose ?
IV-2. Yajnavalkya replied: One seeking liberation, having acquired freedom from egotism, etc.; takes 21 generations (of his ancestors and descendants) across the (sea of samsara). The knower of Brahman by himself alone does so 101 generations.
IV-3. Know the Self to be the rider in the chariot; the body verily to be the chariot; the intellect to be the charioteer and the mind to be the reins.
IV-4. The senses, the wise say, are the horses; the objects are what they range over; the hearts are the moving many-storeyed mansions.
IV-5. The great sages aver that the Self combined with sense-organs and mind is the experiencer. Therefore in the heart, immediately, is Narayana well-established.
IV-6. Upto (the exhaustion of) the operative deeds, the homeless liberated Self, behaves like the Slough of a snake, like the moon (in the sky).
IV-7. Shedding the body in a holy spot or (may be) in the home of an eater of dog's flesh, (the liberated one) attains Isolation.
IV-8. Afterwards, make an offering of his body to the cardinal points or bury (his body). Mendicancy is prescribed for the male, never for the other.
IV-9. No observance of (the period of) pollution, no burning (of the corpse), no offering of rice balls or of water, no fortnightly rites (are laid down) for a mendicant who has become Brahman.
IV-10. There is no burning of what is (already) consumed, just as there is no cooking of what is (already) cooked. For one whose body is consumed in the fire of knowledge there is neither ceremonial rice offering nor any (other) rite (of obsequies).
IV-11. As long as the adjuncts (body, etc.,) persist, let one wait upon the teacher. Let him treat the wife of the teacher and his children as he does the teacher himself.
IV-12. When with the knowledge, 'I am That !' 'I am That' -- I, whose mind is pure essence, is pure Spirit, is long-suffering – wisdom is won, when the object of knowledge, the supreme Self, is established in the heart; when the body is dissolved in the state of achieved Peace, then one becomes destitute of the luminous mind and intellect.
IV-13. Of what use is water to one who has had his fill of ambrosia ? Similarly, (for one) who has known his Self, of what use are the Vedas ? No duty remains for the Yogin who has had his fill of the ambrosia of knowledge. If duty be there, he is no knower of Truth. Though stationed at a distance, he is not distant; though embodied, he is disembodied; he is the omnipresent inner self.
IV-14. Making the heart pure, contemplating the well-being (of all), one must experience supreme joy in the thought, 'I am the supreme, the All'.
IV-15. As there is non-difference when water is poured in water, milk in milk and ghee in ghee, so is the case with the individual Self and the supreme Self.
IV-16. When the body is burned by knowledge and knowledge becomes infinite in form, then the knower consumes the bondage of Karma in the fire of Brahman-Knowledge.
IV-17. Thence (follows the state of) the holy non-dual(Reality), named the Supreme Lord, like unto the stainless sky. Self's nature, abiding without adjuncts, is as (that of) water mixed with water.
IV-18. Like the ether the Self in the subtle body. The inner Self like air is not perceived. That stirless inner Self perceives the external (manifold) with the torch of (objective) knowledge.
IV-19. The knower, dead, no matter due to whatever (form of) death, is dissolved (in Brahman that is) like the all-pervasive sky.
IV-20. This dissolution he knows in truth as of the pot-space (in the infinite space). He attains (the status of) the self-sustained light of all-pervasive knowledge.
IV-21. Standing on one foot, let man do austerities for a 1000 years; but (that austerity) is less than one sixteenth of this Yoga of meditation.

IV-22. This is knowledge; this is to be known; one wishes to know all that. Were he to live (even) for a 1000 years, he would not reach the end of the Shastras.
IV-23. What should be known is just the Imperishable; (but) life is fleeting. Avoiding the labyrinths of Shastras, meditate on the Truth (alone).
IV-24. Action are endless – purification, mutterings, (of holy names), sacrifices, pilgrimage to holy places. These (are valid) only till Truth is won.
IV-25. As regards the great-souled ones, the sure cause of liberation is (the knowledge) ‘I am Brahman’. The two words determining bondage and liberation are ‘mine’ and ‘not mine’.
IV-26. The import of ‘mine’ binds the living being; he is liberated by that of ‘not mine’. When the mind is dementalised, no longer is duality cognised.
IV-27. When dementalisation is achieved, That becomes the supreme status. Wherever, then, the mind goes, there, verily, is the supreme status.
IV-28. Thus, there, everywhere, is Brahman well-established. For one who holds ‘I am not Brahman’ no liberation is possible; (it is as futile) as striking the sky with clenched fists or a hungry man’s chewing the chaff.
IV-29. Whoso studies the Upanishad as a rule (every day) is purified by fire (as it were); by air; by the sun; by Vishnu; by Rudra. He has bathed in all sacred waters. He is versed in all the Vedas; has performed all the sacred rites taught by all the Vedas. He has ritually muttered Lacs of Itihasas and Puranas and one Lac times Rudra’s (tantras). He has muttered a million times the sacred syllable, OM. He redeems ten generations of his line, past and future. He purifies the rows of diners of which he is a number. He becomes great. He is purged of the sins of Brahmin-slaughter, drink, stealth, adultery with (even a) teacher’s spouse and of association with those who are guilty of these.
IV-30. That supreme Status of Vishnu spread out, like an eye, in the sky, the enlightened ones always behold.
IV-31. The wise, ever vigilant and diligent in praise richly glorify That supreme Status of Vishnu.
IV-32. OM-Truth – This is the secret teaching.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Paingalopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Bhikshuka Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Mendicant monks desiring liberation are of four kinds: the Kutichaka, Bahudaka, Hamsa and Paramahamsa.
2. The Kutichakas (hut-dwelling ascetics) such as (the sages of yore like) Gautama, Bharadvaja, Yajnavalkya and Vasistha, subsist on eight mouthfuls of food and seek liberation alone by the path of yoga.
3. Next the Bahudaka ascetics (remaining mainly in a holy place of sacred waters) who carry a three-fold emblematic staff (tridanda) and water vessel and wear tuft, sacred thread and ochre coloured garment. Avoiding wine and meat, they subsist on eight mouthfuls of food secured as alms from the houses of Brahmana sages and seek liberation alone in the path of Yoga.
4. Then come the Hamsa ascetics who shelter for one night in a village, five nights in a town and seven nights or more in a holy place. Subsisting on cow's urine and other products from the cow and always addicted to the chandrayana vow, they seek liberation alone in the path of Yoga.
5. Then there are the Paramahamsa ascetics (such as the sages of yore like) Samvartaka, Aruni, Svetaketu, Jadabharata, Dattatreya, Suka, Vamadeva and Harita, who live on eight mouthfuls of food and seek liberation alone in the path of Yoga. They take shelter under the shade of trees, in deserted houses or in a cemetery. They may wear a dress or be unclad. They observe neither Dharma nor Adharma (i.e. they are above the laws of the land). They are not conscious of profit and loss of anything. They discard the doctrines of Visishtadvaita (propounded by Ramanuja), the Suddha Dvaita (of Madhvacharya) and the Asuddha Dvaita. Considering equally a pebble, stone and gold they receive alms from (person of) all castes and see the Atman alone everywhere. Unclad, unaffected by pairs (of opposites, heat and cold, etc.,) receiving no gifts, solely adhering to pure meditation, established in the Atman alone, receiving alms at the prescribed time for sustaining life, (taking shelter during nights) in a deserted house, temple, hay stack, ant-hill, shade of a tree, potter's hut, a place where ritual fire is kept, sandy bank of a river, a mountain thicket or cavity, a hollow in a tree, the vicinity of a water fall, or a piece of clean ground, they are well on the way to realize Brahman; with pure mind, they give up their bodies in the state of renunciation as a Paramahamsa. They are indeed the Paramahamsas (as they become absorbed in Brahman). Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Bhikshukopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Maha Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I-1-4. Then we shall expound the Mahopanishad. They say Narayana was alone. There were not Brahma, Shiva, Waters, Fire and Soma, Heaven and Earth, Stars, Sun and Moon. He could not be happy.
From the (desire of) the Paramatman, the Yajnastoma (hymn known as Avyakta) is said to have arisen.
I-5-6. In it arose fourteen Purushas (Brahman, Vishnu, Rudra, Isana, Sadashiva and nine Prajapatis like Daksha), one maiden (Mula-Prakriti), the ten organs (five of perception and five of action), Mind as the eleventh, bright intellect as the 12th, ego as the 13th, Prana as 14th, Atma as 15th, Buddhi, Kama, Karma and Tamas, five Tanmatras, along with gross elements and the Being was the 25th (Sutratman). Employing him in creation, the supreme Being remained detached. From him do all things come into being.
I-7. Again, Narayana, desiring something else, thought. From his forehead a person arose with three eyes and a trident, having glory, fame, truth, celibacy, austerity, detachment, mind, lordship, seven Vyahritis (Bhur etc.,) along with Pranava, Rik and other Vedas, all metres is his body – so, he is the great Lord.
I-8-9. Then again, desiring something else, he thought – From his forehead, sweat fell and became the wide waters: from it a bright golden egg – in it was born the four-headed Brahma facing east. Narayana became the Vyahriti, Bhur, the chandas Gayatri, the Rig-Veda and the deity, Agni. Facing west he became Bhuvar, the chandas Tristubh, the Yajur-Veda and deity, Vayu. Facing north, he became Vyahriti Suvar, Jagati-chandas, Sama-Veda and the deity Surya. Facing south he became Mahar, chandas Anustubh, Atharva-Veda and Soma.

I-10-13. (Meditate upon) the god of a thousand heads and eyes, source of cosmic well-being, beyond all, eternal Narayana – the universe subsists in Him. Like a lotus calyx, the human heart hangs down, dripping drops of cold water for sustaining life. In its midst is a great flame, facing everywhere, subtle and facing upwards; the great being is present – He is Brahma, Shiva, Indra, undying and self-shining.

II-1-11. Suka, of great lustre, devoted to Natural Bliss, the prince of sages, realised Truth even at birth (without instruction). So also a person may get certain knowledge of the self by himself by long self-analysis. (This is because) the self is beyond description, un-realisable (by worldly means) by the mind and the sense organs; Pure Bliss, atomic, subtler then even ether. The millions of particles undergo generation, subsistence and dissolution inside the supreme Being by rotation of the power.

The supreme being is Ether because there is nothing outside it and yet not the ether, because it is all pure consciousness – it is nothing which can be pointed out (specified such and such) as a thing, reality etc.

He is conscious, being lustrous, yet like rock, because he cannot be (normally) known; causing the picture-like awakening (existence) of the world in himself, the pure ether.

This cosmos is only the manifestation of that being; there is nothing other than that; the differences in the universe are also his manifestation.

Present everywhere, connected with every thing, yet He does not move as there is nowhere to go; He does not exist as there is nowhere (substratum) to exist, yet exists because he is Existence by nature.

Brahman is knowledge, Bliss and the resort (source) of the giver of Jivanmukti. Giving up of all mental desires is the way (to that knowledge). The wise say that the understanding of that Being is the absence of worldly conceptions. The dissolution and creation of the universe are due to the contraction and expansion, respectively, of the Power.

The basis of Vedantic statements, yet beyond words, It is ‘I Reality, knowledge, bliss and nothing else’.

II-12-13. Suka knew all this by his own subtle intellect; then remained with his mind ceaselessly rapt in it.

He did not have the conception that the Atman is real; his mind simply turned away from worldly temptations, the many (material) worldly enjoyments which break very much, like the satisfied Chataka bird from torrent water.

II-14-37. (He knew all but out of respect for tradition, passed at this stage).

Once Suka of pure knowledge asked with devotion, of his father Vyasa, the seer seated alone at Meru mountain, ‘O Seer, how did this elaborate (pomp of) worldly life arise, how does this become dissolved, how much and when ?’

Being thus asked, Vyasa instructed everything to his son.

Having already known all this, Suka did not value the verbal statement.

Sage Vyasa, knowing the son’s thought said, ‘I do not know the truth; you can know all from Janaka, the king of Mithila who knows it correctly. Being told this, Suka went from there, to the earth and the city of Videha, ruled by Janaka.

He was announced to Janaka by the ushers ‘O King, Suka, the son of Vyasa, waits at the entrance’. Desiring of knowing Suka, Janaka said ‘Let him wait’ and tarried for seven days. Then he permitted him into the court and Janaka regaled Suka with women and other luxuries. They did not attract Suka, just as gentle breeze cannot shake a mountain. He simply remained pure, like the full moon, equable, silent and composed. Janaka looked at him and bowed knowing his nature. He said ‘You have (adjured) all worldly actions and for all your desires, what (more) do you desire ? Suka replied ‘this grandiose world – how did this arise and how dissolved ? Janaka narrated all correctly – the same as was spoken by father Vyasa.

'I myself knew this already; the same was told to me by my father; also by you, most eloquent speaker; this is also the matter seen in the Shastras. The mass of mental fancies dies away by the death of the fancies; worldly life is also buried away – this is certain. So great-armed Janaka, pray tell me the truth, firmly – the world gets peace for the reeling mind from you'.

(Janaka) replied): 'O Suka, listen to what I speak, the details of knowledge, the essence of wisdom, by knowing which one can get the status of Liberation in life'.

II-38-41. When there is generated a wiping away of visible phenomena by the mind realizing that there is no (real) visible object, then arises the great joy of Nirvana (Extinction – Liberation).

The best, total adjuration of mental impressions (tendencies) is said by the good (people) to be liberation – it is a pure procedure (whereas) those people whose tendencies are (not given up but) purified, not subject to the danger of re-birth – these wise ones are said to be the enlightened, Liberated-in-life. Strong (intense) brooding over objects is said to be bondage; its thinning out is, Oh Brahman, liberation.

II-42-62. He is said to be 'Liberated while living' who has lost taste for enjoyment by means of penance etc., and no other cause.

Who does not rejoice, nor languish, being detached when joy and grief befall (him) according to time (destiny);

Who is untouched in the mind, by exaltation, anger, fear, lust and meanness;

Who gives up (as if) playfully, the egotist tendency and remains giving up brooding;

Who is free from desire and non-desire as he is introvert and behaves as in deep sleep;

Who is seated delighting in the spirit, replete, pure in mind having got excellent repose and desires nothing in the material world and lives without unction;

Who is un-smeared in the region of the heart with (objects of) knowledge and whose consciousness is not inert;

Who performs without expectation, likes and dislikes (actions) (acts of) joy and grief, virtue and vice, success and failure;

Who is silent, egoless, prideless, avoiding jealousy and does actions without agitation;

Who exists like a detached onlooker and functions without attachment and desire everywhere;

Who has given up internally all of Dharma and Adharma, thought and desire;

Who has given up fully the (worldly) view;

Who eats with equal detachment what is bitter, sour, salty, astringent, seasoned and unseasoned;

Who has given up Dharma and Adharma, joy and grief, death and birth;

Who, free from tension and joy, does not get depressed or elated, with a pure intellect;

Who has given up all desires, all doubts, all conation, all rigid thoughts;

Who is equal towards birth, existence and death, rise and fall.

Who does not dislike or hanker after anything and enjoys incidental pleasure.

Whose thought of worldly life has quietened down, who has aspects and yet is aspect-less, having mind – yet mindless.

Who is active towards all objects, yet is desireless as if they are alien objects, is full in spirit.

II-63-69. He gives up the state of Jivanmukta when this body is consigned to time (death) and enters the state of Adehamukta (liberated without body), like wind which does not move.

Such a person does not rise or set, is neither real nor unreal, nor is he far away, nor 'I' nor 'another'. Other, than him, there is no lustres nor darkness which is steady and profound, ineffable and unmanifest. Not empty vacuum, not having form, neither visible nor vision; nor a mass of creations but existing infinitely.

Undesignated in nature, fuller than the fullest, neither real nor unreal, neither being nor coming into being, pure consciousness; not the Chaitya (world created by mind), endless, ageless, auspicious, having no beginning, middle or end, having no ailment in mind or body. That which is considered as the vision amidst the seer, seeing and object of seeing. O sage, there is surely nothing beyond this.

II-70-73. It is known by yourself as well as heard from a preceptor: – one is bound by one's own fancy and released by being rid of it – detachment towards enjoyment of all visible (external) objects has arisen (in you); all that is to be got has been got by you with a perfect mind; you feel (erred) in regard to your own nature but now being liberated, give up error; you see that you are Brahman itself beyond what is external and internal – you see but you do not see; you are the sole and perfect onlooker (uninvolved).
II-74-77. Suka, reposed silently (passively) in the Supreme Being in the own normal state, devoid of grief, fear and strain. Then he went to the peak of Meru mountain, unimpeded, for trance. There, for thousands of years he remained in 'unqualified trance' and attained rest in himself, like a flame without oil.
Purified of the blemish of manifold thought, in the pristine and pure condition, he became one, with all (worldly) tendencies melting away like water-drop in the ocean.

III-1-15. A lad, Nidagha, prince of seers and enlightened, permitted by his father to go on a pilgrimage, had ablution in three and a half Crores of sacred places, then told Ribhu about himself. 'After bathing in so many places an enquiry (question) has arisen there in my mind:
The world is born only to die and dies only to be reborn – all the actions of the moving and unmoving things are ephemeral; Things such are sources of splendour are sinful and give place to all calamities; unconnected with each other, like iron-stakes, they come together, only by mental fancy. I have lost taste in various things, like a traveller in deserts my mind is tormented as to how this suffering will die down; riches please me not but give only cycles of worries just as houses with children and women cause danger.
This (material) glory in the world is delicate, cause only delusion, does not give happiness. Life is unsteady like a drop of water hanging on to the top of a tender leaf; like an insane person it goes away, leaving the body suddenly. Life causes strain to those whose mind is shattered by contact with the poison from the snake of worldly objects and who lack mature discrimination of the self.
It is (possible) reasonable to envelop wind and to cut into (empty) space, to string together watery waves but not give up attachment to (worldly) life.
(In contrast) by attaining Brahman, what is to be got is got, which causes no grief; it is the place of highest joy.
Even trees live, so do animals and birds – only he (really) lives, whose mind is sustained by contemplation; the others who have no (spiritual) rebirth are only old donkeys.
Shastra is a burden to one who lacks (spiritual) discrimination, knowledge is a burden to one attached (to life); mind is a burden to one without security, body is a burden to one ignorant of the self.
II-16-26. From ego does danger arise, so do bad mental ailments and desire – there is no enemy more dangerous than Ego; whatever in the moving and unmoving world was enjoyed by Ego – all that is unreal; only freedom from Ego is real. The mind runs hither and tither, in vain and with zeal, like a dog in the village. O Brahman, I have been made inert by the pursuit of thirst and eaten by my mind as by a dog.
Containment of the mind is impossible even by drinking up the ocean uprooting Meru and eating fire. Mind is the cause of objects; when it exists, the three worlds exist; when it does not, so do they, so it should be cured with effort.
Whatever wealth of merit I acquire, that Thirst cuts down, like a mouse cutting a string. Thirst is a fickle monkey – it sets foot in impassable places, hankers after fruits even when filled with them; never rests long in a place.
Throat is a bee in the lotus-heart. One moment, it goes to Patala; another, the sky; and another, it hovers in the bush of space; of all the griefs of worldly life, only thirst gives the longest grief; a person (well-guarded) in the harem it involves in great trouble.

Abandonment of brooding is the (preventive) chant for the cholera of Thirst.
II-27-38. There is nothing as pitiable as the body, low and meritless; it exults over a little and suffers over a little. The body is the great abode of the house-holder i.e. the Ego. Let it roll about or be steady – what is it to me, O Preceptor !
This body pleases me not – the senses (animals) are bound by six ropes (vices) – in its yard, Ego leaps about, it is crowded with the servants – the mind. It is frightening with the entrance held by the monkey (tongue) – in it are seen the (bared) teeth and bones. Tell me, what is attractive in the body which is made of blood and flesh, in and out, and which is only to perish – let him trust the body, who sees steadiness in lightnings, autumn clouds, and cities in the sky (illusions). Childhood is the abode of fear from the teacher, mother, father, other people and older children.
One is overwhelmed by the goblin of lust which exists in the cave of one's mind and causes many delusions. Slaves, sons, women, relatives and friends laugh at a man shaken by old age as at a mad man. Desire is full of the defect of helplessness, grows long in old age, the sole friend of all danger and confuse foment is the heart.
The attribution of happiness to worldly life – even this is cut by time like grass by a rat. Time tries to possess selfishly (every thing from) grass and dust (to) Indra and gold, which is the dust of Meru – destroys all and all the three worlds are occupied by it.
III-39-48. What is auspicious about woman – a puppet of flesh – moved by a machine in the cage of the body – having nerves, bones and knots ?
Why are you deluded; separate the skin, flesh, blood and tears and then look at the body. Is it attractive ?
The pearl necklace on the breast is like the current of Ganga on Meru (fleeting and ephemeral) – the same breast is eaten by dogs at the due time like a lump of food, in the cemetery and corners of the directions.
Women are the flame of sin, have the soot of hair, pleasing to the eye but not to be touched; they burn man like grass.
Women are the fuel lovely, yet harmful, of the fires of all blazing at a distance whether they have taste (attachment) or not.
Women are the traps to catch the birds – men, spread by the hunter, Manmatha, the lump of bait, the string of wickedness to men who are the fish in the pond of birth (life) and moving in the mud of mind. I will have none of this woman who is the basket of all defects – gems – the chain of misery. Only he with a woman has desire for enjoyment; where is enjoyment for one who has no woman ? Giving up women means giving up the world; by this one shall be happy.
III-49-54. Even the Quarters (like North) are not seen, regions give other (wrong) instruction; even the oceans and the stars dry up, even the permanent becomes impermanent, even Yogins (Siddhas) perish, demons and others decay; Brahma is reduced (to nothing), the unborn Vishnu too; Shiva becomes non-existent, the lords of the quarters decay. Brahma, Vishnu, Rudra and all classes of creatures run towards destruction, like water-streams towards the marine fire. Dangers come for a moment, so does wealth; birth and death are only for a moment – everything dies. The brave ones are killed by those not brave – a hundred are killed by one. Poison changes its scope (effect) – poison is not poison !
III-55-57. Objects (of the world) destroy (only) one more birth, poison destroys life only once; it is time my mind is burnt in the forest fire of defects. Desires for enjoyment do not flash even in the illusory fatamorgana; so, oh preceptor, waken me quickly with the knowledge of truth. If you do not, I shall take to silence, without pride and jealousy, contemplating Vishnu with the mind like one turned into a painting.

IV-1-24. Nidagha, there is nothing else to be known by you, you are the best of the of the enlightened – you know by your intellect, with God's grace – I shall wipe away the error caused by the impurity of the mind:

Control of inner and outer senses, enquiry, contentment and the fourth, contact with good people – resort to one at least of these giving up everything, with all effort – when one is achieved, the others also are achieved.
One shall develop wisdom only at first; first liberation from worldly life, by means of scripture, contact with good people, penance and self-control. One's own experience (of the self), Shastra and the preceptor form one statement (they yield a single purpose) by practising (the teachings of) which the self is ever looked at (realized).
If you do (achieve) every moment, the avoidance of the sustained fancy and desire, then you will have reached the sacred, mindless state. Samadhi is said to be the freedom of the mind from agency (activity). That itself is oneness, that is the highest and auspicious joy.
You should remain, like a dumb, blind and deaf person, giving up with your mind, the thought of all things as the self.
The vision got through words of (Vedanta) that you are composed, unborn, beginningless and endless, shining, taste (bliss) alone, devoid of symptoms of mind – all this is for the (lower) knowledge and wasteful – only Om is real.
All the visible things in the world are nothing more than the consciousness without vibration – contemplate this.
Or, with mind ever enlightened and performing worldly functions, you remain knowing the oneness of the self, like the calm ocean.
Only the knowledge of Truth is the fire to the grass of mental impressions – this is said to be Samadhi, not mere silence.
Just as the world is active when the much desired sun has arisen (Mani – gem of the day, the sun), so also do the creatures of the world, when the supreme reality is present. So, oh sage, the agentship and non-agentship in the self arise: -- the spirit is a non-agent when there is no desire – an agent by his mere presence.
These two exist in the Supreme Being – agency and non-agency – Resort to it firmly which is the (ultimate) cause of the two. So, by the thoughts, well kindled, that I am always a non-agent, the remains only the state of equality called the supreme immortality.
Listen, O Nidagha, there are born in the world, men of noble qualities in the Nirvikalpa Samadhi, ever in the ascendant and happy like (autumnal) moons in the sky; not depressed during danger, like a gold lotus at night, nor aspiring beyond what is destined, delighting in the path of the good people. They shine through this firm (personality) with merits in the friendship; even-minded and reconciled, pleasing, ever good in conduct. They are within limits like the ocean, placid in mind, do not give up discipline, like the sun.
A wise person should enquire fully 'What am I ? How did this blemish of Samsara develop ?' One should not take to wrong deeds nor live with a low person. Death, the killer of all, should not be looked up in mockery. One should look only at the pure consciousness, avoiding the body, the bone, flesh and blood which are inauspicious, the consciousness being the string that holds together all the creatures like a necklace. Pursuing what is acceptable and avoiding totally what is not – this is the (proper) nature (attitude) of the mind. The seer shall be rid of grief knowing that he is Brahman with his own realization by the path prescribed by the preceptor.
IV-25. Enlightenment arises in the state of detachment wherein the fall of a hundred sharp swords is borne like strokes with lilies, burning with fire like drenching with snow, charcoal like sandalwood, endless fall of arrows like a fall of cool water to relieve summer heat, cutting one's own head like happy sleep, the deprivation of speech like silence, deafness like a blessing.
IV-26-27. The self as always observed by the practice of realization which arises from the instruction of the preceptor. Just as the directions once again as before the delusion, so the world – delusion goes away destroyed by knowledge – consider this.
IV-28. Riches do not help, nor friends nor kinsmen, nor the strain of the body, nor resorting to sacred waters and temples, but only through the conquest of the mind is that condition reached.

IV-29-38. All the miseries, hankerings, unbearable mental pain are lost in people with a calm mind, like darkness in the sun. All creatures subside (attain calmness) in a serene person like children mischievous or soft, in their mother.

Not by drinking elixirs, nor by the embrace of wealth does a person get so much joy as by inner peace.

He is said to be a serene person, who does not exult or feel depressed on hearing, touching, eating, seeing and knowing the good or the bad.

· Whose mind is not agitated, clear like the moon's disc, in death, festival as well as in battle.

Only the serene person shines among ascetics, knowers, sacrificers, kings, men of strength and of virtue.

The calm persons are great who have attained contentment with the drink of Amrita and delight in the self.

He is the contented one who gives up (longing for) what is not got and is even towards what is got, not seeing (i.e. ignoring) grief and joy, who does not admire what is not got, enjoys according to desire what is (actually) got and is benign in his conduct.

Liberation while alive arises when the thought delights in what is got, like a good woman in a harem and this gives the joy of the spirit's own nature.

IV-39-43. The wise person should reflect about the path to liberation, every moment, in the manner of the Shastras, according to the place, convenience and contact with good people, until he achieves repose in the spirit. A person having repose in the fourth state (liberation) and released from the ocean of worldly life, whether he lives or not, be he house-holder or recluse, has no purpose (meaning) in what is done or not done, nor by the delusion of Veda and Smriti; he remains in his pristine condition like the ocean without being churned by the mountain (he is in a transcendental state).

When there arises the pure realization of all as the spirit, then shines the 'body' in the form of the consciousness, beyond origin, space and time.

IV-44-49. The visible cosmos of un-moving and moving things melts away like dream in a (dreamless) sleep. The wise people have attributed, for empirical purposes, names for the supreme Being, such as, Rita Atma, Para Brahma, Truth etc. Just as armlets etc., are only words and meanings, not different from gold, so also is the magical illusion of the cosmos extended by the supreme being.

The perceived being inside the visible world is called bondage, in the absence (dissolution) of the visible, he is realized. What is called the visible is the projection like, 'The universe is you, and I'. The illusion of the world is spread only by the mind – as long as it happens, this is no liberation.

IV-50-57. The cosmos is spread (generated) through the mind by the self-born supreme being. So the visible cosmos is mental in nature. There is no real mind; it is only the flash of things. Know the mind to be only ideation. Understand that where there is ideation there is Mind. Mind and ideation are never different – when the mass of ideations slips away only the (pristine) nature remains.

When the excitement of the visible, viz., 'I and you are the cosmos' dies down, only the sole condition (pristineness) remains. At the achievement of the great dissolution, when all the visible creation etc., become (i.e. known to be) non-existent, only tranquillity remains. There exists the unborn, divine un-ailing, shining being, the unsetting sun, forever, the maker of all, declared to be the supreme self. From whom words turn away (un-reaching), who is realized (only) by the liberated person, whose names like (individual) selves are assumed, not natural.

IV-58-63. O great sage, of the three kinds of ether (space) namely the mental, spiritual and gross, know the spiritual one to be (emptier) subtler than the other two. When the perception passes from one place to another, the interval is to be known as the spiritual region in a moment when you reach the stage where all ideations are rejected, then surely you will reach the state of All Quiet.

That condition (state) is Samadhi which excludes bliss and contains the essence of detachment of Nobility and Beauty – when joy arises strongly by the realization of the falseness of the visible world and like and dislike thin away.

This realization is indeed the knowledge and its object, spiritual in nature – only that is the sole state – all else is false.

IV-64-69. Nidagha, know the world to be an illusion, Airavata in rut is confined to a corner of a mustard, a mosquito fights with groups of lions inside an atom, Meru put inside a lotus is pat out by a bee.

Only the mind made impure by involvement etc., is worldly life. The same mind is said to be the end of (worldly) existence when freed from them. An embodied being attained that condition being brooded over by the mind – freed from bodily tendencies, it (he) is not smeared (affected) by the body's attributes.

I am that (the mind) which turns an aeon into a moment and vice versa. One cannot attain (realize) (truth) without desisting from bad conduct, without calmness and concentration but only through Enlightenment.

IV-70-72. One fears never (and from nothing) on knowing the nature of the self as Bliss unequalled, attributeless and one mass of truth and consciousness. That is beyond all that is beyond, greater than the greatest, lustrous and eternal in nature, wise, ancient Being, worshipped by all gods. As a rule 'I (am) Brahman' these two words are for the liberation of the great. Whereas 'Not Mine' and 'Mine' give liberation and bondage (respectively).

IV-73-75. The creation (of the world) is assumed (projected) by God starting from the vision and ending with Entry (from Generation to Dissolution) in the form of Jiva, Ishvara etc. The nature of the animate and the inanimate worldly life from waking to liberation is projected by Jiva.

Schools from the Trinachiketa to the Yoga depend on Ishvara's illusion (on the still lower level); from the Lokayata to Sankhya the schools depend on Jiva's illusion. Hence, the aspirants to liberation should not consider these schools (being illusory) but the (essential) truth about Brahman is to be considered with steadiness.

IV-76-82. Only one who looks upon everything in relation to consciousness is the knower proper, Shiva, Vishnu and Brahma. Without a good preceptor's grace it is hard to give up objects, to see truth and (to realize) the pristine state. The pristine state is naturally realized by a Yogin who has power generated in him and has given up all (worldly) activity.

When a man perceives even a little difference (between these) then, there will be fear for him, doubtless. A person with wisdom as the eye sees the supreme as present everywhere – one without wisdom does not, like a blind man, the sun.

The supreme being is knowledge alone – so a mortal becomes immortal only by vision of Brahman. When the Great beyond is seen, the knot of the heart snaps, all doubts are smashed and all (worldly) actions die away.

Iv-83-87. Be devoted to Samvid, with single attention, giving up the non-spiritual attitude and unaffected by the condition of the world. In a desert all the water (in mirages) is an illusion – only the desert is real; (similarly) on reflection all the three worlds are nothing more than chit.

He who remains giving up what is implied and expressed is Shiva himself, the best of the Brahman-Knowers. That un-decaying being is the substratum (of all), without comparison beyond words and mind, eternal, omnipotent, omnipresent and subtle.

The mind and the world are (only) the blooming of the supreme being; worldly life is reduced by the restraint (of the mind) and non-restraint (of the spirit).

IV-88-106. I shall tell you the means of curing mental ills – giving up whatever object is attractive, one attains liberation. Pity that worm of a man who cannot do this giving up which is absolutely good and dependent on oneself.

The auspicious path cannot be got without subduing the mind which is giving up desires and which can be achieved by one's own effort. When the mind is cut by the weapon of non-projection, then is achieved (realized) the Brahman, omnipresent and tranquil. Hold yourself, un-excited, released from thought of worldly existence, having great wisdom – the swallowed (controlled) mind is the place of knowledge.

Resorting to great effort, making the mind non-mind, meditating in the heart, with the edge of the wheel of consciousness. Kill the mind without hesitation; your (internal) enemies will not bind you.

'I am he, this is mine', the mind is only so much – this is cut down by the knife of non-projection. The mind is blown away only by the wind of non-projection, like the bank of clouds in the autumn sky. Let the winds of deluge blow, let the oceans become one (to destroy the world), let all the twelve suns blaze; the mind is not affected.

You remain intent upon that state of the empire of truth which can only be non-projection and which gives all success.

Nowhere is the mind seen to be without fickleness – it is the nature of mind, just as heat is that of fire. This power of pulsation existing as mind – know this to be the power which is the ostentatious world. The mind without wavering is said to be Amrita. The same is said to be liberation in the Shastraic doctrine.

This wavering which is another name for ignorance – destroy this with reflection. Sinless one, be free from projections (vikalpas) attaining that position with which the mind becomes united by means of human effort.

Hence, resorting to (human) effort, possessing (i.e. Controlling) the mind with the mind, be form and free from anxiety, in the place without grief. Only the mind can control the mind firmly – who can control a king except another king ?

For those grasped by the crocodile of desire and fallen into the ocean of worldly life and carried away (tossed about) by the whirlpools, only the mind is the life-boat. Break the mind, with the mind, the rope, uplift yourself from worldly life – which cannot be crossed by another.

IV-117-115. Whatever propensity called the mind arises from previous (other) impulses, these a wise one is to avoid and from this there will be reduction of ignorance. Give up the tendency to differentiate; giving up the instinct for (worldly) enjoyment – then giving up both positive and negative (tendencies), be blissful without mental projection.

The avoidance of desire towards whatever is seen is the destruction of the mind, of ignorance. Freedom from desire is extinction (liberation), acceptance of desire is misery.

In the un-enlightened people ignorance is seen to exist. How can it exist in a person of sound wisdom, being accepted only in name. Ignorance swings a person on the steep rocks of samsara, having the thorny bushes of misery, not when ignorance dies away leading to the desire for perception of the self, reducing delusions. When everything is seen, this desire too melts away.

This ignorance is only desire, its destruction is said to be liberation – this results by the destruction of projections. The intense darkness, ignorance, is reduced when, in the sky of the mind, the night of propensities fades away, by the sight of the sun of consciousness.

Iv-116-121. The supreme lord is the ineffable conscious principle present every where and devoid of mental misery. All this (cosmos) is Brahman, eternally conscious, undecaying. The other thing namely mental projections, does not really exist.

Nothing is really born, dies in this triad of worlds, nor is there any reality in various stages of things; only Pure Consciousness is real, which is aloof, shining by itself common to all and free from mental torment.

When this is ever realized as pure, untroubled, serene, calm and unchanging, this mind realizes through reflection – the mind is called so because of reflection.

IV-122-125. So, this thought caused by force, is destroyed by resolution. The mind is bound strongly by the resolution 'I am not Brahman'; it is released by the resolve 'I am Brahman'; it is bound by the concept in keeping with the thought 'I am, lean, bound by misery; I have hands, feet etc.' Whereas, it is released by the conviction following the thought 'I am not miserable, I have no body, the soul is not bound'. One is liberated when ignorance dies away, by the internal conviction. 'I am not the flesh, the bones; I am beyond the body'.

IV-126-131. 'This ignorance is due to imagination, by conceiving the non-spirit as spirit. Resorting to great effort, with supreme resolve, and abandoning desire at a distance, be blissful without fancy.
My son, my wealth, he is mine – such propensity leaps about by the tangle of senses. Do not be ignorant, be wise; give up involvement is samsara – why do you wail like an ignorant person by such attachment ? What is this body of yours, dull, dumb, impure lump of flesh, for which you are overpowered by worldly pleasure and pain ?
It is strange that the true Brahman is forgotten by people ! May you not be smeared by attachment when you are active.
Strange also that mountains are bound by lotus fibre ! This universe is perturbed by the ignorance which is non-existent ! Mere grass has become adamant !

V-1-7. Then I shall speak truly of the seven steps of ignorance, seven of wisdom. The stages between are countless and produced otherwise.
Liberation is existence in natural (spiritual) condition; lapse from it is the concept of 'I' – attributes like desire and hate, born of ignorance, are not for those who do not swerve from their nature as a result of the realization of pure consciousness.
The fall from spiritual nature, the drowning of consciousness in mental matters; there is no other delusion, now or in future, than this.
The existence in spiritual nature is said to be the destruction of mental activity, being in the middle (unaffected), when the mind goes from object to object. The existence-supreme in nature is remaining like stone, all ideation dying out, free from waking and sleep.
That is one's own (spiritual) nature which is not inert, the non-pulsating (placid) mind, when the ego-aspect is dead.
V-8-20. Waking in seed state, (simple) waking, great waking, etc., the seven-fold delusion -when these combine among themselves, they become manifold; hear of its nature.
The first stage is the consciousness undesirable, pure condition, taking the name of mind, Jiva etc., which will come into existence. Waking existing as seed (potential) is said to be waking-in-seed – this is the new or first condition of consciousness.
The waking state (second): after the new stage, the (subtle) concept 'I', 'Mine' arising purely – this is waking, non-existent earlier.
The great waking: the broad (gross) concept arising in a previous birth as 'I' and 'Mine'.
The Waking-Dream: The 'kingdom' of the mind, which has developed or not, as identifying one's self with these.
The dream state: it is of many kinds arising from the waking state, in the form of two-moons, shell-silver, mirage etc. The reflection by the awakened person 'this was seen only a short time, it will not arise – Because of not seeing for long, it is like the working state.'
The dream-waking state: the inert condition of Jiva, giving up the six conditions.
The deep sleep is filled with the future misery – in which condition the world is merged in darkness.
The seven stages have been spoken by me of ignorance – each of these has hundreds of varieties with various splendours.
V-21-35. By knowing the seven stages of knowledge, one will not be sub-merged in the mire of illusions. Many schools speak variously of the stages of Yoga but only the following are acceptable to me: liberation follows after the seven stages.
The first stage of knowledge – is auspicious desire, the second is reflection, the third is thinning of the mind, the fourth is attainment of Sattva, then detachment, the sixth is reflection on objects and the seventh is of the Turiya.
Their explanation: The wise say that the auspicious desire is the desire following detachment – meditation 'why do I remain like a fool, being looked upon by good people ?'
Reflection is good activity (tendency) after the practice of detachment and contact with scriptures and good people.

Thinning of the Mind is the condition where the attachment to sense-objects is reduced by means of auspicious desire and reflection.

Sattvapatti is the mind in the pure Sattva condition by the practice of the above three stages.

The Asamsakti stage is the developed condition, without even a trace of involvement, by means of the practice of the four stages.

Padarthabhavana is the sixth stage resulting from the five stages, delighting in the spirit firmly by the non-contemplation of objects internal and external.

The 'Fourth' (Transcendental) condition (here the seventh) is concentration on one's nature, seeing no real difference, by the long practice of the six stages – this is the stage of Jivanmukti.

The stage 'Beyond the Fourth' is the stage of liberation without the body.

V-36-40. Nidagha, those who have reached the seventh stage, delight in the spirit – they do not drown in pleasure and pain. They do (or not do) whatever is only relevant and minimal. They perform actions following the past, awakened (impelled) by those nearby, like one waking from sleep.

These seven stages can be known only by the enlightened – reaching which condition, even animals, barbarians etc., are liberated with or without the body surely.

Wisdom indeed is the breaking of the knot and the liberation – the dying of the illusion of mirage.

V-41. But those who have crossed the ocean of illusion – they have reached the high position.

V-42-43. The means of calming the mind is said to be Yoga. This is to be known as having seven stages which lead to the status of Brahman.

V-44. There, there is no feeling of 'you' and 'I', one's own and another, nor the perception of existence or non-existence.

V-45. All is calm (needing) no support, existing in the ether (of the heart), eternal, auspicious, devoid of ailment and illusion, name and cause.

V-46. Neither existent nor-existent, nor in between, nor the negation of all; beyond the grasp of mind and words, fuller than the fullest, more joyful than joy.

V-47. Beyond (worldly) perception, the limit of one's hope (horizon) extensive, there is no existence of any thing other than pure cognition.

V-48. The body exists only when there is the relationship of the perceiver, the perceived and the vision connecting them, whereas this position (of liberation) is devoid of such relation (of the distinct) Perceiver, Perception and object.

V-49. 'In between the movement of the mind from object to object there is the unqualified essence of intelligence. This is immaterial perception, reflection; always identify yourself with That.

V-50. 'Your eternal essence (is), devoid of states like wakefulness, dream and deep sleep or Equalities like intelligence and inertness; always identify yourself with that.

V-51. 'Excluding that heart of stone, inertness, always identify yourself with that which is beyond the mind. Discarding the mind in the far distance (you see) you are that which is; be established as That.

V-52. 'First the mind was formed from the principle of the supreme Self; by the mind has this world, with its multitudinous details, been spread out. Wise men ! The nihil, alluringly named, shines forth from the nihil as the blue does from the sky.

V-53. 'When the mind is dissolved, through the attenuation of mental constructions, the mist of cosmic fancies will stand dissolved. The one, infinite, unborn, pristine and pure Spirit shines forth within as the cloudless sky in autumn.

V-54. 'In the sky has sprung up a picture without a painter or a basis (i.e. canvas). It has no perceiver; (it is) one's own experience without the medium of sleep or dream.

V-55. 'In the conscious Self that is the witness, common, transparent and indisputable, as a mirror, are reflected all the worlds without willing (of any kind).

V-56. 'For curing the mind of its fickleness, deliberately reflect that the one Brahman is the Sky of the Spirit, the impartite Self of the cosmos.

V-57. 'As an immense rock, covered with main lines and sub-lines, learn to regard the one Brahman with the three worlds superposed on It.
V-58. 'Now it has been known that this problem world is not produced, as there is no second entity to serve as a cause. This alluring (world) may be looked upon as a marvel.
V-59. 'Long agitated (as I have been, now) I am at rest; there is nothing other than pure Spirit. Laying aside all doubts, discarding all sense of wonder, behold !
V-60(a). 'Repudiating all mental constructions, the principle of mindlessness (may be seen to be) the highest status.
V-60(b). '(The sages), having liquidated their sins, have attained infinitude --
V-61(a). 'Those (sages) whose intellects are great and tranquil and who have risen above the mind.
V-61(b)-62. 'One who has reasoned out (the nature of things according to the Vedanta), the modifications of whose mind (objectively induced) have ceased, who has given up all reasoning (vis-à-vis objects), who has dismissed the objective realm, empty of values but has seized on what alone has eternal value, has a mind that conforms to the eternal Reality.
V-63-66. 'When the net of deep-seated impressions of empirical life is split as a fowler's net by a rat, when, due to dispassion's power, the knots of the heart are loosened, one's nature as Brahman becomes crystal clear owing to the experiential Knowledge (of Brahman) even as muddy water treated with the Kataka-powder. Now one experiences the eternal Witness; no longer one beholds the inert (non-Seen). While (yet) living one is awakened to the supreme Truth that alone is to be realized. One is totally oblivious of the ways of the world, shrouded in the thick gloom of delusion; and due to an eminent degree of mature dispassion, one ceases to have any relish for even the so-called delectables that are (in fact) dry and tasteless.
V-67. 'Like a bird from its cage, from delusions flies forth the mind devoid of attachments, frailties, dualities and props.
V-68. 'The mind filled with (Truth) shines like the full-moon vanquishing all meanness born of perplexities and dismissing all dilemmas due to (idle) curiosities.
V-69. 'Neither I nor aught else exists here; I am but Brahman that is Peace' – thus perceives he who beholds the link between the existent and the non-existent.
V-70. 'As the mind indifferently contacts objects of the senses of sight, etc.; when encountered by chance, so does the man of steadfast intellect regard (courses of) action (in his daily life).
V-71. 'Experience lived through Knowledgeably alone proves satisfactory. The thief recognised and befriended is no longer a thief but turns out to be a friend.
V-72. 'As an unplanned journey to a village, when accomplished, is treated (without) elation) by the travellers, so is the splendour of enjoyment (that may fall to their lot) deemed by those who know.
V-73. 'Even a little diversion of the well-controlled mind is reckoned quite ample; no elaboration of it is sought as such (elaboration) is a source of (future) afflictions.
V-74. A King liberated from detention is glad to eat (but) a morsel. One unattacked and undetained hardly cares for his (entire) kingdom.
V-75. 'Locking one arm in the other, setting one row of teeth on the other and putting some limbs against others, conquer the mind.
V-76. 'From this sea of empirical life there is no way out except victory over the mind. In this vast empire of hell, hard to subdue are one's and adversaries – the sense-organs – who ride on the unruly elephants, the sins, and are armed with the long arrows of cravings.
V-77. 'In the case of one whose egoistic vigour has been attenuated and who has vanquished his foes, the sense-organs, latent impressions, intent on enjoyments, wear off as lotuses do in winter.
V-78. 'Like no eternal spirits; latent impressions cut capers only as long as the mind remains unvanquished for lack of intense cultivation of the non-dual truth.
V-79. 'Of the men of discrimination, the mind, I deem, is a servant as it accomplishes what is sought; a minister as it proves the cause of all gains; and a loyal chieftain as it regulates the assailing sense-organs.

V-80. ‘The mind of the wise, I deem, is a loving spouse as it pleases; a protective parent as it guards and a friend as it marshals the best (arguments)
V-81. ‘The paternal mind, well studied with the eye of the Shastras and realized in (the light of) one’s own reason; abolishes itself in yielding supreme perfection.
V-82. ‘Extremely perverse and inveterate (in itself), (once) well-awakened and controlled and purged, the delightful mind-gem shines (in one’s heart) powered by its own virtues.
V-83. ‘O Brahmin ! To win perfection be luminous after washing clean, in the waters of discrimination, the mind-gem steeped in the mire of many flaws.
V-84. ‘By wholly overcoming the inimical senses, resorting to sovereign discrimination, and beholding the Truth with the intellect, cross the sea of empirical existence.
V-85. ‘The wise know that concern, as such, is the abode of endless pains; they also know that unconcern is the home of joys, both here and hereafter.
V-86. ‘Bound by the cords of latent impressions this world revolves (constituting empirical life). In manifestation, they agonise; when obliterated they make for well-being.
V-87. ‘Though intellectual, though extremely and variously learned, though high-born and eminent, one is bound by cravings as a lion is with a chain.
V-88. ‘resorting to supreme personal endeavour and perseverance and conforming to Shastraic conduct unwaveringly, who may not win perfection ?
V-89. ‘I am this entire cosmos; I am the supreme Self that lapses not. Nothing other than me is – this vision is the supreme assertion of the Self as ‘I’ (or, the first level of self-assertion).
V-90. ‘I transcend all; I am subtler than a hair’s tip’ – such, O Brahmin, is the second and beneficent mode of self -assertion.
V-91. ‘This (mode) promotes liberation and not bondage. (Witness) the case of the Liberated in-life.
V-92. ‘The conviction that I am no more than a bundle of parts like hands, feet, etc.; is the third mode of self-assertion – it is empirical and petty.
V-93. ‘This root of the evil tree of empirical life is wicked and must be renounced. Smitten by this, the worldly man rapidly falls ever lower.
V-94. ‘Discarding this wicked mode of self-assertion from one’s life, in due course, by virtue of the beneficent mode, one achieves liberation in peace.
V-95. ‘Resorting to the first two non-worldly modes of self-assertion, the third worldly mode that occasions pain must be renounced.
V-96. ‘Next discarding even the first two, one becomes free from all modes of self-assertion and thus ascends to the transcendent status (of freedom).
V-97. ‘Bondage is nothing but craving for objective enjoyment; its renunciation is said to be liberation. Mind’s affirmation is perilous; its negation is great good fortune. The mind of the Knower tends to negation; the mind of the ignorant is the chain (of bondage).
V-98. ‘The (timeless) mind of the Knower is either blissful nor blissless; neither fickle nor stirless. It neither is nor is not. Nor does it occupy a mind position among all these – so maintain the wise.
V-99. ‘Just as, due to subtlety ether, illumined by the Spirit, is not (objectively) perceived, so the impartite Spirit, though all perceiving, is not observed.
V-100. ‘The imperishable Spirit, free from all imaginings and beyond nomenclature, has been assigned designations like one’s Self, etc.
V-101-102. ‘Transparent like a hundredth part of ether, partless as manifested in those who know, ever aware of the sole Self of all that is pure in empirical life, this Spirit neither sets nor rises; neither rises up nor lies (low); neither goes nor returns; it is neither present nor absent here.
V-103. ‘This Spirit has a flawless mode (of its own), indubitable and propless.
V-104. ‘At the very outset, purify the disciple through excellence such as mind’s tranquillity, restraint of sense-organs, etc. Next impart to him the teaching that all this (world) is Brahman, viz., the purified

Thou.
V-105. ‘One who teaches an ignoramus or half-awakened (disciple) that ‘all this is Brahman’ will (in effect) plunge him in an endless series of hells.
V-106. ‘But a disciple whose intellect has been well-awakened, whose craving for objective enjoyments has been extinguished, and who is free from all ‘expectations’ is rid of all impurities born of nescience; the wise teacher may instruct him.
V-107. ‘Like its effulgence where there is light, like the day where there is the sun, like the fragrance where there is a flower, so is there a world where there is the Spirit.
V-108. ‘When the view-point of Knowledge is purged, when (the dawn of) awakening spreads vastly, this very world will cease to appear as real.
V-109. ‘Established in yourself, you will realize aright the strength and weakness of the flood of my words (of instruction) – (you will realize it) by the highest mode of nescience that spurs the effort to wipe out the sphere of the petty Self.
V-100. ‘By it (the highest mode of nescience) is won the knowledge that consumes all errors, O Brahmin ! One missile puts another out of action; one flaw destroys its opposite.
V-111. ‘One poison may be neutralised by another; an enemy may destroy another. Such is the wonderful riddle of elements that pleases through self-destruction !
V-112. ‘The real nature of this riddle is not perceived. As it is observed, it perishes – observed with the flaming imagination whose content is: ‘in Truth it exists not at all’.
V-113. ‘He who cherishes with the (creative) and liberating imagination (the thought that) all this is spirit, that the perception of difference is nescience, should renounce this (nescience) in all possible ways.
V-114. ‘sage ! That ultimate Status which is said to be imperishable is (in truth) not won. Twice-born sage ! Speculate not as to whence this (nescience) has arisen.
V-115. ‘Speculate rather on: ‘how shall I destroy it ? Once it is dissipated and dispelled you will (renunciation-)cognise that status.
V-116. ‘That integral status (includes the knowledge) ‘Whence this Maya has come and how it has perished. Therefore try to treat (with remedies) this abode of diseases (i.e. Maya).
V-117-118(a). ‘So that she may not subject you again to the sufferings of birth (etc.,). ‘The sea of the Spirit shines forth in one’s Self with its splendid inner vibrations. With certitude meditate inwardly that is homogeneous and infinite.
V-118(b). ‘The power of the Spirit in the sea of the Spirit is a slightly agitated state of the latter.
V-119. Like a wave in the sea, that pure Power shines forth there, just as the wind automatically blows in the sky.
V-120. ‘In the same way, the Self in itself, by its own power, becomes mobile. That omnipotent Deity flashes forth for a moment.
V-121. ‘Whose potencies of space, time and action are not enhanced (by any means); who is pre-eminently established in her infinitude, being fully conscious of her own essential nature.
V-122. Un-comprehended, She brings into being a finite form. When that supremely enchanting Deity brings forth that (finite) form.
V-123-124(a). Other ideas (views), names, number, etc.; follow her. The individual self (‘Knower of the field’) is the designation of this form of the Spirit, O Brahmin; it is the basis of space, time and activity, and its forms are rooted in manifold (mental) constructions.
V-124(b). ‘He (‘the Knower of the field’) generating latent impressions, again, assumes the form of egoism.
V-125. ‘The tainted egoism, as determiner, is called intellect, which, imagining forms, becomes the base for cogitation (or mind).
V-126. ‘With its profuse imaginings the mind slowly is (transmuted into) sense-organs. The wise deem the body with its hands and feet (nothing but) the senses.

V-127. ‘Thus, indeed, in stages descends the Jiva, bound by the cords of imaginings and impressions, and encompassed by a multitude of sufferings.
V-128. ‘The potent Spirit, thus degenerating into dense egoism, passes voluntarily into bondage as a silk-worm in its cocoon.
V-129. ‘And, like a lion in chains, becomes totally dependent finding itself within a net of its own imaginings and nothing more.
V-130. ‘Sometimes (it operates as) mind, sometimes as intellect; sometimes as cognition; sometimes as (pure) action. Sometimes it is egoism and sometimes it is held to be what is thought.
V-131. ‘Sometimes it is called Prakriti and sometimes it is held to be Maya. Sometimes it is designated a ‘flaw’ and sometimes referred to as ‘action’.
V-132. ‘Sometimes it is proclaimed as bondage and sometimes accounted the ‘eight-fold case’. Sometimes it is said to be avidya and sometimes it is identified with ‘desire’.
V-133. ‘Bearing within itself, as its seeds the fig-tree, this entire empirical sphere that fashions the cords of cravings, the Jiva is verily a tree sans fruits.
V-134-135(a). O Brahmin ! Like an elephant stuck in the morass, is the mind consumed in the flames of worries, crushed by the python of rage, attached to the waves of the sea of lust, and oblivious of its own grand progenitor (the Spirit): -- rescue it.
V-135(b)-136. ‘Thus are the Jivas (living beings) phases of the Spirit and established through bringing the empirical sphere into being. Their forms, in lakhs and Crores, have been assigned by Brahma. Numberless (Jivas) were born in the past and even now are being brought forth on all sides.
V-137. ‘Others also will be born like multitudes of water-drops from a water-fall. Some of them are in their first birth; others have (already) had more than a hundred births.
V-138. ‘Yet others have (already) had countless births. Some will have two or more births, besides. Some are born as sub-human and super-human beings, gifted with music and Knowledge; some as mighty reptiles.
V-139. ‘Some of (these living beings) are (to be identified with) the sun, the moon and the lord of waters; others with Shiva, Vishnu and Brahma. Some divided themselves as Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas, Sudras.
V-140. ‘Others with grass, herbs, trees, with their fruits, roots and winged insects. Jivas are (also to be identified with) trees like the Kadamba, the Jambira, the Sama, Tala and Tamala.
V-141. ‘And with mounts like Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Mandara and Meru; and with the seas of salt water, milk, ghee and sugarcane-juice.
V-142. ‘And with the vast quarters, and fast-running rivers; some of these sport high above (the earth); some descend and again fly upwards.
V-143-144(a). ‘Hit ceaselessly by death, as though they are balls hit by the hands, these Jivas are ceaselessly struck down by death as balls are by the hand. Having undergone thousands of births, again, some unwise ones despite (a degree of) discrimination, fall into the turmoils of worldly life.
V-144(b)-145. ‘The principle of the Self, undetermined by space, time, etc.; by virtue of Its power, just sportively assumes a body spatial and temporal. Possessed of innate tendencies (to manifest) various orders of living beings, Itself is the supreme (Lord and Creator) that becomes the mind, that is unstable and inclined to construction and dissolution.
V-146-148(a). ‘In the beginning in a moment, the Constructive Power of the Mind fashions the transparent (image of) space inclined to own, as its essence, the seed of sound. Then, becoming dense, by the process of gross vibrations, that mind brings forth the vibrations of air inclined to own the seed of touch.
V-148(b)-149(a). ‘Of these two space and air, the bases of sound and touch, by intense repetitive frictions, is generated the fire.
V-149(b)-150. ‘Then the mind enriched by these three including rudimentary form proceeds to the notion of pure liquidity and, instantaneously, becomes aware of the coolness of water followed by the perception of water.

V-151. ‘The mind thus enriched by such attributes meditates all at once on rudimentary smell; thence arises the perception of the earth-element.
V-152. ‘Next this body encompassed by the rudimentary elements discards its subtleness beholding in the sky a flash like a spark of fire.
V-153. ‘Conjoined to the element of egoism and the seed of the intellect, this bee in the lotus of the elemental heart is (now) styled the Puryashtaka.
V-154. ‘Due to intensity of yearning in it, by meditating on a resplendent embodiment, the mind grows grosser as a Bilva-fruit does through the process of ripening.
V-155. ‘That effulgence in the sky, shining like liquid gold in a crucible, assumes a form with definite contours by virtue of its inherent nature.
V-156. ‘Upwards is the round head; downwards the feet. Of the two sides are the hands and in the middle what functions as the belly.
V-157(a). ‘In course of time the body (indwelt by the mind) gets fully developed and becomes flawless.
V-157(b)-158(a). ‘That same divine Brahma, the grandfather of the entire world, gets established in intelligence, purity, strength, energy, forms of knowledge and lordship.
V-158(b)-160(a). ‘Beholding his own attractive and pre-eminent body, the blessed Lord, the range of whose perception embraces all the three divisions of time, wondered what first would make its appearance in this supreme space whose essence is pure Spirit and whose limits are nowhere.
V-160(b). ‘Thus wondered Brahma whose vision was as flawless as that of Shiva.
V-161. ‘In large groups he behold bygone orders of (cosmic) manifestation. Next he recollected them all in the due order of all their attributes.
V-162. ‘(Then) sportively he fashioned, by (sheer) imagination, variegated living beings with their unique patterns of behaviour – the whole constituting, as it were, a city in the sky.
V-163. ‘For securing their happy state as well as liberation, for attaining righteousness, love and wealth, he set up Shastras endless and varied.
V-164. ‘As the existence of the world has been set up by mind in the form of Brahma, it lasts only as long as Brahma; with his destruction, the world too perishes.
V-165. ‘O best of Brahmins, in reality nothing anywhere, at any time, is born or is destroyed. All that is seen is unreal (neither is nor is not).
V-166. ‘Give up the idle show of empirical life, a very pit of the serpents of cravings. Knowing this to be unreal, reduce them all to the status of their ground.
V-167. Vis-à-vis ‘the city in the sky’, whether adorned or not, or the parts of its constitutive case (the nescience), progeny etc., what rationale is there for pleasures and pains ?
V-168. ‘Sorrow – and not a sense of gratification – is in order as regards wealth and spouse in their nourishing state. Who can have a sense of reassurance here as the nescience of delusion gets more and more entrenched ?
V-169. ‘Those very (empirical) experiences which, in their abundance, cause a fool to get attached (to this world) are the source, in the case of a wise man, of his dispassion.
V-170. ‘Therefore, Nidagha, with your awareness of Truth, cultivate indifference to whatever has perished among the activities of empirical life and accept whatever offers itself.
V-171. ‘The marks of a man of discrimination are spontaneous indifference to experiences that do not come of their own accord and hearty acceptance of those that do.
V-172. ‘Knowing and resorting to the untarnished middle status between the real and the unreal, neither cling to nor fly from the objective realm, external or internal.
V-173. ‘The intelligence of a wise and active man, free from attachment and aversion, remains untarnished like a lotus leaf unmoistened by water.
V-174. ‘O twice-born (sage), if the glamour of objects charms not your heart, then, having grasped what ought to be known (achieved true wisdom), you have crossed the sea of empirical life.

V-175. ‘In order to win the pre-eminent Status separate, by means of supreme wisdom, the functioning mind from (all) latent impressions as one does a strong scent from the flower.
V-176. ‘The superior men of discrimination who board the Ship of Wisdom cross this sea of empirical life full of the waters of latent impressions.
V-177. ‘Those men who know this world as well as what is beyond conform to all things. They neither shun nor seek the ways of the world.
V-178. ‘The sprouting of mental construction consists in Spirits’ proneness to objects (‘knowables’) – the Spirit that is infinite, that is the Truth of the Self, and that is Universal Being.
V-179. ‘That very sprouting having lightly come into being gradually fills out, developing into the mind; then it promotes inertness like a cloud.
V-180. ‘Imagining objects as other than the Self, as it were, the Spirit is transformed into a constructive process, as it were; just as a seed is into a sprout.
V-181. (Mental) construction is indeed the process of putting together (of constituents); it comes automatically into being and waxes fast unto pain, never unto delight.
V-182. ‘Indulge not in mental construction; in a state of stability, dwell not on positive existence. Persevere in stopping mental construction. Thus one never again pursues the trail of construction.
V-183. ‘By the mere absence of imagination, (the process of) mental construction dwindles automatically. (One act of) construction leads to another. Mind battens on itself, O sage !
V-184. ‘Getting (off construction) abide in the Self. Once this is done, what can prove difficult ? Just as this sky is empty, so is the entire cosmos.
V-185. ‘Wise Brahmin ! Just as a paddy husk or the black coating on copper, through effort, is destroyed so also may the mental impurities of man.
V-186. ‘As a grain of paddy, the innate impurity of a Jiva, too, can be destroyed in ample measure. There is no doubt in that. Therefore, strive’.

VI-1. ‘Giving up the deeply felt and seductive glamour, consisting in imagination, of empirical life, you remain what you (really) are; O sinless one ! Sportively roam the world.
VI-2. ‘By means of the trenchant and creative thought, "I am a non-agent in all contexts", there remains but the (perception of) sameness, called, "supreme immortality".
VI-3. ‘In regard to all elaborations of pain due solely to one’s sense of agency, (finally) there remains but sameness when one’s mental constructions dwindle away.
VI-4. ‘This sameness, amidst all emotional moods, is the status grounded in Truth. Anchored in it the mind is no more reborn.
VI-5. ‘O, sage ! Renouncing all forms of agency and non-agency and abolishing the mind, you remain what you (really) are; be steadfast.
VI-6-7. ‘Stead-fast in the final stability, give up the very tendency to renunciation. Giving up everything together with its cause – the dichotomy between Spirit and mind, light and darkness, etc.; the latent impressions and what generates them – as well as the vibrations of vital breath, (be you) sky-like with a stilled intellect.
VI-8. ‘Having totally wiped out from the heart the massed rows of latent impression, one who remains free from all anxiety is the liberated, is the supreme Deity.
VI-9. ‘I have seen all that is worth seeing; through delusion have I wandered in all the ten directions of space. For the ignorant who roams, through reasoning, (the regions of) empirical existence, the latter shrinks into the dimensions of a cow’s hoof.
VI-10. ‘In the body with its ins and outs, up and down, in the regions between, here and there, there is the Self; there is no world that is not the Self through and through.
VI-11. ‘There is nothing in which I am not; there is nothing which is not That, through and through. What more do I want ? All things are essentially Being and Spirit, pervaded by That.
VI-12. ‘All this is indeed Brahman; all this extended reality is the Self. I am one and this is another – give up this delusion, O sinless one !

VI-13. ‘The superimposed (objects) cannot possibly be in the eternal, extended and undivided Brahman. There is neither sorrow, delusion, old age nor birth.
VI-14. ‘What (in reality) is here only That exists. Always be calm, experiencing things as they occur and entertaining no desire whatsoever.
VI-15(a). Neither shunning nor grasping, be always calm.
VI-15(b)-16. ‘Magnanimous one ! Flawless cognitions swiftly fly to him who finds himself in his last birth, just as pure pearls lodge themselves in the best bamboo. This example has been offered to suit best those who develop dispassion.
VI-17. ‘The certitude of the joy of cognition (results from) intimate contact of the perceiver and the object. We duly meditate on that stable Self, manifest in the truth of one’s self (the source of the joy of cognition).
VI-18. ‘Giving up the seer’s perception and the object together with latent impressions, we duly meditate on the Self that manifests Itself first as perception.
VI-19. ‘We duly meditate on the eternal Self, the illumination of all lights, that occupies the middle ground between the "is" and the "is not".
VI-20. ‘Discarding the Lord who reigns in the heart, those who run after (some other) God are in fact seeking a gem after casting away the Kaustubha already in their possession.
VI-21. ‘As Indra smites mountain peaks with his thunder-bolt, so should one strike, with the rod of discrimination, these adversaries in the form of sense-organs, both active and passive.
VI-22. ‘In the evil dream (seen) in the night of empirical life – in this empty illusion of the body – everything experienced (as the extended) delusion of empirical) life is impure.
VI-23. ‘In childhood one is stupefied by ignorance; in youth one in vanquished by woman. In the period that remains one is worried by one’s wife. What can one – the meanest of men – accomplish ?
VI-24. ‘(But wail as follows): Unreality rides on the top of existence; ugliness on the top of things lovely; pains ride on the top of pleasures. What single entity may I resort to ?
VI-25. ‘Even those men pass away on the closing and opening of whose eyes depends world’s disaster or prosperity. Of what account are folk like my (humble) self ?
VI-26. ‘Empirical life is said to be the very limit of sufferings. When (one’s) body has slipped into its depths, how can pleasure be won ?
VI-27. ‘I am awake ! I am awake ! ! Here is the wicked thief (who has been pestering me, viz.,) the mind. I shall destroy him; I have long been under his assault.
VI-28. ‘Don’t be depressed. Seek not to seize what is fit only to be eschewed. Giving up (ideas of both) rejection and seizure, remain rooted in what is neither to be rejected nor seized; be wholly firm.
VI-29-30. ‘The Knower rid of things to be rejected or seized has, without latent impressions, qualities (such as): freedom from desire and fear, conation and action; eternity, equality, wisdom, gentleness, certitude, steadfastness, amiability, contentment, charity and soft-spokenness.
VI-31-32. ‘With the sharp needle of (penetrating) intelligence, tear up the nest cast by the fisher-woman of Craving in the waters of transmigratory life – a net made of the cords of (variegated) thoughts, even as a strong wind scatters (the vast) net of clouds. Then abide in the vast status (as immutable Brahman).
VI-33. ‘Cleaving the mind with the mind itself as one does a tree with an axe, and attaining the holy status, at once, be steadfast.
VI-34. ‘Standing or moving, sleeping or walking, dwelling in a place, flying aloft or falling down, inwardly sure that (all) this is but unreal, eschew (all) clinging.
VI-35. ‘If you depend on this objective (world), you have a mind and are in bondage. If you reject the objective (world), you have no mind; you are liberated.
VI-36. ‘"Neither am I nor is this real" – so thinking remain absolutely immovable, in the intervals of subjective and objective awareness.

VI-37. Rid of what enjoys and what is enjoyed, set in the middle ground between the object and its enjoyer, be ever given to the contemplation of your Self as (pure) awareness.
VI-38. ‘Dwelling on "the taste", be filled with the supreme Self; resorting to the propless, steady yourself off and on.
VI-39. ‘Those who are bound by ropes are released: (but) none in the grip of craving may be released by anyone. Therefore, Nidagha, shed craving by renouncing all mental constructions.
VI-40. ‘Cutting through this innate and sinful craving whose essence is egoism with the needle of self-abnegation, be stationed in the border land of the future and the present, entirely quelling all fear whatsoever.
VI-41-43. ‘Rejecting the inveterate idea. "I am (the very) life of these objects and these objects are my (very) life !" "without these I am nothing and they are nothing without me" and reflecting, "I do not belong to (any) object and no object belongs to me", the intellect becomes tranquillised and the actions are performed in a sporting spirit. Latent impression (of such an agent) stand renounced. This renunciation, O Brahmin, is extolled as worthy of profound meditation !
VI-44. ‘Due to the equilibrium of the intellect, total obliteration of latent impressions is acquired. That (indeed) should be deemed the obliteration of latent impressions, having won which one gives up (even) the body as one is free from all sense of possessions.
VI-45. ‘He is called the Jivanmukta (Liberated-in-life) who lives after giving up all conceivable objects; for he has recreatively given up all latent egoistic impressions.
VI-46. ‘Having given up all baseless (mental) constructions and the latent impressions, he who has won tranquillity is the best among the Knowers of Brahman; he is the liberated. His renunciation may only be deduced.
VI-47-48. ‘These two fearless ones, unconcerned about pleasures and pains that occur in the due course of time, have achieved the status as Brahman – the (passive) renouncer and (the active) Yogin, both of whom are self-disciplined and tranquillised. O Lord of sages ! For they neither strive for nor reject anything amidst the inner, mental modifications.
VI-49-50(a). ‘He is called the Jivanmukta who lives as one in dreamless sleep, who is neither lifted up nor depressed by the emotions of joy, intolerance, fear, anger, lust and helplessness and who is free from all objective pre-occupations.
VI-50(b). ‘the craving born of latent impressions, oriented towards external objects, is said to be bound.
VI-51-52(a). ‘The same freed from latent impressions bound up with objects, as such, is said to be liberated. Know that the desire culminating in the prayerful thought, "let this be mind", to be a strong chain that spawns suffering, birth and fear.
VI-52(b)-53(a). ‘The magnanimous man renounces (this enchaining desire) vis-à-vis objects both real and unreal and wins the status that is sublime.
VI-53(b)-54(a). ‘Then outgrowing the attachment both to bondage and liberation and the states of pain and pleasure – attachment both to the real and unreal – remains unshaken like the unagitated ocean.
VI-54(b). ‘Good Sir, man may have a four-fold certitude.
VI-55. ‘Engendered by (my) mother and father, I am (the body) from the foot to the head. This particular certitude, O Brahmin, results from the observation of the worries of bondage !
VI-56. ‘Good men have second kind of certitude that promotes liberation – viz.: "I am beyond all objects and beings; I am subtler than the tip of a hair".
VI-57. ‘Best of Brahmins, a third kind of certitude has been affirmed promotive of liberation alone (consisting in the thought) " All this objective world, the entire indestructible universe, is but myself".
VI-58. ‘Also there is a fourth certitude, yielding liberation (that consists of the assertion) "I and the entire world are empty and sky-like at all times".
VI-59. ‘Of these the first is said (to result from) the craving that earns bondage. Those having the last three are sportive, extremely pure and are liberated in this (very) life. Their cravings have been (wholly) purified.

VI-60. ‘Great-souled (sage), the mind seized with the certitude "I am everything" is never born again to taste of sorrow !
VI-61. ‘that Brahman has been (identified with) emptiness, Prakriti, Maya and also consciousness. It has also been said to be "Shiva, pure Spirit, the Lord, the eternal and the self".
VI-62. ‘There flourishes but the non-dual Power that is the supreme Self through and through; it sportively builds up the universe with (factors) born of (both) duality and non-duality.
VI-63. ‘He who resorts to the status beyond all objects, who is through and through the Spirit that is perfect, who is neither agitated, nor complacent, never suffers in this empirical life.
VI-64. ‘Who performs the actions that fall to his lot, ever viewing foe and friend alike, who is liberated from both likes and dislikes is neither sad nor hopeful.
VI-65. ‘Who utters what pleases all; speaks pleasantly when asked; and who is conversant with the thoughts of all beings never suffers in this empirical life.
VI-66. ‘Resorting to the primeval vision (of Reality) marked by the renunciation of all objects and Self-established, fearlessly roam the world, as a (veritable) Jivanmukta.
VI-67. ‘Inwardly shedding all cravings, free from attachment, rid of a(all) latent impressions, (but) externally conforming to established patterns of conduct, fearlessly roam the world.
VI-68. ‘Externally simulating enthusiastic activity, but, at heart, free from it all, apparently an agent (but) really a non-agent, roam the world with a purified understanding.
VI-69. ‘Renouncing egoism, with an apparent reason, shining like the sky, untarnished, roam the world with a purified understanding.
VI-70. ‘Elevated, clean of conduct, conforming to established norms of conduct, free from all inner clinging, leading, as it were, an empirical life.
VI-71. ‘Resorting to the inner Spirit of renunciation, apparently he acts to achieve (some) aim (or other). Only small men discriminate saying: One is a relative; the other is a stranger.
VI-72-73(a). ‘For those who live magnanimously the entire world constitutes but a family. Resort to the status free from all considerations of empirical life, beyond old age and death, who are all mental constructions are extinguished and where no attachments finds lodgement.
VI-73(b). ‘This is the status of Brahman, absolutely pure, beyond all cravings and sufferings.
VI-74(a). ‘Equipped thus and roaming (the earth), one is not vanquished by crisis.
VI-74(b)-75. ‘By the prop of detachment and excellences like magnanimity, lift up your mind yourself perseveringly in order to enjoy the fruit of Brahmic freedom.
Through detachment, it achieves perfection along the path of negation (of the object).
VI-76-77(a). ‘(The mind, then) is emptied of all cravings as the pure lake is (of water) in the season of autumn.
Why is not an intelligent man ashamed of clinging to the same dry routine of insipid actions, day after day ?
VI-77(b). ‘Bondage is fashioned by consciousness (as subject) and its objects; once free from these, liberation follows.
VI-78. ‘"Consciousness (Spirit) is never an object; all is Self" – this is the essence of all Vedantic doctrines. Resorting to this sure doctrine, behold (the world), intellectually and freely.
VI-79. ‘You will independently achieve the Self, the status of bliss (holding): I am Spirit, these worlds are Spirit, the directions (in Space) are Spirit; these manifested beings are Spirit.
VI-80-81. ‘"I am the glory (mahas), devoid of objects and perceptions, wholly pure of form, eternally manifest, rid of all appearances, seer, witness, spirit, free from all objects, the full-orbed light in essence, for which no knowables exist, Knowledge pure and simple".
VI-82. "King of sages ! With all mental constructions wiped out, all yearnings abolished, resort to the status of certitude and be self-established in the Self.
VI-83. The Brahmin seeker after Truth who dwells upon the Mahopanishad becomes a well versed Vedic scholar. (If) uninitiated, he becomes initiated; he becomes purified by fire, by air, by the sun, by the moon, by Truth, by all agents of purification. He becomes known to all gods; is cleaned (as if he has dipped) in all sacred waters. He dwells in the thoughts of all gods. He has (as it were) performed all sacrifices. To him accrue the fruits of having repeated the Gayatri sixty thousand times; of having repeated Itihasa and Puranas and Srirudra a Lac of times; of having repeated Omkara ten thousand times. He hollows the rows (of living beings) as far as the eye reaches; and seven generations both in the past and in the future. So declares Hiranyagarbha. 'Through repetition of sacred utterances one wins immortality' – this is the Mahopanishad.

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Mahopanishad, included in the Sama-Veda.

Sariraka Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Then, the body is a combination of the five elements like earth. What is hard is earth, what is liquid is water, what is hot is fire, what moves is air, what is porous is space.
The organs of sense are ear etc.: the ear is in the sky (space), the sense of touch (skin) is in the air, the eye in the fire, tongue in water, smell in earth. Thus for the senses sound etc., are the objects.
The organs of action are: tongue, hands, feet, arms and genitals. Their objects are: speech, catching, walking, voiding and joy. These have arisen from earth etc., respectively.
Mind, Intellect, Egoism and Self-conscious mind are the four inner senses. Their scopes are volition and doubt, determination, affection, decision. The mind is at the tip of the neck, intellect at the face, egoism at the heart, self-conscious mind at the navel.
Bone, skin, nerves, hair, flesh are parts of earth; urine, phlegm, blood, semen are of water; hunger, thirst, laziness, delusion and sex of fire; circulation, bursting, movement of the eye etc., of air; lust, anger, greed, delusion and fear are of ether.
Earth’s attributes are Sound, Touch, Form, Taste and Smell; of water: sound, touch, form and taste; of fire are: sound, touch and form; of air: sound and touch; of ether: sound only.
Non-violence, truth, non-theft, continence and non-possession, absence of anger, service to elders, cleanliness, contentment and honesty, non-conceit, candour, faith and non-injury – are the qualities (effects) of Sattva.
I am the doer, enjoyer, speaker, am conceited – these are of Rajas. Sleep, laziness, delusion, attachment, sex and theft – these are of Tamas. The person of Sattva is above, of Rajas is in the middle and of Tamas, low. Right knowledge is Sattvika; of rituals, Rajasa; blindness, Tamasa.

First the waking state rests on the five organs of sense, the five of action and the four inner senses (being active). Dream depends on the four inner senses only; dreamless sleep has only mind as active instrument; the fourth state has only the soul (active).

The knower is the empirical self, other than the supreme, stationed between awareness (of object) and indifference (to them).

The five organs of sense and action with the five vital airs, the mind and intellect, go to make the Lingasarira. Mind, intellect, self-conscious principle, earth etc., are the eight Prakritis. There are sixteen others; the transformations of ear, skin, eyes, tongue, and nose; arms, genitals, hands, feet, vocal organ; sound, touch, form, taste and smell. The twenty-three are the Tattvas (eternal verities) relating to Prakriti.

The twenty-fourth is the Avyakta, the chief (Tattva). That which completes the group as the twenty-fifth is the Purusha (Self).

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Sariraka Upanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

First Chapter

“All the living beings are surrounded by the net of illusion, Oh God, Parameshwara, Oh God of Gods, How will they attain salvation? Be kind enough to tell.” Asked Lord Brahma to Lord Parameshwara and he replied as follows: 1.1

Some people say that the only way out is Jnana (knowledge). To attain occult powers, that alone will not suffice. How can Jnana without Yoga lead to salvation? It is also true that Yoga alone without Jnana will not lead to salvation. So the one who aims at salvation, should learn Jnana and Yoga together. 1.2

Like a rope ties a bird, the minds of all living beings are tied. Enquiries and researches do not affect the tie of this mind. So the only way to win over this mind is through victory over Prana. There is no other option to get victory over Prana except Yoga and there are no methods except those shown by Siddhas. 1.3

So I am teaching you this Yoga Shika (head of all yogas). It is greater than all Jnanas. After sitting in either Padmasana (lotus position) or any other Asana, and after concentrating the sight to the tip of the nose and after controlling both the hands and legs, meditate on the letter ‘Om’ with a concentrated mind. If one continuously meditates on Parameshwara, he would become an expert in yoga and the

Parameshwara would appear before him. 1.4

If we sit in an asana and continuously practice, the bindu will cease from going down. Without Pooraka and Rechaka, the Prana would stand in Kumbhaka for a very long time. You would hear different types of sound. The nectar will start flowing from the place of the moon. Hunger and thirst will cease. Mind would get concentrated on the ever flowing bliss. The four steps for this are Mantra Yoga, Laya Yoga, Hatha Yoga and Raja Yoga. The great Maha Yoga, which is one, has been divided in to four and named as above. The prana goes out with sound “ham” and goes in with the word “sa”, and all beings naturally chant the mantra “Hamsa, Hamsa” (while exhaling and inhaling). This is chanted in the Sushumna after being taught by the Guru in an inverted manner (Hamsa inverted is soham). This chanting of the mantra “Soham, Soham (I am it)" is called Mantra Yoga. Sun is the letter “Ha” and moon is the letter “Tha”. The joining of sun and the moon is the Hatha Yoga. Due to Hatha Yoga, the idiocy which is the cause of all doshas (draw backs) is swallowed. When the merging of Jeevatma and Paramatma takes place, mind melts and vanishes. And only air of Prana remains. This is called Laya Yoga. Because of Laya Yoga that heavenly Swathmananda Sowkhya (the well being of the joy of ones own soul) is attained. In the great temple of the middle of yoni (the female organ) the principle of the Devi, which is red like Hibiscus flower lives as Rajas in all beings. The merger of this rajas with the male principle is called Raja Yoga. As a result of Raja Yoga, the Yogi gets all the occult powers like Anima. You have to understand that all these four types of Yogas are nothing but the merger of Prana, Apana and Samana. 1.5

For all those who have a body, their body is the temple of Shiva. It can give them occult powers. The triangular part in between the anus and penis is called the mooladhara. This is the place where Shiva lives as a life giving force. There the Parashakthi called Kundalani lives. From there wind is produced. The fire is also produced from there. From there only the sound ‘Hamsa’ and the mind are also produced. This place which would give whatever is asked for is called Kamakhya peetam (the seat of passion). In the edge of the anus is the Swadishtana Chakra with six petals. Near the belly is the Mani Poora Chakra with its ten petals. In the place near the heart the Anahatha Chakra with its 12 petals exists. And, Hey Lord Brahma, this is called the Poorna Giri Peeta. In the depression in the throat, Vishudhi Chakra with its 16 petals exists. Hey lord of Lords, that is the Jalandara Chakra. In between the eyelids is the Agna Chakra with its two petals. Over that is the Maha Peeta called Udayana. 1.6

Second Chapter

This world functions because of the unclear foundation power which is described as Maha Maya, Maha Lakshmi, Maha Devi and Maha Saraswathi. That power shines in a micro form as a Bindu (dot) on the Peeta (seat). That Bindu breaks the Peeta and emerges from there in the form of Nadha (sound). That Nadha Brahma assumes three shapes viz., Macro, Micro and external. The macro form is the big shape which is pervaded by the five Brahmans. The micro form which arises from the Nadha with its three Bheejas (roots) is the form of Hiranya Garbha. Para is the ever true property of Satchitananda. By continuously chanting the Atma mantra, the glitter will occur in Para Thathwa (the philosophy of the external). For the Yogi who has stopped his mind, this appears in the micro form similar to the flame of the lamp, moon’s crescent, like a fire fly, like a streak of lightning and like the glitter of stars. There are no greater mantras than Nadha (sound), no Gods greater than Atma, no greater worship than the meditation and no pleasure greater than satisfaction. My devotee who understands this would remain stable in his happiness. To that great man who has great devotion to God as well as similar great devotion to his teacher, all this would be understood automatically.

Third Chapter

That great ever living Nadha (sound) is called Sabhda Brahman. It is the strength residing in the Mooladhara. Para is the foundation for its own self and is of the form of Bindhu. That Nadha coming out of Parashakthi (similar to the germ coming out of the seed) is called Pasyanthi (we see). The Yogis who are able to see using the Pasyanthi Shakthi, understand that it is the whole world. That power produces sound like a rain starting from the heart. Hey Lord of Lords, there it is called Madhyama. It is called Vaikari when it merges in the sound form with Prana and exists in the throat and jaw. It produces all the alphabets from Aa to Ksha. From alphabet words arise and from words rise the sentences and from them all the Vedas and Mantras. This Goddess Saraswathi lives in the cave of intelligence in all beings. In meditation when will power melts, you can reach this Para Thathwa.

Fourth Chapter

Because the divine power is single, there are no differences there. You have to understand that the thought process of living beings is like seeing a snake in a rope. When you do not know, it is a rope and then for a small time the rope appears as a snake. The ordinary intelligence is similar to this. We see everything as the world that we see. There is no reason or basis for this world to be different from this Brahman. So the World is only Brahman and not anything different. If you understand the Para Thathwa like this, where is the cause for differentiation. 4.1

In Taittiriya Upanishad fear has been told as belonging to that foolish person who finds difference between Jeevatma(soul) and Paramatma (God). Though this world has been told as some thing to be experienced, in the next moment it vanishes like a dream. There is no state of waking up in a dream. There is no dream in the state of waking up. Both of them are not there in Laya. Laya is not in both of them. All these three are illusions created by the three characters. The one who sees this would be above characteristics and would be forever. 4.2

The Chaithanya (activity) starts in the form of the world. All these are Brahman. It is useless to differentiate it as Atma and Anatma when dealing with wise people. The foolish man thinks that body is attached to the soul. The belief that pot is mixed with the mud and the water is mixed with mirage and similarly the belief that body is mixed up with the soul is because of taking recourse to ignorance. 4.3

Fifth Chapter

That Yogi who has mastered yoga and who has complete control over his senses would attain whatever he imagines. The Teacher (guru) is the Brahma, He is Vishnu and He is the Lord of Lords Sadashiva and there is nobody greater than the teacher in all the three worlds. We should worship with devotion that Parameshwara, who is the great Soul who has taught us the divine knowledge. The one who worships like that would get the result of Jnana fully. Do not keep your aim because of the wavering mind on occult powers. The one who knows this principle well, is the one who has attained salvation. There is no doubt about it.

Sixth Chapter

That great light in which the Bhoo Loka, Bhuvar Loka and Suvar Loka [Worlds] and the Sun, Moon and Fire Gods, are but a small part in the letter “Om”. When mind wavers, the worldly life and when it is firm, the salvation will result. So Lord Brahma, using great intelligence we have to keep the mind not to waver. For desire to posses wealth, the mind is the reason. When that is destroyed, the world would be destroyed. One should with lot of effort start the treatment for that. When a man looks after his mind using his mind and realizes that it has stopped running, he would see the Parabrahman, which is very difficult to see. The Yogi is able to get salvation by seeing his mind with his mind. We have to see the mind with the mind and hanker for that mad state. We have to see the mind with the mind and be stable in Yoga. 6.1

In any place where the wind moves, the mind also wavers. Mind is called moon, sun, wind, sight and fire. The Bindu(dot), Nadha (sound) and the Kala (crescent) are the Gods Vishnu, Brahma and Ishwara. By constant practice of Nadha, the bad influences will vanish. That which is Nadha becomes the Bindu and then becomes the mind. One has to clearly aim at the unification of Nadha, Bindu and Chintha. Mind itself is the Bindu and that is the reason for the state of creation of the world. Similar to milk being produced by the cow, Bindu is produced by the mind. 6.2

The one who realizes well the six wheels (Agna chakras) enters the world of pleasure. One has to enter it by controlling the airs in the body. One has to send the air (Vayu) upwards. One has to practice Vayu, Bindu Chakra and Chintha. Once the Yogi realizes Samadhi by one of them, he feels that everything is nectar like. Similar to the fact that the fire inside the wood cannot be brought out without churning it by another wood, without practice, the lamp of wisdom can not be lit. Adopting his teacher as the one who pilots the ship and by adopting his teachings as the stable ship, with the power of constant practice, one crosses the sea of this birth. Thus tells this Upanishad.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Yoga-Sikhopanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Turiyatita Avadhuta Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Now the grandfather of all people (the god Brahma) respectfully approaching his father, Adinarayana (Lord Vishnu) said, ‘What is the path of the Avadhutas after the Turiyatita stage, and what is their standing ?’ To him replied the Lord Narayana: Wise sages consider that one who remains in the path of the Avadhuta is very rare in the world and (such sages) are not many; if one becomes (an Avadhuta) he is ever pure, he is indeed the embodiment of dispassion; he is indeed the visible form of wisdom and he is indeed the personification of the Veda (Vedapurusha). He is a (truly) great man, as his mind abides in me alone. Indeed I too abide in him. In due order, having been first a hut-dwelling ascetic (Kutichaka), he reaches the stage of a mendicant monk (Bahudaka); the mendicant monk attains to the stage of a Hamsa ascetic; the Hamsa ascetic (then) becomes the highest kind of ascetic (Paramahamsa). (In this stage) by introspection he realizes the entire world (as non-different from his Self); renouncing all personal possessions in (a reservoir of) waters, (such things as) his emblematic staff, water pot, waist band, loincloth that covers (his privities) and all ritualistic duties enjoined on him (in a previous stage); becoming unclad (lit. clothed by the points of the compass); abandoning even the acceptance of a discoloured, worn out bark garment or (deer) skin; behaving thereafter (after the stage of the Paramahamsa) as one subject to no mantras (i.e. performing no rituals) and gives up shaving, oil bath, the perpendicular mark of sandal paste on the forehead, etc.
2. He is one terminating all religious and secular duties; free of religious merit or otherwise in all situations; giving up both knowledge and ignorance; conquering (the influence of) cold and heat, happiness and misery, honour and dishonour; having burnt up in advance, with the latent influence

(vasana) of the body, etc., censure, praise, pride, rivalry, ostentation, haughtiness, desire, hatred, love, anger, covetousness, delusion, (gloating) joy, intolerance, envy, clinging to life, etc.; viewing his body as a corpse, as it were; becoming equanimous effortlessly and unrestrainedly in gain or loss; sustaining his life (with food placed in the mouth) like a cow; (satisfied) with (food) as it comes without ardently longing for it; reducing to ashes the host of learning and scholarship; guarding his conduct (without vaunting his noble way of life); disowning the superiority or inferiority (of any one); (firmly) established in non-duality (of the Self) which is the highest (principle) of all and which comprises all within itself; cherishing the conviction, 'There is nought else distinct from me'; absorbing in the Self the fuel (of concept) other than the secret known only by the gods; untouched by sorrow; unresponsive to (worldly) happiness; free of desire for affection; unattached everywhere to the auspicious or the inauspicious; with (the functioning of) all senses at standstill; unmindful of the superiority of his conduct, learning and moral merit (dharma) acquired in the previous stages of his life; giving up the conduct befitting caste and stage of life (Vanaprastha); dreamless, as night and day are the same to him; ever on the move everywhere; remaining with the body alone left to him; his water-pot being the watering-place (only); ever sensible (but) wandering alone as though he were a child, madman or ghost; always observing silence and deeply meditating on his Self, he has for his support the propless (Brahman); forgetting everything (else) in consonance with the absorption in his Self; this Turiyatita sage reaching the state of the Avadhuta ascetic and completely absorbed in non-duality (of the Atman) (finally) gives up his body as he has become one with Om (the Pranava): such an ascetic is an Avadhuta; he has accomplished his life's purpose. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Turiyatitavadhutopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Sannyasa Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

FIRST ADHYAYA

1. Now we shall expound the Upanishad on renunciation. He who in due order (of the stages of life) gives up (the primary inclinations such as the desire for wealth, etc.,) becomes one who has renounced (worldly life). What is this called renunciation ? How does one renounce ? One who guards himself by the (following) activities, who has (for his renunciation) the approval of mother, father, wife, sons and kinsmen should assemble all the officiating priests known to him and as before (with their approval) perform the Vaishvanara sacrifice (for the welfare of all people). He shall (after partition) give away all his wealth to the officiating priests. For the priests are the singers (of the Vedic hymns, deserving the gift). The (five) vital airs, Prana, Apana, Vyana, Udana and Samana, shall be (symbolically) placed in all the sacrificial vessels over the (five) sacred fires, the ahavaniya, garhapatya, anvaharyapachana, sabhya and avasathya. Shaving off his hair along with the tuft, snapping the sacred thread and seeing his son, he shall consecrate (himself) with the mantras ‘You are the god Brahma, you are the sacrifice, you are everything’. If he has no son he should consecrate himself thus and not minding (anything) proceed as a mendicant monk eastward or northward.

He may receive alms from (people of the) four castes. He should eat from the vessel of his hands. He shall consider food as medicine. He should take food as medicine (i.e. in great moderation). He should eat as and when he gets (food, without discontent and not asking for more, like Oliver Twist) for bare sustenance and in such a way that there is no increase of fat. Having grown lean he may shelter one night in a village, five nights in a town; he may reside during the four rainy months in a village or town. (Interpreting) fortnights as months, he may reside (in a fixed abode) for two months. If he is unable to endure (heat or cold) he may accept as gift a tattered garment or bark dress. He shall not accept any other. For penance is to suffer pain (with equanimity). What then is the sacred thread, the tuft and the ceremonial sipping of water to one who thus renounces in the prescribed manner and who thus views it (in the correct perspective) ? To him (the questioner) is this reply. This is his sacred thread (namely) that he meditates on the Atman; the (practice of) Brahma-vidya is the tuft; that he quenches his thirst with the vessel of his belly accomplishes (the ceremonial) duty with water that is present everywhere. His residence is at the bank of (a reservoir of) water. When the sun has set, how can he (ceremoniously) sip water ? As (he touches water) during day, so at night; (for) he has neither night nor day. (The enlightened ascetic is above the restrictions of time). This has been said by the Vedic sage (in a mantra): ‘To him there is (only) one (time), the day.’ He who knows thus realizes the Atman through this (renunciation).

SECOND ADHYAYA

1. That person alone is entitled to renunciation who has undergone the forty purificatory rites (samskaras), has detachment from all (worldly) things, has acquired purity of mind, has burnt out desires, envy, intolerance and egotism, and is equipped with the four disciplines of spiritual life (sadhanas).
2. Having resolved on renunciation he who does not embrace it shall perform the penance (Prajapatya) alone (as an atonement); thereafter he is entitled to renounce (the world).
3. One who (having resolved on renunciation, later) denounces it, one who supports a fallen ascetic (as if he were genuine), and one who throws obstacles (in the path of those desiring renunciation) – these three (classes of people) are to be known as fallen.
4. Now these (persons, though possessing dispassion, are not entitled to renunciation – a eunuch, a fallen man, a maimed person, women, a deaf person, a child, a dumb person, a heretic, an informer, a student (who has not completed his study), a Vaikhanasa anchorite (belonging to a Vaishnava sect), an ardent Saivite (Haradvija), a salaried teacher, a man without prepuce and one without ritual fire. Even if they renounce the world they are not entitled to instruction in the great scriptural texts (such as 'That Thou Art').
5. The son of one who has fallen from ascetic grace, one having disease of the nails, one who is brown toothed, a consumptive, as well as a deformed person – these are never entitled to renounce.
6. One should never allow renunciation to those who have just settled as house-holders, those who have committed great sins, those who have lost caste due to non-performance of the principal purificatory rites (vratyas) and the accursed.
7. (Again) one should never allow renunciation to one who is devoid of religious observances, religious acts (yajnas), penance, charity, offering, oblations in ritual fire and study of scripture; and those fallen from truth and purity. These do not deserve to renounce; (and no one) can dispense with the due order except one sorely afflicted.
8. The person (entitled to renounce) should discard his tuft reciting ‘Om Bhuh Svaha’. Saying the mantra ‘The sacred thread shall not remain externally. Grant me fame, strength, spiritual wisdom, dispassion and intelligence’, he shall snap the sacred thread and leave it in the waters along with his garment and waist-band muttering ‘Om Svaha’; then he should repeat thrice, ‘I have renounced’.
9. Seeing a Brahmana who has renounced the world the sun moves from his place (thinking), ‘This person will reach Brahman breaking through my disc’.
10. That wise man who says ‘I have renounced’ raises to glory sixty generations of his family before him and sixty generations after him.

11. All the defects born of bad sons and all defects born of bodily weakness, the Praisa fire (at the time of renouncing) shall burn out, just as the fire of chaff does to gold.
12. (Reciting the mantra) ‘Friend, guard me’, he (the renouncer) shall accept the (emblematic) staff.
13. The ascetic should bear a staff which shall be of bamboo, smooth, whole (with the bark), of even joints, grown in holy ground and cleaned of all defects;
14. It shall be unscarred (by forest fire), uninjured by worms, shining with its joints, (of length) reaching upto the nose, head or the eyebrows.
15. Close association is always enjoined between the staff and the person; a wise man shall not move without the staff a distance three times that of an arrow-throw.
16. Reciting the mantra ‘You are the receptacle of water which sustains the world; never say nay to me, you who are always agreeable to all’, he should receive the water vessel; and invested with the yogic garment (as aid to meditation) he shall go about in an agreeable frame of mind.
17. Give up (concepts of) righteousness and unrighteousness (dharma and adharma), give up both truth and untruth; having given up both truth and untruth discard that by which you abandon (all these) (i.e. duality).
18. Ascetic due to dispassion, ascetic due to spiritual wisdom, ascetic due to wisdom and dispassion and ascetic due to renunciation of action; these are the four kinds (of ascetics) obtained.
19. This is how it is. He is the ascetic due to dispassion who has become indifferent to sensory objects that are seen or heard of and who has renounced (the world) due to the influence of good actions done previously.
20. He alone is the ascetic due to Jnana, who, being dead to worldly life due to the (true) knowledge of the scripture and listening to the experiences of the people in sin and goodness and who, having discarded lingering attachment to the body, scripture and the world and considering as worthless like vomit all worldly actions, possesses the fourfold discipline in spiritual life and then renounces the world.
21. Having studied in the prescribed manner all (scripture) and experienced all (vicissitudes of) life he is the ascetic due to Jnana and dispassion who has his body alone left to him by meditation on the nature of the Self due to Jnana and dispassion and then renounces and becomes unclad (as he was when born).
22. Having completed the period of celibate studentship, becoming a house-holder and then embracing the stage of forest life (Vanaprastha), he, who renounces (the world) only in order to observe the order of the stages of life even though without dispassion, is the ascetic who renounces action.
23. Renunciation is of six kinds: (and the ascetics are called) Kutichaka, Bahudaka, Hamsa, Paramahamsa, Turiyatita and Avadhuta.
24. The Kutichaka ascetic has tuft and sacred thread, bears a staff and water vessel, wears a loin-cloth and patched garment, is devoted to the service of father, mother and preceptor, is equipped with a vessel, spade, sling, etc., alone, is addicted to eating food in one place, wears on the forehead a perpendicular mark of white sandal and holds a threefold (emblematic) staff.
25. The Bahudaka ascetic wears tuft, etc., patched garment and three (horizontal) lines of holy ash on his forehead and is similar in all respects to the Kutichaka ascetic (except) that he subsists on eight mouthfuls of food gathered (as alms from eight houses), as a bee (does honey).
26. The Hamsa ascetic wears matter hair, puts on the forehead the mark of either the horizontal lines of holy ash or the perpendicular one of sandal, subsists on food gathered as alms without restriction and wears a piece of loin-cloth.
27. The Paramahamsa ascetic is devoid of tuft and sacred thread, receives alms in the vessel of his hands, wears a single loin-cloth, has a single (patched) garment, one bamboo staff, either wears a single garment or is smeared with holy ashes and has discarded all (possessions and attachments).
28. The Turiyatita ascetic subsists of fruits receiving them in his mouth like a cow; if he eats cooked rice (he receives them as alms) from three houses. He has his body alone left to him (without any possessions and attachment), is unclad (dressed by the points of the compass) and treats his body as if it were a corpse.

29. The Avadhuta ascetic has no fixed rules. He eats food like a python as and when he gets it, from persons of all castes except those who are fallen or accursed and is ever intent on meditation on the nature of the Self.
30. I am not surely of this world consisting of trees, grass and mountains. How can I, the supreme Being, be this external (phenomenon) which is intensely inert ? I am not the body which is non-sentient and perishable in a short time.
31. I am not the sound which is non-sentient, coming from void and of the form of void and which remains for a short period grasped by the inert cavity of the ear.
32. I am not the touch which is non-sentient but which has life granted to it by the favour of consciousness and which can be experienced by skin of momentary existence and in no other way.
33. I am not the taste which is non-sentient, dependent on matter and of short duration, insignificant and brought into existence by the fickle tongue aided by the fickle mind.
34. I am not the form (rupa) which is non-sentient, non-existent in the sole Witness (Brahman), perishable and which rests on sight and the object of sight which have but momentary existence.
35. I am not the smell which is non-sentient, subtle and of indefinable form and brought into existence by the perishable nose which is dead to smell.
36. I am pure consciousness alone which is devoid of parts, ‘mine-ness’ and thought and which is quiescent and beyond the delusions of the five senses.
37. I am consciousness alone, devoid of a place of worship, and am illuminator, omnipresent (externally and internally), devoid of parts and stain, the light of distinctionless consciousness, all-pervading and one alone.
38. It is only by me, the consciousness, that all things such as pots and garments up to the sun are illumined by self-effulgence as by a lamp.
39. It is only by me, with my inwardly shining effulgence, that the various senses are active just as the mass of sparks shine due to fire which is blazing within.
40. This pure eye of consciousness, which enjoys endless bliss and which shines even when all others are extinct, is victoriously present in all eyes.
41. Salutation, salutation to myself alone who am present in all other beings and consist of consciousness free from (the restriction of) an object to be known and am of the form of the individual Self (consciousness).
42. The various clearly seen powers (such as those of earth, etc.,) are (really) rendered variegated by consciousness which is free of change, one whole and free from the limitation of time and parts (kala).
43. Of consciousness which is beyond the three durations (of past, present and future), is devoid of the restriction of perceivability of objects and which discards individuality of the soul, there remains the oneness alone (of the Self and Brahman).
44. Indeed the same (consciousness), being beyond the reach of words, seems to remain as having reached the state of the conclusion of Selfishness, (i.e. the state of non-duality), as if it were eternal non-existence.
45. The same consciousness, slightly encompassed by impurities of desires and non-desires, is unable to rise high like a female bird bound by a string.
46. People (overcome) by the delusion (caused by) the pairs (of opposites), which is born of desire and hatred, become similar to worms which are sunk in the cavities of the earth.
47. Salutation to the Atman, to you, who are non-different from consciousness. I am now seized (of the truth), I am awakened, I have risen (above delusion).
48. I am lifted up from doubts; I am what I am; salutation to you, to your and to me, the eternal; to you and to me consisting of consciousness.

49. Salutation to you, the supreme God and salutation to me, the Shiva. Though seated (the Atman) is not seated, though going he does not go. Though quiescent he is engaged in activities, though performing action he is not tainted.
50. He is eminently accessible, he is easily known like a close kinsman; he is the bee in the interior of the lotus of the body of all.
51. I have no desire for the state of enjoyment nor for abandoning enjoyment. Let come what may, let go what may.
52. When the mind is quelled in itself and has become free of egotism and when ideation is dissolved in itself I remain, alone, happy.
53. My enemy (duality) remains (i.e. is absorbed) in the pure Atman of vibration alone, without ideation, egotism, mind and desire.
54. Breaking the bonds of intense desires from the cage of my body I know not where the female bird of non-ego has flown up and gone.
55. He who has no egotism, whose intellect is not tainted, and who is equanimous to all beings – his life shines bright.
56. He who looks at this (phenomenal world) like (an impartial) witness with his mind, being cool within, is freed of love and hatred, has his life blessed.
57. He who, understanding correctly, abandons both the undesirables and the desirables and places his mind in its quiescence, has his life blessed.
58. When the connecting link between the object and the person (who grasps it) has vanished peace comes well into being. When peace has established itself, it is called liberation.
59. Like parched seeds there is no more sprouting of worldly birth; the latent desires become pure in the heart of those who are liberated while living.
60. (Latent desire of a realized soul) is purifying, highly proper, falls within the scope of pure nature, consists of meditation on the Atman and is eternal; it remains as if in deep sleep.
61. Understanding without the mind is indeed said to be the individual consciousness. As it is of the nature of the quiescent mind there is not the impurity of comprehension (of distinctions).
62. Where the mind is rendered quiescent, there is truth and auspiciousness; its is the true state; it is omniscience and it is indeed complete satisfaction.
63. When speaking, giving, taking, opening and closing the eyes, I am purely consciousness, the bliss (that comes of) discarded thinking process.
64. Having discarded the impurity of things to be known, rendering the mind thoroughly quiescent and cutting off the fire of the bond of desire, I am pure consciousness alone.
65. I have set at rest thoughts good and bad, am without worry, rid of ideation of the pleasant and the unpleasant; I am pure consciousness alone.
66. Discarding the idea of oneself and another, taking no sides in worldly happenings and clinging to the Atman, as an adamantine pillar I am steady.
67. I remain in my consciousness which is pure and without hopes, freed from desires and non-desires and devoid of both the undesirable and the desirables.
68. When shall I get the inward joy while remaining in the state of self-luminosity ? When shall I be in a mountain cave with my mind quiescent ?
69. When shall I attain similarity to a stone by (practising) distinctionless deep meditation (Nirvikalpa-Samadhi) when, while remaining dumb by the peace of partless meditation, birds of the forest will build their leafy nests on my head ?
70. Having cut the trees of ideation and the creepers of intense desire of the forest of the mind and having reached the broad plains (of spiritual wisdom), I enjoy life happily.
71. I follow that path (of wisdom), I am alone (unencumbered with attachments), I am successful (in realizing the truth); I am liberated, I am without desire, I am partless and I desire nothing.
72-73. The states of purity, strength, reality, heartiness, truth, true, knowledge, bliss, tranquillity, the rise of constant joy, fullness, true richness, the possession of effulgence and true oneness – the mendicant monk thus thinking on the true nature of his Self and realizing his true nature freedom doubts, indeed became the one without an alternative (i.e. became one with Brahman).

74. If one sorely afflicted recovers, renunciation in the prescribed order should be embraced. (An ascetic) shall not converse with a low caste woman, one fallen from virtue, and a woman in he courses. The ascetic has no worship of gods, nor witnessing (temple) festivals. The goal of asceticism is not one (and the same) heaven. The sorely afflicted and the Kutichaka ascetics gain the worlds Bhur and the Bhuvas respectively. The Bahudaka ascetic (gains) heaven (Svarga). The Hamsa ascetic, the world of truth (Satya-loka). The Turiyatita and the Avadhuta ascetics attain supreme bliss in themselves by deeply meditating on the true nature of the Self according to the maxim of the wasp.

75. The practice of Scripture-study, which is distinct from meditation on the nature of the Self, is useless like (carrying(saffron flowers which are but a burden to a camel. The ascetic has not to practise the science of Yoga or the Sankhya; he has no rituals with mantras and tantras nor the study of any other religious treatise (Shastra); if there is, it is like adorning a corpse. (Such an ascetic) is far away from spiritual lore like a cobbler. A mendicant monk shall not mention his name (in the previous stage of life). One reaps the fruit of whatever action one does. (Hence the ascetic) shall give up all, as one would (discard) the foam on castor oil. There is no receiving of the offerings made to a deity. He shall not worship gods externally.

76. Discarding everything apart from the Self, subsisting on food secured as alms from a number of houses (as a bee gathers honey), being lean and avoiding increase of fat (in his body) he shall move about. He should spend the time, (eating food) secured as alms from a number of houses using his hand or mouth as a vessel.

77. The sage established in the Self should take food which is conducive to (the realization of) the Self. Two quarters (of the belly shall be filled) with food and one quarter with water; the fourth quarter shall be left for the movement of air.

78. He shall always live on alms; he shall never eat food secured as alms from one house alone; he should go particularly to those houses where the people are seen to be easy in mind (i.e. those who dine only after giving alms).

79. He may expect alms from four or seven houses (where the house-holder) perform religious rites; he may expect (alms) up to the period of milking cows (in the afternoon); when he has come out (of a house without alms) he shall not go in again.

80. Fasting is preferable to (getting food from) devotees; unsolicited food is better than fasting; begging alms is preferable to unsolicited food; hence he shall subsist on alms.

81. He shall never enter a house by a side entrance at the time of begging alms; he shall not out of delusion go across a house where no harm is seen in so doing.

82. He shall not beg alms from a Vedic scholar if it is (given) without faith and devotion; he may beg alms from the house of a twice-born who has lost caste when offered with faith and devotion.

83. Alms from a number of houses without planning, that which is planned, the one unbegged, the timely one and the one offered (at the monastery) are declared to be the five kinds of alms.

84. (The first kind), alms from a number of houses, is declared to be that which is obtained from there, five or seven houses without pre-meditation as in the case of a honeybee (from flowers).

85. (The second kind), alms previously arranged, is that which is accepted after repeated requests made by devotees in that morning and the previous day; none the less he may subsist on that.

86. (The third kind), alms unbegged is that which is received when invited to dine by some one or other as he is ready to go abegging; this should be eaten by ascetics (desiring salvation).

87. (The fourth kind) timely alms is known as that (meal) which is offered by a Brahmana when he has approached (a house) for alms; this (food) should be eaten by ascetics.

88. Sages desiring liberation say that the (fifth kind of) alms, the food offered (to the ascetic at the monastery) is the ready meal which is brought by a Brahmana to the monastery.

89. The ascetic shall subsist on alms by begging from door to door even though it may be from the houses of outcastes. He shall not dine in one house even if (the host) is equal to the preceptor of the gods (in learning). He shall subsist on alms, solicited or unsolicited.
90. Air is not spoiled by touching (any object); fire by the activity of burning; waters, by urine and faeces (getting into them); and a mendicant monk by short-comings in food.
91. When (in houses) smoke has subsided, the pestle (for pounding rice) is at rest, the fire (in the oven) has gone out and the people have dined, (the ascetic) shall go for alms in the late afternoon.
92. He shall receive alms except from the accursed, the fallen, heretics and the class of people exclusively engaged in temple worship; from all the castes, in difficult times.
93-94. (He shall consider) clarified butter as dog's urine, honey as spirituous liquor, oil as hog's urine, condiment as garlic, cakes made of black gram as beef, and milk as urine. Therefore the ascetic shall avoid, by putting forth all effort, clarified butter, etc.
95. The Yogin shall never eat food mixed with clarified butter, condiments, etc.; using his hand as a vessel he shall not go about for alms more than once (a day).
96. When the ascetic seeks food with his mouth (alone) like a cow, he becomes equanimous to all; (hence) he becomes fit for immortality.
97. (The ascetic) shall discard clarified butter like blood, taking food in one house like flesh, using cosmetics like smearing himself with unclean things, salt and molasses like an outcaste, garment like dirty dishes, oil bath like courting women, pleasant company of friends like urine, desire like beef, familiar places like the hut of an outcaste, women like snakes, gold like deadly poison, an assembly hall like a cemetery, the capital (city) like hell and food in one house like the balls of rice at a funeral. There is no worship of gods (by him). Discarding the way of the world he shall become one 'liberated while living'.
98. Stay (continuously in one place), acquisition of (begging) bowl, collecting (of staff, etc.,), gathering disciples, sleep by day time (divasvapnah) and useless talk – these are the six sins of ascetics.
99-103. Remaining (continuously in one place) except during the rains is said to be a stay (asana). Acquisition of even a single vessel like the afore-said vessel of gourd, etc., for daily use by an ascetic is said to be 'acquiring vessels' (patralopa). Collecting (samchaya) is declared to be the acceptance of a second staff, etc., for future use by one who has one already. The acceptance of disciples for personal service, profit, dignity or fame and not out of compassion (to help them) is said to be gathering disciples (sishyasamgraha). (Vedantic) learning is (called) day as it is illuminating; ignorance (avidya) is said to be night. Negligence in learning is said to be 'sleep during day' divasvapnah). Excepting talk pertaining to the Self and at the time of receiving alms, (bestowal of) blessings and inquiries (concerning the Self), any other talk is said to be useless talk (vrithajalpah).
104. Food from one house, pride, envy, adorning with cosmetics and flowers, chewing betel roll, oil bath, sport, desire for enjoyment, medicine to prolong life and retard old age (rashayana);
105. Boasting, abusive language, pronouncement of benediction, astrological prediction, buying and selling, ritual, debate on ritual, transgression of the Guru and scripture;
106-107. Conciliating, fighting, vehicle, cot, white garment, release of semen, sleep by day time, vessel for alms (alms-bowl), gold, gum-myrrh, weapon, seed (for cultivation or mystical letter forming the essential part of the mantra of a deity), injuring, severity, copulation, what is discarded by the yoga of renunciation, vows such as the duties of house-holder;
108. Family, etc., branch of the Veda (of his early days), all families of the father and mother, and wealth – all these are prohibited to the ascetic. If he resorts to them he falls (from the state of renunciation).
109. A wise man, though very old, shall not trust in women though very old. Even in very old patched garments old cloth will stick (when stitched).
110. Immovable property, mobile things (servants), seed (for cultivation), gold, gum-myrrh and weapon these six an ascetic shall not take up as (though they were) urine and faeces.

111. An ascetic shall not take with him even a little provision for a journey except when in danger; in hard times he may receive ripe corn when cooked food is not available.
112. A mendicant monk who is not sick and a young monk shall not stay in any house (of a householder); he shall neither accept nor give anything to another at any time.
113. With a sense of humility the ascetic shall strive for the welfare of beings; begging cooked or uncooked food (for another), he falls (from asceticism).
114-115. An ascetic keen on feeding others, who accepts clothes, etc., and woollen garments or others as well as good clothes undoubtedly falls (from virtue). Resorting to the ship of non-duality he will gain liberation while living.
116. For restraint in speech, he shall observe silence; for control over the body, he shall fast; for control over the mind, breath control (pranayama) is prescribed.
117. A being is bound by (worldly) action; he gets liberated by spiritual knowledge. Hence far-seeing ascetics do not perform (worldly) action.
118. Scattered are (torn) garments on roads; alms can be had everywhere; the earth is a wide bed; how (then) are ascetics put to grief ?
119. The ascetic who offers the whole world as oblation in the fire of spiritual wisdom, having (symbolically) transferred the ritual fires to his Self – that great ascetic is the (true) Agnihotrin (the consecrator and maintainer of sacred fire).
120. Advancement in the spiritual path is twofold – that of the she-cat and the she-monkey. Those who practise spiritual wisdom (Jnana) are (like) she-cats; the secondary way of (Apara-Brahman) is (like that of) a she-monkey.
121. The ascetic shall not speak to any one unless he is spoken to; nor to one who asks improperly. An intelligent man though knowing, should behave in the world as if he were dull-witted.
122. When confronted with a mass of sins (i.e. when the flesh becomes weak, over-ruling the dictates of wisdom) he shall practise the (meaningful) repetition of the Taraka (Om) twelve thousand times (a day); for it cuts (sins).
123. The supreme Brahman shines to him in twelve months who gently repeats the Pranava twelve thousand times every day. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Sannyasopanishad, included in the Sama-Veda.

Paramahamsa-Parivrajaka Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Now then the god Brahma approaching his father Adinarayana, the supreme Being and paying obeisance asked of him: Lord, from your mouth all things pertaining to the nature of castes and orders have been heard, known and grasped. Now I wish to know the characteristics of the Paramahamsa mendicant monk. Who is entitled to renunciation ? What are the characteristics of a mendicant monk ? Who is a Paramahamsa monk ? How is his mendicancy ? (Pray) expound to me all this. The Lord Adinarayana then replied:

(The person entitled to renunciation) is the wise one who has undergone the difficult course of learning the sacred lores from a good preceptor; has understood all the exertion necessary for happiness in this world and the next; has understood the need to discard, as vomit, the three (primary) desires, the three primary inclinations (regard for the body, etc.,), ‘mine-ness’ and egotism; has completed studentship in celibacy which is the means to reach the path of liberation and has become a householder. From the stage of a householder he shall become a forest-dweller (Vanaprastha) and then renounce (worldly life). Or alternately he may renounce from the stage of a celibate student or from the stage of a house-holder or a forest-dweller. Or, whether or not he is an observer of vows, has completed his course of study, has discontinued his fire-ritual or does not maintain the sacred fire, he shall renounce that very day on which he has become disillusioned with the world. Thus discontented with all worldly affairs, whether as a celibate student, house-holder or forest-dweller, he shall get the approval of his father, mother, wife, close kinsmen and in the absence of these, of a disciple or fellow-lodger (and then renounce the world).

2. Some (law-givers) prescribe the sacrifice called Prajapatya (of which the god Brahma is the presiding deity, prior to a twice-born embracing renunciation). But (though thus prescribed) he may not do so. He shall only perform the sacrifice Agneyi (whose presiding deity is Agni, the god of fire). For Agni is the vital breath (Prana). Thereby he does (i.e. strengthens) the vital breath. (Then) he shall perform the Traidhataviya sacrifice (whose presiding deity is the god Indra). By this (sacrifice) the three vital fluids, namely the Sattva (semen), Rajas (blood) and Tamas (the dark one) (become strong like fire). (Having performed the sacrifice in the prescribed manner he shall smell the holy fire, reciting the following mantra):

‘Oh Fire, this (vital breath) is your source; as you are born at the proper time (of the year) you put on effulgence. Knowing him (the Atman, your ultimate source) may you merge (with the Prana, your source). May you increase our wealth (of transcendent knowledge)’. So reciting the mantra he shall smell the fire. This is the source of fire, the vital air. May you go to the Prana, may you go to your source. Svaha. Thus alone the mantra says.

Having procured the holy fire from the house of a well-versed Vedic scholar he shall smell the holy fire in the manner described previously. If he is afflicted (by illness) or does not get the holy fire, he shall offer the oblation in the waters. For water is (presided over by) all the gods. Reciting, ‘I offer the oblation to all gods, Svaha’, he shall tender the oblation and picking up (a small portion of) the offered oblation which is mixed with ghee, he shall eat this, as it is beneficial. (In the case of the Kshatriyas and others not entitled to renunciation) the rule is that they may seek liberation) in the path of the brave (by courting death in battle-field) or fast (unto death as a discipline), or enter into water (to rise no more) or enter fire or undertake the great journey (in which they collapse by exhaustion). If he were afflicted (by illness) he may renounce mentally or by speech (reciting mantras). This is the path (of their renunciation).

3. A healthy person (if desiring to renounce the world) in the due order (of the stages in life) shall perform the shraddha ceremony unto himself and the fire-ritual for ridding himself of passions (Viraja-homa). He shall infuse the ritual fire to be symbolically present in his person. His proficiency in the affairs of the world and Vedic learning as well as the fourteen means of action under his control (karanas) shall be transferred to his son (symbolically). In the absence (of a son) it shall be done to a disciple; in his absence it shall be transferred into his Atman. He shall then meditate on Brahman as identical with his Self, pronouncing the words ‘Brahman Thou (Art)’, ‘The sacrifice thou (Art)’. The Veda-mother, the prop of Brahmanhood and embodiment of the essence of all learning shall be consigned into the waters reciting the three vyahritis (Om Bhuh, etc.,) and the three vyahritis into the letters a, u and m (of the Pranava). He shall then ceremoniously sip water keeping his attention on that (Pranava); pull out the tuft muttering the Pranava; snap the sacred thread; discard the garment too on the ground or in the waters; become unclad reciting the mantra ‘Om Bhuh Svaha, Om Bhuvah Svaha and Om Suvah Svaha’; meditate on his own form; again recite mentally or in speech the Pranava and the vyahritis separately and utter three times three the farewell words, ‘I have renounced, I have renounced, I have renounced’ in gentle, middling and sharp tones; deeply engage in meditation on the Pranava and raise his hand saying ‘Freedom from fear to all from me, Svaha’. He shall then start for the north thinking over the meaning of great scriptural texts such as ‘The Brahman I Am’, ‘That Thou Art’ and proceed in the unclad state. This is renunciation.

If one is not entitled to this (way of renunciation), he shall recite first the prayer of the house-holder and then the texts ‘Freedom from fear to all beings, every thing emanates from me, you are my friend and you guard me. You are the (source of) strength. You are the Vajra (weapon) of Indra which killed (the demon) Vritra. Be a blessing to me. Prevent that which is a sin’. Reciting this mantra preceded by the Pranava he shall take up the emblematic bamboo staff and water pot and wear the waist band, loin-cloth and a discoloured (i.e. ochre coloured) garment; then approach a good Guru, bow to him and receive from the mouth of the Guru the great scriptural text 'That Thou Art', preceded by the Pranava. Then he shall wear a tattered garment or a bark-garment or a deer-skin; avoid a landing place at a river side (for bathing, to prevent mixing with crowds), moving up (a staircase), and getting alms from a single house. He shall bathe during the three prescribed periods, listen to an exposition of the Vedanta and practise the Pranava; be well established in the path of (realizing) Brahman; merge his favourite desire in the Atman; become free of ‘mine-ness’ and get established in the Self; give up passion, anger, greed, delusion, intoxication, rivalry, false pride, pride, egotism, intolerance, arrogance, desires, hatred, gloating, impetuosity, ‘mine-ness’, etc.; possessed of wisdom and dispassion he shall turn away from wealth and women and possessing a pure mind he shall ponder over the truths of all the Upanishads; guard bestowing particular care his celibacy, non-possession, universe-injuring attitude and truthfulness; conquer his senses and be free from affection externally and internally; secure alms for sustaining the body, like a harmless cow, from members of the four castes excepting those who are accursed and fallen; such a person is considered worthy of realizing Brahman. He shall view with equanimity at gain or loss (of alms) at all times; eat food (secured as alms from many places) like a bee, using the hand as a vessel; not increase fat (but) become lean; feel that he is Brahman; approach a village for (serving the preceptor). He shall, steady in conduct, go about alone for eight months and shall not journey as two (i.e. with a companion).

When he has attained sufficient good sense (i.e. dispassion) he may become a Kutichaka or a Bahudaka or a Hamsa or a Paramahamsa ascetic. Reciting the respective mantras he shall discard in the waters his waist-band, loin-cloth, staff and water vessel and move about unclad. He shall stay one night in a village, three nights in a holy place, five nights in a town and seven nights in a place of pilgrimage (Kshetra). He shall be without a (fixed) abode, be steady in mind, not resort to a fire-place (for warmth), be free from emotions, discard both rituals and non-rituals, receive alms for sustaining life alone with equanimity at its gain or loss in the manner of a cow, has his water vessel (only) in (the form of) a watering place and his residence in a solitary place free from trouble. He shall not think of gain or loss but be interested in rooting out both good and bad actions; sleep always on the floor; discard shaving, give up the restriction of observing chaturmasya, interest himself deeply in pure meditation, be averse to wealth, women and city (life), behave like an insane person although perfectly sane, possess no distinguishing emblems or distinctive conduct, have no dreams as day and night are the same to him and be attentive to the path of deep meditation on Brahman in the form of Pranava in investigating on the nature of the Self. He who thus gives up his body by resorting to renunciation is the Paramahamsa mendicant monk.

4. The god Brahma asked (Narayana): Lord, what is Brahma-Pranava ? (The Lord) Narayana replied: The Brahma-Pranava consists of sixteen parts and it is cognized in quadruples in the four states (waking, etc.,). In the waking state there are the four states, waking within waking, etc., (jagrat-jagrat); in the dreaming state the four states are waking within dreaming, etc., (svapna-jagrat); in deep sleep there are the four states waking within deep sleep, etc., (susupti-jagrat); in the fourth state (turiya) there are the four states waking within the Turiya, etc., (turiya-jagrat). In the waking state of distributive pervasion (vyashti) there is quadruplicity of vishva, namely, vishva-vishva, vishva-taijasa, vishva-prajna and vishva-turiya. In the dreaming state of distributive pervasion there is quadruplicity of taijasa, namely taijasa-vishva, taijasa-taijasa, taijasa-prajna and taijasa-turiya. In the state of deep sleep of Prajna there is quadruplicity, namely prajna-vishva, prajna-taijasa, prajna-prajna and prajna-turiya. In the fourth state (turiya) there is the quadruplicity of the turiya, namely turiya-vishva, turiya-taijasa, turiya-prajna (and turiya-turiya). These in due order make up the sixteen parts. In the letter ‘a’ (of the Om – Aum) there is jagrat-vishva, in the letter ‘u’ jagrat-taijasa, in the letter ‘m’ jagrat-prajna, in the ardha-matra (of Om) jagrat-turiya, in the bindu svapna-vishva, in the nada svapna-taijasa, in the kala svapna-prajna, in the kalatita svapna-turiya, in the shanti susupta-vishva, in the shantyatita susuptataijasa, in pashyanti turiya-prajna, in para turiya-turiya. The four parts of jagrat pertain to the letter ‘a’, the four parts of Svapna pertain to the letter ‘u’, the four parts of Susupti pertain to the letter ‘m’, the four parts of turiya pertain to the ardha-matra. This is the Brahma-Pranava. This is to be worshipped by the Paramahamsa, Turiyatita and Avadhuta ascetics. By this Brahman is illumined. (This is) liberation in the disembodied state (Videha-mukti).

5. Lord, how is one without the sacred thread and tuft a person who has discarded all (worldly) activities ? How is he solely devoted to absorption in Brahman ? How is he a Brahmana ? Thus the god Brahma asked (Narayana). Lord Vishnu then replied: Oh child, he who has knowledge of the non-dual Atman has the real sacred thread (i.e. that knowledge itself is the sacred thread). His deep absorption in meditation is itself the tuft. This activity is (itself) the possession of the sanctifying ring of holy grass (pavitra). He does all actions, he is the Brahmana, he is deeply absorbed in Brahman, he is the illumined being (deva), he is the sage, he practises penance, he is the noblest, he is superior to all; know that he is I. In this world very rare is the mendicant monk who is a Paramahamsa. If there is one he is ever pure, he alone is the Purusha (glorified) in the Veda. He who is a great man (maha-purusha) has his mind resting in me. I too remain in him alone. He is the ever-satisfied. He is free from the (effects of) cold and heat, happiness and misery, honour and dishonour. He puts up with insult and anger. He is devoid of the six human infirmities (hunger and thirst, sorrow and delusion, old age and death), and is free from the six properties (of the body, birth, existence, change, growth, decay and death). He is without the intervention of (i.e. he is not circumscribed by) the state of elderliness or otherwise. Excepting the Self he sees nothing else. Unclad (lit. clothed by the points of the compass), bowing to none, not uttering Svaha (as he worships no gods), not uttering Svadha (to propitiate the manes), without the need to send back (gods as they have not been invoked), free from blame and praise, not resorting to mantras and rituals, not meditating on other gods (than the supreme God), refraining from aims and their absence, with all activities ceased, firmly established in Consciousness consisting of Existence, Knowledge and Bliss, being conscious of the one supreme bliss, he ever meditates on the Brahma-Pranava (to the effect) that he is Brahman alone and thus fulfils himself; such a one is the Paramahamsa mendicant monk. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Paramahamsa-Parivrajakopanishad, included in the Atharva-Veda.

Aksha Malika Upanishad

[The Upanishad of Rosary Beads]
Translated by K. Srinivasan
Published by celextel.org

Om ! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Then the Prajapàti (Creator) asked Guha: “Oh Sir, (please) tell me the rules regarding the rosary of beads. What is its characteristic ? How many varieties of rosaries are there ? How many threads (does a rosary) contain ? How should it be made ? What are its colours ? How is it consecrated ? Who is its presiding deity ? And what is the benefit (of using it) ?”
2. Guha replied: “(It is made of any one of the following 10 materials) Coral, Pearl, Crystal, Conch, Silver, Gold, Sandal, Putra-Jìvikà, Lotus or Rudràksha. Each head must be devoted and thought of as presided over by the deities of Akàra to Kshakàra. Golden thread should bind the beads through the holes. On its right silver (caps) and left copper. The face of a bead should face, the face of another head and tail, the tail. Thus a circular formation must be made.
3. The internal thread must be thought of as Brahma (the Supreme Being). The right side silver cap must be considered to be the place of Shiva and Copper caps belonging to Vishnu. The face must be thought of as Sarasvati and the tail as Gayatri. The hole is Knowledge. The knot must be thought of as nature. The Beads representing vowels must be white (since they represent Sàttvika Guna). Those which represent mutes-consonants must be yellowish (since they are the result of mixture of Sattva and Tamas). The balance must be red in complexion (since they are Ràjasic).

4. Then (after thus meditating the presiding deities in different part of the rosary) bathe it (or clean it) in the milk got from 5 types of cows (like Nanda); and then in Pancha-gavya (a sanctified liquid prepared from the cow-dung, cow’s urine, ghee, curd and milk) and darbha grass immersed in water and then in the individual Pancha-gavya (in the aforesaid 5 things separately) and in sandal water. Then sprinkle water with darbha grass uttering Omkàra. Besmear it with eight fragrant (pastes) of eight (sweet-smelling substances like Sandal, Kasturi etc.,). Place it on flowers. Meditate (all) the letters in the rosary (or each letter in each bead).

Om Kçaëkàra, the One who instructs on the main and subsidiary categories of the world, of the nature of Supreme effulgence, be firmly established in the crest gem !

Mrityu not only means death but carelessness, non-alertness consequent swerving from the path of spirituality. Hence ajnana, nescience and the bodily perils like hunger etc., too are referred to as Mrityu. Such invocation of sacred syllables (avahana), their spirits and the deity who confers a particular boon and of the nature of a particular form must be invoked in the first head - right of central head. Invocation must be done circularly and end in crest jewel.

6. Then one must say: “Salutations to those gods who are on and move about in earth ! Be firmly established in this rosary and bless us and forefathers too after getting established in Aksha-malika permit us for auspiciousness and good !”

7. Then one must say: “Salutations to those gods who are in and move about in atmosphere! Be firmly established in this rosary and bless us and forefathers too after getting established in Aksha-malika permit us for auspiciousness and good !”

8. Then one must say: “Salutations to those gods who are in and move about in heaven ! Be firmly established in this rosary and bless us and forefathers too after getting established in Aksha-malika permit us for auspiciousness and good !”

9. Then one must say: “Salutations to seven crore mantras and 64 arts” and invoke their powers in rosary.

10. Then one must say: “Salutations to Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva” and invoke their powers in rosary.

11. Then one must say: “Salutations unto the 36 Tattvas (the fundamental categories)” and invoke the presence of the best Tattvas in it, praying to them to make the rosary capable of yielding the desired fruit like a divine-cow (Kamadhenu).

12. Then one must say: “Salutations unto Hundreds of Thousands of Saivites, Vaishnavites and Saktas (and seek their blessings and permission to use the rosary); be pleased and permit me to use”.

13. Then one must say: “Salutations unto the powers of Mrityu; Let you all make me happy, happy !”

14. Then meditating on the rosary as representing everything as the form of God, should start touching eastwards, feeling grateful to its help and touch the heads (beads) 108 times.

15. Then getting up, placing it (on flowers) circumambulating utter the following incantation: “Om, Oh goddess, salutations, mother of all mantras of the forms of letters, rosary of beads; He who attracts everyone, Salutations ! Oh goddess mantra matrike, rosary of beads, stupefier of everything, Salutations ! Oh goddess, the remover of Abhicharas, Salutations ! Oh goddess, eternal One, conqueror of nescience, the illuminator of everything, protector of the all world, life giver for all world, creator of everything, ordainer of the day, ordainer of the night, mover to the other rivers, mover to other places, mover to other islands, mover to other worlds, shining everywhere always, she who illumines all hearts !

Salutations to you of the form of Parà !
Salutations to you of the form of Paéyanti !
Salutations to you of the form of Madhyamà !
Salutations to you of the form of Vaikhari !
Salutations ! Salutations to you of the nature of all Tattvas, all knowledge, of the nature of all powers, of the nature of all good, worshipped by sage Vasistha, attended to by sage Visvamitra !
16. If one studies this in morning, the sins of night are destroyed. If one studies this in evening twilight, sins done in day are destroyed. One who reads this both in the morning and evening, even if a sinner, becomes rid off sins. The mantras recited with rosary immediately gives benefits.” Thus said Guha to Prajapati. Thus ends the Upanishad.

Om! May my speech be based on (i.e. accord with) the mind;
May my mind be based on speech.
O Self-effulgent One, reveal Thyself to me.
May you both (speech and mind) be the carriers of the Veda to me.
May not all that I have heard depart from me.
I shall join together (i.e. obliterate the difference of) day
And night through this study.
I shall utter what is verbally true;
I shall utter what is mentally true.
May that (Brahman) protect me;
May That protect the speaker (i.e. the teacher), may That protect me;
May that protect the speaker – may That protect the speaker.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Aksha-Malikopanishad, as contained in the Rig-Veda.

Avyakta Upanishad

Om! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Mahattatwa – Hiranyagarbha Sukta
Ahamkara -- Purusha Sukta

TRANSLATION

Then there was neither Aught nor Naught, no air nor sky beyond.
What covered all? What rested all? In watery gulf profound?
Nor death was then, nor deathlessness, nor change of night and day.
That one breathed calmly, self-sustained; naught else beyond it lay.
Gloom hid in gloom existed first-one sea eluding view.
The one a void in chaos wrapt, by inward forever grew.
Within it first arose desire, the primal germ of mind, which nothing with existence links, as ages searching find.
The kindling ray that shot across the dark and dreariness-was it beneath or high aloft? What bard can answer this?
There fecundating powers were found and mighty forces strove –
A self supporting mass beneath, and energy above.
Who knows and whoever told, from whence this vast creation rose?
No gods had been born. Who then can e'er the truth disclose whence sprang this world, whether framed by hand divine or no-
Its lord in heaven alone can tell, if he can show.

Ekakshara Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Thou art the one Imperishable in the Imperishable, conjoint with Uma. As known by means of Susumna, here (on the empirical plane), the one firm (Principle art Thou). Thou art the ancient source of the world, the Lord of beings; Thou the Parjanya (the Principle of life-giving water), the Protector of the world.
2. Thou art immanent in all; from (the view-point) of the wise, Thou, the Lord of the world art the all-knowing (Fire). In the beginning Thou art unborn, the first born, the sacrifice, too, art Thou. Thou alone the one omnipresent and ancient.
3. Thou art the Principle of life; Thou the manifestation (the manifested world); Thou the source of the world; by a quarter hast Thou pervaded this world. Thou art the world's birth, the cause, the life supreme, and the child in the womb armed with the excellent bow and arrow.
4. Having widely spread out the arrow, shining like the youthful sun in the sky, Thou shinest as Hiranyagarbha. By means of light hast Thou created the resplendent eagle (the sun), in the sky. Thou art Subrahmanya, Thou Arishtanemi (a brother of Garuda).
5. Thou art the bearer of the Thunderbolt (Indra), the Lord of beings; Thou alone art love in all living beings and in Soma (Shiva with Uma). Thou art the sacred syllables Svaha, Svadha and Vasat; Thou the Rudra immanent unhurt in the hearts of beasts.
6. (Thou art) the supporter, the ordainer, the purifier (air), the all pervading plenum, the divine Varaha, night and aloneness; the past, the future and the present; Thou art all activities, time, sequence and the supreme Imperishable.

7. The Vedic verses, prose formulas and songs proceed from Thy mouth. Thou shinest best (as) the Vasus and the sky. Thou art the leader of the sacrifice, the all-pervading fire and the Rudras. So also (art Thou) the hosts of demons and Vasus.
8. This God here dwells in the sun (the wheel of the celestial chariot) and elsewhere dispelling darkness. All that pertains to Him shines in lovely (fashion) like gold in some other sky. (This world of relativities shines so).
9. He is the all-knower; the Protector of the world; the firm nave of all born beings. He exists lengthwise and crosswise, the sum total of (things) spread out in order. He is the birthless (of wondrous births) Prajapati sung in the Vedas.
10. Thou art He whom in the sacrifices the knowers of Brahman adore with Vedic Songs, formulas and rites and the soma juice; as the final (Truth) devoid of all admixture, as the golden, the best of Veda-knowers.
11. Thou alone art the woman, the man; again Thou art the boy and the girl. Thou art the ordainer, the King Varuna, the Year, Aryama, the all.
12. (Thou art) Mitra, the bright-feathered (Garuda), the moon, Indra, Varuna, Rudra, Tvastar, Vishnu, Savitar, the lord of light, Thou Vishnu protectest all beings from the demoniac; the world is encompassed by Thee; Thou the womb of all that is born; Thou art the earth, the atmosphere, the firmament; Thou art the self-born; Thou art turned towards all.
13. Whoso thus knows the eternal Dweller in the cave (of the heart), the ancient Lord who has become the all, the golden, the supreme goal of the wise, is wise. He stays transcending all (forms of) wisdom. This is the secret doctrine.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Annapurna Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I-1-2. The king of Yogins, Nidagha, prostrated flat (like a rod) before Ribhu, that pre-eminent knower of Brahman. Then, rising, that ascetic respectfully said, ‘Teach me the truth about the Self; by what kind of adoration have you, Oh Brahmana, attained this state ?
I-3-4. Teach me that grand science which yields sovereignty over the empire of emancipation. ‘You have done well, Nidagha ! Listen to the eternal science by the knowledge of which alone will you be liberated life. Lodged in Om that envelopes the Root of phenomena (Brahman), supporting the syllable ‘aim’,
I-5-7. ‘Eternal bliss, independent (‘hrim’), renowned, with streaming stresses (‘sauh’), the ruler of the world (‘srim’), Mahalakshmi, (at once) desire (‘klim’), fulfilment, and humanity, is the divine Annapurna. ‘I begged of Her, using the celebrated and quintessential incantation of 27 syllables, cultivated by hosts of female ascetics,
I-8. ‘Namely, aim, hrim, sauh, srim, klim, aum namo bhagavatyannapurne mamabhilashitam annam dehi Svaha. [Salutation, O divine Annapurna, vouchsafe the food I desire]: ‘Thus have I been instructed by my father. From then on have I established myself in (this) discipline, persisting in the activities of my station (in life) and have given myself up to the daily practice of this incantation.

I-9. ‘When many days passed thus, there appeared in front of me Annapurna, wide-eyed, her lotus-face beaming with a smile.
I-10. ‘Seeing her, I prostrated flat on the ground, and (then) stood up with folded hands. “Well, child, you have done well; ask of me a boon, delay not.”
I-11. Oh (Nidagha), best of sages ! Thus hidden by the wide-eyed (deity) I spoke: ‘O Daughter of the mountain, may the truth of the Self dawn on my mind’.
I-12. Saying ‘be it so’ she vanished, then and there. Then, through the perception of the world’s variety the idea (mati) arose in me.
I-13. Delusion appears five-fold; it will be presently set forth. Due to the first delusion, Jiva and God appear to have different forms.
I-14. Due to the second, the attribute of agency dwelling in the Self appears to be real. The third (consists in) deeming the Jiva associated with the three bodies as having attachment.
I-15. The fourth takes the world-cause (God) to be mutable. The fifth delusion ascribes reality to the world as distinguished from its cause. Then, also, in the mind flashes the cessation of the five-fold delusion.
I-16. From that moment, spontaneously, my mind was assimilated to Brahman. O Nidagha, thus may you, too, secure knowledge of reality.
I-17. With humility and respect (Nidagha spoke to Ribhu: impart to me, having faith (in you), the peerless science of Brahman.
I-18. Gratified, Ribhu said: ‘so be it’. I shall impart to you the knowledge of reality, O sinless one. Be a mighty agent, ardent enjoyer, and a great renouncer. Having this investigated your own real nature, be happy.
I-19. ‘I am Brahman, ever manifest, pure, first, endless; there is no room for the slightest dallying with aught else’ – thus think, having become blemishless; achieve Nirvana (permanent peace) having purified and quietened all movements of the mind.
I-20. Know that none of the things seen here is there; it is all like ‘the city in the sky’ and ‘water in the desert’.
I-21. On the other hand, what is nowhere seen, at all, is not given (as an object); beyond the range of the sixth sense, mind, O sage -- assimilate yourself to That.
I-22. Grasp: I am That which is the indestructible, infinite, Spirit, the Self of everything, integral, replete, abundant and partless.
I-23. Due to the absolute contemplation of absence (or nihil), when the mind dwindles, there results the state of the being-in-general (satta-samanya), of that whose essence is unqualified consciousness.
I-24. Surely, devoid of all objective tinge, when consciousness (chit) subsides, there supervenes the exceedingly transparent being-in-general that resembles non-being.
I-25. For the liberated Self, both embodied and disembodied, surely there occurs this ultimate perception known as the state-beyond-the fourth.
I-26. O sinless one, this occurs in the case of the knower both when he has risen from Concentration (Samadhi) and when he is established in it; being born of awareness, this does not happen for the ignorant alone.
I-27. All waverings between states of reasoning, etc., having vanished long since, his face steeped in the lovely light of Brahmic bliss, (the sage) attains the blessed state through right knowledge alone.
I-28. The inner cool (calm repose) of him who perceives this multitude of gunas as non-Self is said to be Concentration.
I-29. The steady mind is empty of latent impulses; the same is (the state of) contemplation. The same also is Aloneness. Besides, it is nothing but perpetual quiescence.
I-30. The mind with attenuated latent impulses is said to be bound for the highest state. Next, the mind, without such impulses, attains the status of the non-doer.
I-31. On the other hand, the mind’s imagination of being the doer is replete with latent impulses; it causes all sufferings; therefore attenuated latent impulses.

I-32. When the imagination of unity with all objects is mentally discarded, due to its constant introverted state, all things are resolved into empty space.
I-33. As crowds in a market, though active, are as good as non-existent (to the observer) when he is not related (to them), so too, to the knower is a village like unto a forest.
I-34. Being inwardly withdrawn, the knower, either asleep, awake, walking or reading, beholds a city, country-side, or village as if it were no other than a forest (i.e. with total disinterestedness).
I-35. Once the inner cool is won, the world is cool. To those scorched by the inner thirst, the world is afire.
I-36. For all (unliberated) beings what is within is projected externally.
I-37. But the lover of the inner Self, though operating through the organs of action, is unaffected by joy and sorrow; he is said to be concentrated.
I-38. He who, as a matter of course and not through fear, beholds all beings as one's own Self and others' possessions as clods of earth, alone sees aright.
I-39. Let death come now or at the end of cycles; he remains unblemished as gold (fallen) in mire.
I-40. Consider in your mind: who am I ? How is all this (brought about) ? How do death and birth (happen) ? Thus (considering) will you earn the great benefit (of investigation).
I-41. Your mind will shed its (discursive) form and quietly win repose, once, through investigation, you comprehend your real nature.
I-42. O Brahmin, your mind, cured of its feverishness, no more sinks in empirical activities, as an elephant does not, in the hollow made by a cow's hoof.
I-43. But a petty mind, O Brahmin, does sink in any petty affair, just as a battered mosquito does, in the water collected in the hollow made by a cow's hoof.
I-44. O best of ascetics, to the extent all objects are readily renounced, the supreme Self, the transcendent light, alone remains.
I-45. So long as all objects are not renounced, the Self is not won. What remains after the renunciation of the entire objective manifold is said to be the Self.
I-46. Therefore, in order to realize the Self, renounce everything. Having cast off all (objects), assimilate yourself to that which remains.
I-47. Whatever object is beheld in the world around is but the vibration of Consciousness, it is nothing permanent.
I-48. O Brahmin, by the term Samadhi (Concentration) the wise denote transcendent understanding that is concentrated, eternally appeased, and is cognisant of things as they are.
I-49. The term Concentration denotes the stable, mountain-like, status (of the self) that is unagitated, unegoistic, and unrelated to dualities.
I-50. O Brahmin, it denotes the perfected flow of the mind that is sure, choiceless and goalless.
I-51. The best of the knowers of the Vedas, the great ones, win that fourth and stable perception that is fashioned solely through a part of the light of the Spirit.
I-52. (It is) lodged in the heart of all things and not altogether unlike dreamless slumber, when the mind and the ego subside.
I-53. After liquidating the mind with the mind, that state – that supremely divine bliss-body – is automatically won.
I-54. Thence follows the obliteration of all cravings for objects; then dawns the auspicious and superbly splendid light, and then, in the case of the very best, due to the sway of even-mindness (takes place) the ineffable transformation into the Self's substance.
I-55. Directly experienced indeed as the God of gods and Self of all entities, moving and stationary is this total and infinite reality of the Self, dwelling in the fast-evolving mind that is quietened externally.
I-56. The unattached, steady, and controlled mind is not in evidence in the worldings; the attached mind, though subjected to long-drawn austerities is, as it were, altogether bound.

I-57. The man free from inner clingings, whose mind dwells on the blissful (Brahman) may or may not act externally; never can he be either agent or experiencer.

II-1. Nidagha: What is attachment like ? What kind of it leads to human bondage ? And what kind of it is said to liberate ? How is this (attachment) cured ?
II-2. (Ribhu): Imagination, ignoring wholly the distinction between the body and the embodied (Self) – the exclusive faith in the body – is the attachment that is said to bind.
II-3. All this is Self: what shall I seek here and what avoid ? Know this to be the position of non-attachment that the Jivanmukta fosters.
II-4. I am not; none, other than me, is; neither this nor the non-other exists. This (attitude) is said to be non-attachment, always maintaining, ‘I am Brahman’.
II-5. He does not approve of inactivity; neither does he cling to activities. He, the renouncer, is the superbly equable (in outlook); he is said to be the non-attached.
II-6. One who mentally, and not in the concrete act alone, renounces fruits, etc., of all his activities – that adept is said to be non-attached.
II-7. Imaginations and the manifold activities issuing (therefrom) are cured, here, by non-indulgence in imagination; thus promote well-being.
II-8-9. The mind that clings not to acts, thoughts, and things, to wanderings and reckonings of time, but reposes in Consciousness alone, finding no delight anywhere, even when turned toward some objects, revels in the Self.
II-10. Let him perform or not all this empirical activity; doing or non-doing, his true occupation is Self-delight.
II-11. Or, giving up even that objective element, as stabilised Consciousness, the tranquillised Jiva abides in the Self like a radiant gem.
II-12. The quiescent state of the attenuated mind, free from all objective reference, is said to be the deep sleep in wakefulness.
II-13. This state of slumber, O Nidagha, fully developed through practice, is styled the Fourth by the best knowers of Truth.
II-14. Having attained the indestructible status in this fourth stage, one reaches a non-blissful poise (as it were), its nature being invariably delightful.
II-15. Thence lifted above all relativities, like non-bliss and great bliss, the time-less Yogin, reaching the state beyond the fourth, is said to be liberated.
II-16. With all bonds of birth loosened, and all Tamasic conceits dissolved, the great sage (abides) as the blissful being of the supreme Self like a salt-crystal in water.
II-17. That which is the trans-empirical and experiential reality, present in the (contrasted) perceptions of the material and the conscious, is the essence; Brahman is said to be that.
II-18(a). Bondage is encompassed by the object; on release from this, liberation is said to supervene.
II-18(b)-19. Resting in that unvexed experience, discriminated in the link between the substance and perception, abide you; thus one attains the (peace) of deep sleep. That develops into the Fourth; station your gaze on That.
II-20. The Self is neither gross nor subtle; neither manifest nor hidden; neither spiritual nor material; neither non-being nor being.
II-21. That non-dual indestructible one which has become the object, the ground of mind and all sense-organs, is neither ‘I’ nor another; neither one nor many.
II-22. That real joy (experienced) in the relation between the object and perception is the transcendental state; therefore it is, as it were, nothing (in itself).
II-23. Liberation is not on the top of the sky; not in the nether world; not on the earth. The dwindling of mind in which all desires dry up is held to be liberation.
II-24. With the thought, within, ‘let me have liberation’ the mind springs up; this worldly bondage is firm in the mind agitated with thought.

II-25. The mere non-cleansing of the mind reduces it to a state of prodigious transmigration; its cleansing alone, on the other hand, is said to be liberation.
II-26. What is bondage and what is liberation in respect of the Self that transcends all things or that pervades all forms ? Think freely.
II-27. Loving the Spirit, lifted above all hopes, full, holy in mind, having won the incomparable state of repose, he seeks nothing here.
II-28. He is called the Jivanmukta (Liberated in life) who lives, unattached, in the pure Being that sustains all, the indubitable Spirit that is the Self.
II-29. He craves not for what is yet to be; he does not bank on the present; he remembers not the past; yet he does all work.
II-30. Ever unattached to those who cling to him; devoted to the devotees; he is harsh, as it were, to the harsh.
II-31. A child amidst children; adult amidst adults; bold amidst the bold; a youth amidst the youthful; lamenting amidst those who lament;
II-32. Steadfast, blissful, polished, of holy speech, wise, simple and sweet; never given to self-pity;
II-33. Through discipline, when the throb of vital breaths ceases, the mind is wholly dissolved; the impersonal bliss (Nirvana) remains;
II-34. Whence all discursive speech turns back. With the obliteration of all of one’s mental constructions that (Brahmic) status abides.
II-35. Here is the supreme Self whose essence is the light of Consciousness without beginning or end; the wise hold this luminous certitude to be the right knowledge.
II-36. The plenitude due to the knowledge ‘all the world is Self alone’ is the right measure of Self-realization everywhere in the world.
II-37. All is Self alone; what are the (empirical) states being and non-being ? Where have they fled ? Where are those notions of bondage and liberation ? What stands out is Brahman alone.
II-38. All is the one supreme Sky. What is liberation ? What is bondage ? This is the great Brahman, established mightily, with extended form; duality has vanished far from It; be you, yourself, the Self alone.
II-39. When the form of a stock, stone and cloth is seen aright, there is not even a shadow of difference; bent on imagination (of differences) where are you ?
II-40. This imperishable and tranquil essence, (present) at the beginning and end of things and yourself, always be That.
II-41. With mental distinctions of duality and non-duality and delusions of old age and death, the Self alone shines in its phases (atmabhih) just as the sea, in its (phases of) waves.
II-42. What enjoyment of the desired (fruits) can disturb him, who dwells steadfast, ever wedded, in thought, to the pure Self that fells the tree of dangers, to the status of bliss supreme ?
II-43. Mental enjoyments are the foes of one who has thought extensively; they move him not in the least just as gentle breezes move not a hill at all.
II-44. ‘Plurality exists in diverse imaginings, not really, within; just as there is nothing but water in a lake’ – a man filled with this one certitude is said to be liberated; he who has perceived the Real.

III-1. (Nidagha): What is the nature of liberation without the body ? Who is the great sage in possession of it ? Resorting to which Yoga has he achieved that supreme status ?
III-2. Ribhu: In the region of Sumeru the celebrated sage Mandavya resorting to Truth (imparted by) Kaundinya became liberated in life.
III-3. Having attained the status of Jivanmukti, that foremost knower of Brahman, that great sage, made up his mind, once upon a time, to withdraw all his sense-organs (from their respective objects).
III-4. He sat in the lotus-posture, with eyes half-closed, slowly avoiding contacts (with objects), external and internal.

III-5. Then he, with his sinless mind, (reflected on) the (degree of) steadiness of his mind: ‘clearly, though withdrawn, this mind of mine is extremely restless’.
III-6. It wanders from a cloth to a pot and thence to a big cart. The mind wanders among objects as a monkey does from tree to tree.
III-7. The five openings, eyes and so forth, known as the sense organs of cognition, I am watching carefully with my mind.
III-8. O you sense-organs ! Slowly give up your mood of agitation. Here I am, the divine spiritual Self, the witness of all.
III-9. With that all-knowing Self, I have comprehended (the nature of) eyes, etc. I am completely secure and at peace. Luckily I am fearless.
III-10. Incessantly I rest in my Self, the Fourth; my vital breaths, its extensions, have all, in due order, subsided within.
III-11. (I am) as a fire with its multitudinous flames, when the fuel has been consumed; it blazed forth but now is extinguished – the blazing fire has, indeed, been extinguished.
III-12. Having been purified utterly, I remain equable, enjoying all alike, as it were. I am awake though in deep sleep; though in deep sleep, I am awake.
III-13-14. Resorting to the Fourth, I remain within the body with a stable status, having abandoned, together with the long thread of sound reaching upto OM, objects in all the three worlds fashioned by imagination.
III-15. As a bird, for flying in the sky, leaves the net (in which it was enmeshed), the great sage sheds (his) identification with the sense-organs; then (he sheds) his awareness of limbs which has become illusory.
III-16. He has won the knowledge of a new-born infant; as if the air should give up its power to vibrate, he has terminated the proneness of consciousness to attach itself to objects.
III-17. Then, attaining the unqualified state of Consciousness – the state of pure Being –resorting, (as it were), to the state of dreamless slumber, he has stayed immovable like a mountain.
III-18. Winning the stability of dreamless sleep he has attained the Fourth; though gone beyond bliss, (he is) still blissful; he has become both being and non-being.
III-19. Then he becomes that which is beyond even the range of words which is the nihil of the nihilist and Brahman of the knowers of Brahman;
III-20. Which is the pure blemishless cognition of the knowers of cognition, the Purusha of the Sankhyas and Ishvara of the Yogins;
III-21. The Shiva of the Shivagamas; the Time of those who affirm Time alone (as the basic principle); the final doctrine of all Shastras, and what conforms to every heart;
III-22. Which is the All, the all-pervading Reality, the Truth. He has become That, the unuttered, the moveless, the illuminator even of lights;
III-23. The Principle whose sole proof is one’s experience of It – he has remained as That.
III-24. That which is unborn, deathless, beginningless and the First immaculate state, whole and impartite – he has remained as That; a state subtler than that of the sky. In a moment, he has become the hallowed God.

IV-1. Has the Jivanmukta characteristics like the power to fly in space, etc., ? If so, great sage, it is not present in the perfected man (described above).
IV-2. O Brahmin, a non-knower of the Self, still in bondage, achieves (the powers) to fly in space, etc., by virtue of (specific) substances, incantations, practices and potencies of time.
IV-3. This is not the concern of the Self-knower. One having contentment in one’s Self never hankers after (the phenomena of) nescience.
IV-4. Whatever objects are present in the world are (held to be) of the stuff of nescience. How can the great Yogin, who has dispelled nescience, plunge into them ?

IV-5. Whichever confounded person or man of little understanding desires the group of Yogic powers achieves them, one by one, through set practices, instrumental to them.
IV-6. Substances, incantations, actions applied at (the right) time, yield Yogic powers all right. None of them lifts man to the status of God.
IV-7. Only influenced by some desire does man work for miraculous powers. The perfect man, seeking nothing, can have no desire whatsoever.
IV-8. When all desires dry up, O sage, the Self is won. How can the mindless (sage) desire miraculous powers ?
IV-9. The man liberated in life would feel no surprise were the sun to radiate cool light, the moon scorching rays or the fire to blaze downwards.
IV-10. (The whole world) is superimposed on the supreme Reality, the Ground, as the snake is on the rope. No curiosity is aroused as regards these superimposed wonders.
IV-11. Those indeed who have known what is to be known and shed all attachments, whose intellect is great, the knots of whose hearts have been cut, are free, though living in the body.
IV-12. Dead is his mind who is unmoved in joy and sorrow, and whom nothing jerks out of equality, even as breaths stir not a mighty mountain.
IV-13. Dead is the mind of one who is undisturbed by danger, resourcelessness, energy, hilarity, dullness, or great rejoicing.
IV-14. The destruction of mind is twofold, determinate and indeterminate. In (the state of) liberation in life it is determinate; in that of disembodied liberation it is indeterminate.
IV-15. The presence of mind makes for sorrow; its destruction promotes joy. Attenuate the existent mind and bring about its destruction.
IV-16. The nature of mind, know, is folly, O sinless one ! When that perishes one’s real essence, mindlessness, is (won).
IV-17. The mind of one liberated in life, having qualities like friendliness, etc., is rich in noble impulses; it is never reborn.
IV-18. This ‘destruction’ of the Jivanmukta’s mind is determinate; Nidagha, with disembodied liberation comes indeterminate destruction.
IV-19. One liberated in disembodiment is he who realizes the partless Self; his mind, the abode of all excellent qualities as it was, is dissolved.
IV-20-21. In that supremely holy, blemishless status of disembodied liberation, marked by ‘mindlessness’, in that state of indeterminate destruction of the mind, just nothing remains, neither qualities nor their absence; neither glory nor its absence; nothing (whatsoever) of the world;
IV-22. Neither sunrise nor sunset; neither sensations of joy or anger; neither light nor darkness; neither twilight, day nor night; neither being, non-being, nor centrality marks the status (of disembodied liberation).
IV-23. The spacious status of those (who are liberated in disembodiment), who have gone beyond intellect and the pomp of worldly life, is like the sky, the abode of the winds.
IV-24. The great (Jivanmuktas) whose bodies are the subtle ether become disembodied there (in the state of disembodied liberation); all their sufferings are cured; they are immaterial; totally quiescent, immobilized in bliss, beyond Rajas and Tamas. In that state dissolve the remnants of their mind.
IV-25. O great sage, Nidagha, rid your mind of all latent tendencies; concentrate your mind forcefully, and go beyond all mental constructions.
IV-26. That eternally self-shining Light, illuminating the world, is alone the witness of this world, the Self of all, the pure One.
IV-27. As massed Intelligence It is the ground of all beings. That non-dual Brahman characterised by truth, knowledge, and bliss is the object of knowledge.
IV-28-29. The sage fulfils his duty with the realization, ‘I am the one Brahman’; (Brahman is) the ground of all, non-dual, supreme, eternal, of the essence of being, intelligence, and bliss, beyond the range of word and mind.

IV-30. There shine not the forms of the moon and the sun; the winds blow not; and none of the gods (are there). This divinity alone shines forth as being, pure by itself, free from rajas.

IV-31. The knot of the heart is split; all doubts are cut asunder. All his actions dwindle when He, who is both here and beyond, is seen.

IV-32. In this body are the birds, called the Jiva and the Lord, dwelling together. Of them the Jiva eats the fruit of action, not the great Lord.

IV-33. Alone as the Witness, without participation, the great Lord shines by Himself. Through Maya is set up the difference between them. Spirit is other than Its form; as It does not dwindle, the Spirit is non-different (from all objects).

IV-34. As the unity of the Spirit is established through reasoning and means of right knowledge, once that unity is comprehensively known, one no more sorrows; nor is one deluded.

IV-35. Having the certain knowledge, ‘I am the ground of the whole world, solid Truth and Knowledge’, the sage may dispel (all) sorrow.

IV-36. Those whose flaws have (all) been attenuated realize in their own bodies the Witness of all, whose essence is self-luminous Being; not those others who are encompassed by Maya.

IV-37. Knowing Him alone, let the intelligent Brahmana build up wisdom; let him not dwell on a multitude of words that only makes for verbal weariness.

IV-38. Having mastered the knowledge of Brahman let him live in childlikeness alone. Having mastered both Brahman-knowledge and childlikeness, the sage possesses the Self.

IV-39. Know the elemental body as the seed of the creeper of samsara (the transmigratory life) with its immense sprouts, good and evil, having their potencies latent (in the body).

IV-40. Of this body, the seed is the mind conforming to cravings; it is a sheath of active and quiescent moods, a casket holding the gem of pain.

IV-41. The tree of the mind has two seeds; one is the vibration of the vital breath; the other, obstinate imagination.

IV-42. When the vital breath, aroused by nervous contacts, vibrates, at once the mind is transformed into a mass of sensations.

IV-43. That all-pervading awareness is aroused by the vibration of the vital breath. It is better to suppress the awareness (of objects); less harmful is the vibration of the vital breath, etc.

IV-44. For mental peace, the Yogins suppress vital breaths through breath-control, meditation and practices dictated by reasoning.

IV-45. Know the supreme cause yielding the fruit of mental peace: (namely) the joyful Self-abidance of cognition that is known as breath-control.

IV-46. Latent impression is said to consist in the seizing of an object (by the force of) entrenched imagination, despite all considerations of cause and effect.

IV-47. Rejecting everything and imagining nothing, either to be chosen or rejected, the mind remains (in itself); now is the mind unborn.

IV-48. Being continuously free from latent impressions, when the mind ceases to ponder there arises mindlessness that yields supreme tranquillity.

IV-49. When no aspect of objects in the world is imagined how can the mind be born in the empty sky of the heart ?

IV-50. The conception of a thing’s absence is based on its non-being; mindlessness is posited with reference to the object-as-such.

IV-51. The mind abiding coolly in itself, after the inner rejection (of all objects), though in modifications, is (still) held to have the form of non-being.

IV-52. They indeed are deemed liberated in life whose latent, unenjoyed, impressions are like the fried seeds, incapable of sprouting any more.

IV-53. Their minds have acquired the form of Sattva; they have gone beyond the farther shore of knowledge; they are said to be mindless. With the fall of their bodies they become sky-like.
IV-54. Due to rejection of objects, both the vibrations of vital breaths and latent impressions swiftly perish as does a tree whose root is cut off.
IV-55. In this state of cognition, whatever appears either as experienced before or as altogether new, must be meticulously wiped out by every one whose knowledge is sound.
IV-56. The vast transmigratory life is (due to) the failure to obliterate them; on the contrary, liberation is held to be just their obliteration.
IV-57. Be immaterial (spiritual), rejecting all pleasures and cognitions.
IV-58. Knowledge depends on the states of objects; one having no knowledge is non-cognitive, though he performs a hundred actions; he is held to be non-inert.
IV-59. He is said to be liberated in life, the clear sphere of whose emotions is not in the least affected by objects; his knowledge is spiritual.
IV-60. Due to the absence of latent impressions in the mind when nothing is imagined, it remains steady with cognitions similar to those of children and the dumb.
IV-61. Now the sage is no longer affected; for he resorts to the vast intelligent non-knowing (in the objective mode).
IV-62. Through the concentration of modelessness, rejecting all latent impressions, he becomes one with it; in the Infinite even that is dissolved.
IV-63. Though standing, walking, touching, smelling, the intelligent sage, devoid of all clingings, gets rid of (fluctuating) pleasures, and the cognitions (of the particulars); he is at peace.
IV-64. A shoreless ocean of excellences, he crosses the sea of sufferings, because he resorts to this vision even in the midst of vexed activities.
IV-65. Devoid of all particular the stainless, pure Being is one vast essence – That is held to be the abode of (immutable) existence.
IV-66. Rejecting distinctions like the being of time, the being of instants, the being of entities, be solely devoted to pure Being.
IV-67. Contemplating but one unqualified universal Being, be omnipresent, full, supremely blissful, filling up all space.
IV-68. The pristine inconceivable Status, without beginning and end, that remains at the fringe of universal Being, is causeless.
IV-69. Cognitions dissolve there. It remains beyond the possibility of doubts. A man who reaches That returns to pains no more.
IV-70. It is the cause of all beings; itself has no cause. It is the quintessence of all essences; nothing is more quintessential that It.
IV-71. In that vast mirror of Intelligence, all these perceptions of objects are reflected as the trees on the bank are reflected in the lake.
IV-72. That is the pure unobscured Truth of the Self; when that is known the mind is tranquillised. Having, through knowledge, won Its essence you become truly free from the fear of samsara.
IV-73. By the application of the remedies mentioned by me for the causes of suffering, that (supreme) status is attained.
IV-74-75. O knower of Truth ! If by manly endeavour you forcefully eschew latent impressions and establish yourself, all alone, in that indestructible status, even for a moment, at the very summit of universal being, well, at this very moment you achieve it all right;
IV-76. Or, if you sedulously cultivate the status of universal being, that status you will attain with somewhat greater effort.
IV-77. Nidagha, if you stay meditating on the principle of cognition, through (still) greater effort you will win that exalted status.
IV-78. Or, sir, if you strive to shed latent impressions (know) that till the mind is dissolved, the latent impressions, too, are not attenuated.

IV-79. As long as the latent impressions are not attenuated, the mind is not tranquillised; as long as the knowledge of truth is not won, whence can come mental tranquillity ?
IV-80. As long as the mind is not tranquil, Truth cannot be known; so long as the knowledge of Truth is not won whence can mental tranquillity come ?
IV-81-82. Knowledge of Truth, mind's destruction, attenuation of latent impressions – (these) mutually cause one another; they are indeed hard to accomplish. Therefore, flinging far from you the desire for enjoyment, cultivate this triad.
IV-83. High-souled one ! Sought for long and simultaneously, the attenuation of latent impressions, knowledge (of Truth), and the destruction of the mind are held to prove effective.
IV-84. By means of these three, cultivated aright, the tough knots of the heart are shattered without residue as are their threads when the lotus stalks are crushed.
IV-85. Truth-knowers know that breath-control corresponds to the eschewal of latent impressions; therefore, also, practise this latter too, by breath control.
IV-86. By eschewing latent impressions the mind ceases to be; also by obstructing the vibrations of the vital breath (it does so); do (the one or the other) as you choose.
IV-87. By the steady practice of breath-control, the exercise of reasoning taught by the teacher, the practice of Yogic postures and the regulation of diet, the vibration of breath is obstructed.
IV-88. Through behaviour without attachment, avoidance of contemplation of birth (and empirical life) and the perception of the decline of the body, latent impressions cease to operate.
IV-89. The vibration of the vital breath is indeed the same as mind's vibration. The intelligent man should strive hard to conquer vibrations of the vital breath.
IV-90. Without sound reasoning it is impossible to conquer the mind. Resorting to pure cognition and rejecting attachment, be steady.
IV-91. O great-souled one ! Abide solely in the heart, contemplating without conceptions the pristine, single, matchless and indubitable status of cognition without objects; but perform action, having achieved the status of inactivity in the blaze of tranquil glory.
IV-92. The man who, through ratiocination, in however small a measure, has slain his mind has achieved the object of his life.

V-1. He is said to be dead whose mind is not given over to investigation when he walks or stands; when he is awake or sleep.
V-2. Know the Spirit-in-Itself to be of the nature of the light of right knowledge. It is fearless; neither subjugated nor depressed.
V-3. The knower digests (whatever) food he eats – (whether it is) impure, unwholesome, defiled through contact with poison, well-cooked or stale, as though it were 'sweet' (i.e. a hearty meal).
V-4. The (wise) know liberation to be the renunciation of (all) attachment: non-birth results from it. Give up attachment to objects; be liberated in life, O sinless one !
V-5. Attachment is held to be the impure impressions causing reactions like joy and indignation when the objects sought after are present or absent.
V-6. Pure is the impression latent in the bodies of the liberated in life which does not lead to rebirth and is untainted by elation or depression.
V-7. O Nidagha ! Pains do not depress you; joys do not elate you; abandoning servitude to desires, be unattached.
V-8. 'Undetermined by space and time, beyond the purview of 'is' and 'is not', there is but Brahman, the pure indestructible Spirit, quiescent and one; there is nothing else'.
V-9. Thus thinking, with a body at once present and absent, be (liberated), the silent man, uniform, with quiescent mind delighting in the Self.
V-10. There is neither mind -stuff nor mind; neither nescience nor Jiva. Manifest is the one Brahman alone, like the sea, without beginning or end.

V-11. The illusory perception of mind, etc., continues as long as the I-sense is bound up with the body, objects are mistaken for the Self, and the sense of possession, expressed as ‘this is mine’, persists.
V-12. Sage ! Illusory perceptions of mind, etc., vanish for one who, through introversion, internally burns up, in the fire of the Spirit, the dry grass that is this three-fold world.
V-13. I am the Self that is the Spirit; I am impartite. I have neither cause not effect. Remember your vast (infinite) form; through memory, do not be finitized.
V-14. By means of the mantra (incantation) of the spiritual science, contemplated within, the deadly disease of craving dwindles as does mist in autumn.
V-15. (The sages) hold that the best (form of) renunciation, namely that of latent impressions, by virtue of knowledge, is the status of Aloneness, as it is pure universal Being.
V-16. Where latent impressions remain in solution there is ‘deep sleep’; it does not make for perfection. Where the impressions are seedless, there is ‘the Fourth’ that yields perfection.
V-17. Even a very small residue of latent impressions, of fire, debt, disease and adversaries, of attachment, enmity and poison affects one adversely.
V-18. With the seeds of latent impressions consumed, and conformed to universal Being, with or without a body, one no more partakes of sufferings.
V-19. The decision, ‘This is not Brahman’, is the sum total of nescience, whose extinction consists in (the opposite) decision, ‘this is Brahman’.
V-20. Brahman is Spirit, Brahman is the world. Brahman is the congregation of beings, Brahman is myself, Brahman is the adversary of the Spirit, Brahman is the allies and friends of the Spirit.
V-21. Once it is realized that Brahman is all, man is Brahman indeed ! One experiences the omnipresent Spirit that is peace.
V-22. When the mind, the guide of unregenerate senses, ceases to operate in regard to the alien, the immaculate, all-pervading awareness (that remains), the Brahman-Intelligence, am I.
V-23. Resort to that intelligent Self, having discarded all speculations, all curiosity, all vehemence of feelings.
V-24. Thus intelligent beings, with full knowledge, equanimous, with minds rid of all attachment, neither applaud nor condemn either life or death.
V-25-26. O Brahmin, the vital breath has the ceaseless power of vibration; it always moves. In this body with its ins and outs, this up going vital breath is placed above; the down breath too is similar; only it is stationed below.
V-27. That best breath control that operates in the expert, whether awake or asleep – listen to (an account of) that for better being.
V-28. Puraka is the contact of the body with the up-breaths that move forwards (from the nostrils) through the space of twelve finger-breadths.
V-29. Apana (the down-breath) is the moon that keeps the body in well-being, O well-disciplined sage ! The up-breath is the sun or the fire which internally warms the body.
V-30. Resort to the spiritual identity of the down-and-up breaths that dwells near the point where the up-breath dwindles and the down-breath rises.
V-31. Resort to that spiritual, impartite Principle when the down-breath has set and, for a moment, the up-breath has not yet arisen.
V-32. Resort to that spiritual impartite Principle, at the tip of the nose where the breaths revolve, before the down-breath sets while the up-breath has done so.
V-33. These three worlds are only an appearance, neither existent nor non-existent; (the consequent) renunciation of all concern with an other, the wise maintain, is right knowledge.
V-34. Noble Brahmin ! Even this appearance is distorted by the mirror of the mind. Therefore, giving up that, too, be rid of all appearances.
V-35. Uprooting this fearful demon of the mind, detrimental to the essence of steadiness, remain what you are; be steadfast.

V-36. The Spirit that is beyond cause and effect and is likened to the (boundless) sky is incapable of confrontation by any (real) object; it remains at the end of all mental processes.
V-37. The satisfaction (felt) at the moment of desire is caused by that very desire. This satisfaction lasts only till discontent (sets in); therefore, reject desire.
V-38. Reduce desire to desirelessness; let conceptions cease; let mind grow into mindlessness in the process of your life without attachment.
V-39. Acting through sense organs, free from (the force) of latent impulses, like the sky, you would not alter though there be a thousand disturbances.
V-40. Due to the activity and the inactivity of the mind does empirical life start and subside. Through the suppression of latent impulses and the vital breath, reduce the mind to inactivity.
V-41. Due to the activity and inactivity of the vital breaths does empirical life start and subside. Through drill and application, reduce it to inactivity.
V-42. Due to the active and passive phases of ignorance do activities get started and cease. Dissolve it (ignorance) forcefully by winning a teacher and the instructions of the Shastras.
V-43. By a mere quiver of the non-objective knowledge or by the suppression of vital breaths is mind reduced to mindlessness; that is the supreme status.
V-44. Through the perception of Brahman, infallibly directed to it (bliss), behold that real bliss occasioned by the visioning of the knowable (as Brahman).
V-45. That indeed is the non-factitious bliss which the mind does not reach; it is free from decline and growth; it neither rises nor sets.
V-46. The mind of the knower is not called mind; mind indeed is the Truth of Spirit. Therefore, in the Fourth state, it transcends that state.
V-47. Having renounced all mental constructions, equable, and with a quiescent mind, be a sage, wedded to the Yoga of renunciation, possessing both knowledge and freedom.
V-48. The supreme Brahman is that which conforms to no act of mentation. (It is what remains) when mental activities completely die down and all masses of latent impulses have been liquidated.
V-49. By securing right knowledge, and by unremitting concentration, those who become enlightened in the wisdom of the Upanishads are the Sankhyas and the others are the Yogins.
V-50. Those are the Yogins, versed in Yoga, who, after the quiescence of the breaths through ascetic practices, achieve the status above sufferings, beginningless and endless.
V-51. What is required to be won by all is the uncaused and still status; the contemplation of the one changeless Real, the control of breaths, the dwindling of the mind.
V-52. When one of them is perfected, it helps perfect the others (also). The vital breaths and mind of living beings are all concomitant.
V-53. Like the container and the content they perish when only one is present. Through self-destruction they produce that best of products, namely, liberation.
V-54. If, remaining steady, you reject all this by understanding, then, on the cessation of the I-sense, you yourself are the supreme Status.
V-55. There is but one great Spirit, which is called the Being; it is flawless, even, pure, free from the I-sense.
V-56. It shines forth but once, the pure, the ever risen, the same. It is described by many names, as Brahman, the supreme Self, etc.
V-57. O Nidagha, knowing for creation ‘I am That’, having done what had to be accomplished, I never think of the past or the future.
V-58. I cling wholly to the vision that is present here (and now). ‘This have I won today; I shall achieve this beautiful’ (thing).
V-59. I laud not; neither do I condemn. Nothing other than the self is anywhere. The gaining of the good does not gladden me; evil betiding me does not sadden me.

V-60. Sage, the waverings of my mind have been totally stilled; it is rod of all sorrow. It is cured of all wantings. It is tranquil. Therefore I am hale, and untrammelled.
V-61. ‘This is a friend; that is a foe; this is mind; that is a stranger’ – this sort of knowledge does not occur to me, O Brahmin; no affection touches me.
V-62. Rid of all latent impressions, the mind is liberated from old age and death. Mind with latent impressions inherent in it is knowledge. What is to be known is the mind rid of all latent impressions.
V-63. When the mind is rejected, this duality on all sides is dissolved; but remains the tranquil supreme One, pure and untrammelled.
V-64. The endless, unborn, unmanifest, unageing, tranquil, unlapsing, non-dual, beginningless and endless which (nevertheless) is the first Apprehension.
V-65. One, devoid of beginning and end, wholly spirit, pure, pervasive, subtler far than the sky; thou art that Brahman indubitably.
V-66. Undetermined by space, time, etc.; superlatively pure, ever arisen, omnipresent, this one End is all-in-all; be thou that pure Spirit.
V-67. ‘All is this tranquil one, devoid of beginning, middle and end. All is unborn, both Being and non-being' – so thinking, be happy.
V-68. I am not bound nor liberated. I am indeed the untrammelled Brahman. I am free from duality. I am being, Intelligence, bliss.
V-69. Keeping far away the entire multitude of objects, be you ever devoted to the Self, your mind all cooled.
V-70. ‘This is fine; this is not ! -- such (feeling) is the seed of your extended sorrow. When that is burned in the fire of impartiality, where is the occasion for sorrow ?
V-71. First augment wisdom by means of familiarity with the Shastras and by seeking the company of the holy.
V-72. The true, real and ultimate Brahman, superlatively pure, eternal, without beginning and end, is the cure for all forms of transmigratory life.
V-73. So also is It neither coarse nor spaced; neither tangible nor visible; It is tasteless and scentless; unknowable and peerless.
V-74. Well disciplined (sage) ! For achieving liberation, one should meditate on the bodiless Self that is Brahman - Being consciousness and Bliss without end – as ‘I am (That)’.
V-75. Concentration is the origination of knowledge in regard to the unity of the Supreme and the Jiva. The Self, verily, is eternal, omnipresent, immutable and flawless.
V-76. Being (but) one, through Maya it splits up; not in Its essence. Therefore the non-dual alone is; no manifold, no empirical life (is there).
V-77. Just as space is called ‘Pot-space’ (and) ‘great space’, so, due to delusion, is the self called Jiva and Ishvara in two ways.
V-78. When the all-pervading spirit shines always without a break in the mind of the Yogin then one becomes one’s Self.
V-79. Verily, when one beholds all beings in one’s own Self, and one’s Self in all beings, one becomes Brahman.
V-80. In the state of concentration, atoned with the Supreme, one beholds no beings; one then is the Alone.
V-81. The first plane, generating the desire for liberation, is marked by the practice (of discipline) and detachment due to intimacy with the Shastras and the company of the holy.
V-82. The second is marked by investigation; the third by contemplation with (all) its accessories; the fourth is the solvent as it consists in the dissolution of latent impressions.
V-83. The fifth is the rapturous; it is purely cognitive. This is the station of the Liberated-in-life who is, as it were, half awake and half asleep.
V-84. The sixth plane is non-cognitive. It is the station similar to deep sleep, having the nature of pure and massive bliss.

V-85. The seventh plane is (marked by) equability, utter purity, tenderness; it is indeed unqualified liberation, the quiescent Fourth State.
V-86. The transcendent state beyond the Fourth, Nirvana in its essence, is the transcendent and developed seventh plane; it does not come within the purview of mortals.
V-87. The first three constitute but the wakeful life; the fourth is called the dream (state) where the world is regrettably dream-like.
V-88. The fifth, conforming to massive bliss, is styled deep sleep. In contrast the sixth which is non-cognitive is named the Fourth State.
V-89. The most excellent seventh plane is the state beyond the Fourth, beyond the range of mind and words, and identified with the self-luminous Being.
V-90. If due to the withdrawal (of the cognitive organs) into (one's self) no object is perceived., (one) is liberated, indeed, indubitably by that mighty sameness (of vision).
V-91. 'I die not; neither do I live; being preponderantly non-existent, I am existent neither. 'I am nothing (but) Spirit', so thinking the intelligent Jivanmukta sorrows not.
V-92. 'Stainless am I; unageing and unattached, with latent impressions all tranquillised. I am impartite, (the veritable) Spirit-sky', so thinking he sorrows not.
V-93. 'Rid of the I-sense, pure, awake, unageing, immortal peaceful (am I), all appearances have been quietened for me', so thinking he sorrows not.
V-94. 'I am one with Him who dwells at the tips of grass, in the sky, in the Sun, in man, the mountain, and the gods', so thinking he sorrows not.
V-95. Discarding all mental constructions about objects, rising well above them, dwell on the thought 'I, the free, am the supreme Brahman that remains'.
V-96. Beyond the purview of words, rid of the predicament of hankering after objects, unagitated even by the flavour of climatic bliss, he delights in the Self by himself.
V-97. Renouncing all actions, ever content, independent, neither by virtue, sin nor aught else is he stained.
V-98. Just as a mirror is not stained by reflections, so is the b-Knower inwardly unstained by actions' fruits.
V-99. Freely moving amidst the masses, he knows neither pains nor pleasures when his body is tortured or honoured, as if these are directed to (one's) reflections.
V-100. Beyond praise and change, recognising neither worship nor its object, at once conforming and indifferent to all codes of etiquette,
V-101. Let him give up his body either in a holy spot or in the hut of an eater of dog's flesh: Once knowledge is won, one becomes Jnanin (a knower) of Brahman, free from all latent impressions of Karma.
V-102. The cause of bondage is mental construction; give that up. Liberation comes through the absence of mental construction; practise it intelligently.
V-103. In the context of objects, sense-organs and their contact by wary, perpetually and steadily avoiding states of mental construction.
V-104. Do not succumb to objects; neither identify (yourself) with the sense-organs. Having renounced all constructions, identify with what remains.
V-105. If anything please you, then in a state of bondage are you in empirical life; if nothing pleases you, then (indeed) are you liberated here.
V-106. In the multitude of objects, moving and stationery, extending from grass, etc.; upto the living bodies, let there be nothing that gives you pleasure.
V-107. In the absence of the I-sense and its negation, at once existent and non-existent, what remains unattached, self-same, superlatively pure, and steadfast is said to be the Fourth.
V-108. That superlatively pure sameness, the quiescent status of liberation-in-life, the state of the spectator is, inempirical usage, called the fourth state.

V-109. This is neither wakefulness nor dream, for there is no room for mental constructions. Neither is this the state of deep sleep; for no inertness is involved in this.
V-110. This world as it is, is dissolved, and then it is the Fourth State for those who are tranquillised and rightly awakened; for the unawakened it stands changeless (as it is in its plurality).
V-111. When the aspect of I-sense is given up, and equability dominates, and the mind disintegrates, the Fourth State comes on.
V-112. The repudiation of the objective manifold is the doctrine of the Shastras setting forth the Spirit. Here is neither avidya nor Maya; this is the tranquil Brahman, unfatigued.
V-113. One is inevitably tranquillised in the clear sky of the Spirit, known as Brahman whose essence is quietude and equability and which is resplendent with all powers.
V-114. Giving up everything, be wedded to an immense silence, O sinless one ! Plunged into Nirvana, lifted above ratiocination, with mind attenuated and intellect becalmed.
V-115. With a tranquillised mind abide in the Self, like one dumb, blind and deaf; ever turned inward, superlatively pure, with brimming inner wisdom.
V-116. O twice born, perform acts, remaining in deep slumber in wakefulness itself. Having internally renounced everything, act externally as occasion arises.
V-117. Mind's being alone is suffering; the giving up of the mind alone is joy. Therefore, through non-cognition (of objects) attenuate the mind in the sky of the Spirit.
V-118. Seeing that the beautiful or the ugly always remains, like a stone, irremovable – thus, through one's own effort, is empirical existence conquered.
V-119. What is hidden in the Vedanta, taught in bygone ages, should not be offered to one who is not established in peace; neither to one who is not a son or pupil.
V-120. Whoever studies the Annapurnopanishad with the blessing of (one's) teacher become a Jivanmukta, and by himself altogether Brahman – This is the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Annapurnopanishad, as contained in the Atharva-Veda.

Surya Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Now we shall expound Atharvangiras in relation to the sun: The seer is Brahma, metre Gayatri, Aditya the deity, 'Hamsas so'ham with Agni and Narayana is the seed, the power is hrillekha or hrim, the pin is the power in the process of unfolding the sky etc., the application is its use in repetition for winning the four human goals. The six limbs consist of the seed with six vowels added.

He indeed is a Brahmana who thus knows the golden Narayana with the blessed sun, impeller of the time-wheel, having four arms and two lotuses, showing promise of refuge and boon, mounted on the sun chariot, set in the red lotus.

Om, Earth, middle region and sky; we meditate on the adorable splendour of Savitar who may inspire our thoughts. The sun is the self of the world, moving as well as un-moving. From Surya indeed are these creatures born, the Yajna, Parjanya, food and spirit.

I bow to you Aditya; you are the agent himself, the manifest Brahman, Rudra, Vishnu, Rig-Veda etc., as well as all the chandas (Metre-Vedas).

From Aditya is born Vayu, Bhumi, water, fire, sky, directions, Devas, Vedas; the sun scorches this sphere; this sun is Brahman, the inner organ, mind, intellect, mind-stuff and Ego, Prana etc., (the five airs), the five sense organs and five motor organs, sound, touch, form, taste and smell; speech, taking (with the hands) release (of the bowels), joy.

I bow to Mitra, Bhanu, (protect me from death), to the shining one, the cause of the universe.
All creatures are born of Surya and are protected by him, dissolve in him – I am Surya himself. The divine Savitar is our eye the Parvata (spirit of the Time-periods), may be vouchsafe our eye.
We know the sun, meditate on the thousand-rayed; may the sun inspire us.
Savitar is before us as well as behind, above and below. May he grant us omnipresence and long life !
Brahman is the single syllable Om, "Ghrini' has two syllables, 'Surya' also, 'Aditya' has three. This is the mantra of eight syllables.
He who recites this everyday is a Brahmana, facing sun while reciting he is released from the fear of great diseases, his poverty perishes. He becomes free from the sins of eating forbidden food, forbidden sex-relation, conversation with fallen (men), of wrong converse.
At midday he shall recite facing the sun and he is released from the five great sins.
He should not impart this Savitri Vidya to just anyone. He who recites at dawn becomes fortunate, gets live-stock, masters Vedas; reciting during the three periods (dawn etc.,) he gets the fruit of a hundred Yagas, reciting when the sun has risen to eighteen fingers, conquers death.
This is the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Suryopanishad, included in the Atharva-Veda.

Akshi Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

PART-I

Then the blessed Samkriti repaired to the solar world. Bowing down to the sun, he glorified the Sun by means of the science of the Wise:

Om, Salutation to the blessed Lord, the glorious Sun, to the Power of the eye.
Om, Salutation to the Sky-Wanderer.
Om, Salutation to the Commander of the Army (of light).
Om, Salutation to darkness (excess of light).
Om, Salutation to Energy.
Om, Salutation to Light.

Lead me from the unreal to the Real; lead me from darkness to Light; lead me from death to Immortality.

Of the essence of Purity, the blessed One scorches (the sins of the sinful). The blessed Swan, of the essence of Purity, is the Prototype (of the bound soul, the Jiva).

Here rises the Sun, thousand-rayed, existent in myriad ways, the life of all animate beings. (I meditate on Him who is) omniform, compassionate, omniscient, ambrosial, of the essence of light, the Scorcher.

Om, Salutation to the blessed Lord, the Sun, the Offspring of the Infinite, the Power of the eye. The flood of days ! The flood !! All Hail !

Thus glorified by means of the science of the Wise the-Lord-in-the-form-of-the-Sun was highly gratified. He said: Whichever Brahmana studies without break this science of the Wise never contracts any eye-disease. None is born blind in his family. Teaching this to eight Brahmanas one becomes perfect in this science. Whosoever knows this is magnified.

PART-II

1. Then verily Samkriti said to the Sun: Blessed One, teach me Brahma-vidya. The Sun told him: Samkriti, listen. I shall set forth the knowledge of Reality, so hard to come by; by which knowledge alone will you become liberated while living in the body.
2. All is one, unborn, tranquil, endless, certain, immutable. See Reality as Spirit; be tranquil and at ease.
3. (The adepts) know Yoga to be the non-knowing (of plurality), the spontaneous attrition of the (object-seeking) mind. Rooted in Yoga, perform actions, or, averse (to all actions), perform (them) not at all.
4. Aversion is felt everyday to inborn tendencies (to act); nevertheless, one tends to plunge into noble actions with gusto.
5-6. Always one hesitates as regards the instinctive actions of the unregenerate; one never refers to what may compromise others, but attends to their righteous deeds. One does gentle deeds that pain none; always dreads sin and avoids all forms of sense-gratification.
7. Such a one's speech is informed by affection and love; it is lovely and fit, with due regard to time and place.
8. With proper thought, act and speech, one waits upon the virtuous. Getting them from all conceivable sources, one studies the Shastras.
9-10(a). Then one attains the first stage of Yoga. Whoever entertains such thoughts as regards the crossing of transmigratory life is said to have attained a state of Yoga. The rest are said to be just 'noble' (arya).
10(b)-11. Coming to the next stage of Yoga, called 'Analysis' (vichara), the sadhaka resorts to the foremost scholars, well-known for their serious interpretations of Sruti and Smriti, good conduct, fixed attention, contemplation and activities.
12. As a house-holder (knows) his homestead, (so), having mastered all that has to be learned, the sadhaka comes to know the categories, and the doctrines, vis-à-vis what has to be done and avoided.
13. As a snake sheds its Slough, so sheds he even a slight attachment to external objects when intensified by pride, conceit, intolerance, greed and delusion.
14. With a mind disciplined through devotion to the Shastras, teacher, and the company of the virtuous, he truthfully masters the entire body of knowledge including the secret doctrines.
15. Just as a lover repairs to a spotless bed of flowers, from the second, he (the sadhaka) proceeds to the third state styled Non-attachment.
16-17. Fixing his steady mind on the truthful import of the Shastras and busy with the recitation of spiritual texts proper to the hermitages of the ascetics, he expends his long life, seated on a bed of stone or a slab, diverting himself with ramblings in the forest, made beautiful by his placid mind.
18. As a result of his meritorious actions, the righteous (sadhaka) passes his time in the delights of detachment, repeatedly studying the positive Shastras.
19. One's perception of reality becomes clear only in due course. The enlightened one, reaching the third stage, experiences this for himself.
20. Non-attachment is of two kinds: listen to the distinction as it is being drawn. This non-attachment is of two-kinds; one general and the other, superior.
21. The general non-attachment is non-involvement in objects, (based on the perception) 'I am neither agent nor enjoyer, neither the sublater nor the sublated'.
22. 'Everything, be it pleasure or pain, is fashioned by prior deeds; or, everything is under the sway of the Lord. I do nothing in regard to it'.
23. 'Enjoyments and non-enjoyments are dread diseases; possessions are great disasters. All contacts just promote separation. Sufferings are diseases of thoughts'.

24. 'Time is ceaselessly fashioning all things' – so the general non-attachment of (the sadhaka) who has grasped the import of (the major texts) consists in being averse to all things and in not dwelling on them mentally.
25-26. By cultivating this sequence (of stages), the superior non-attachment in the case of the magnanimous (sadhakas) supervenes. It is said to be silence, repose and quiescence. For speech and import have been flung far away in the light of the truth, 'I am no agent; the agent is God or my own prior actions'.
27. The first stage that occurs is sweet on account of the satisfaction and joy (that attend it). The sadhaka (puman) has just stepped into the sequence of states. The first is an ambrosial sprout.
28. The first stage is the internal, cleansed, birth-place of the other stages. Thence one attains the second and third stages.
29. Among these, the all-pervading third (stage) is superior. Here the sadhaka has outgrown all proneness to imagine (and get ensnared).
30. Those who reach the fourth (stage) after the dwindling of nescience through the exercises of the three stages look on all things with the same eye.
31. When non-duality is established and duality dissolved, those who have reached the fourth stage look upon the phenomenal world as a dream.
32. The first three states are said to be the waking state; the fourth is called the dream state. And the mind dissolves like the fragments of an autumnal cloud.
33. He who reaches the fifth stage survives but as bare being. Due to the dissolution of the mind in this stage the world-manifold does not present itself at all.
34. Reaching the fifth stage called 'deep sleep', the sadhaka remains as pure non-dual being, all particulars having completely vanished.
35. Having reached the fifth stage, one stays consolidated in deep sleep, joyful, inwardly awake, all dual appearances gone.
36. Looking inwards, even when attending to outer things, he appears always indrawn, being extremely exhausted.
37. Practising in this fifth stage, free from all innate impulses, one reaches, as a matter of course, the sixth stage named 'the Fourth'.
38. Where there is neither the non-existent nor the existent, neither the 'I' nor the non-'I', with all analytic thinking gone, one stays alone, totally fearless, in non-duality.
39. Beyond knots, with all doubt vanquished, liberated in life, devoid of imaginations, though unextinguished yet extinguished, he is like a painted flame.
40. Having dwelt in the sixth stage, he shall reach the seventh. The state of disembodied liberation is called the seventh stage of Yoga.
41-42(a). This is the acme of all stages, beyond words, quiescent. Avoiding conformity with the ways of the world, and the ways of the body, avoiding conformity with Shastras, get rid of all superimpositions on the Self.
42(b). All that is (here), the vishva, the prajna, etc., is nothing but Om.
43. Because there is non-difference between import and expression, and because, as distinct from each other, neither of these two is known, the Vishva is just the letter 'a' and 'u' is said to be the Taijasa.
44. The Prajna is the letter 'm'. Thus know in order, discriminating with great effort, before Concentration (Samadhi) sets in.
45-46. In this due order the concrete and the subtle should all be dissolved in the spiritual Self and the spiritual Self (should be dissolved) perceiving 'I am the Om Vasudeva, ever pure, awake, free, existent, non-dual massed and supreme bliss'; because all this (objective world) is pain in the beginning, middle and end.
47-48. Therefore, thou sinless one, renouncing everything, be devoted to Truth. Think: I am Brahman, solid Intelligence and Bliss, free from impurity, holy, lifted above mind and words, beyond the darkness of ignorance, beyond all appearances. This is the secret doctrine.

Om! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Akshyupanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Adhyatma Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om! Let there be Peace in me!
Let there be Peace in my environment!
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me!

In the cave of the body is eternally set the one unborn.
The earth is His body. (Though) moving within the earth, the earth knows Him not.
The water is His body. (Though) moving within the water, the water knows Him not.
The fire is His body. (Though) moving within the fire, the fire knows Him not.
The air is His body. (Though) moving within the air, the air knows Him not.
The ether is His body. (Though) moving within the ether, the ether knows Him not.
The mind is His body. (Though) moving within the mind, the mind knows Him not.
The intellect is His body. (Though) moving within the intellect, the intellect knows Him not.
The ego is His body. (Though) moving within the ego, the ego knows Him not.
The mind-stuff is His body. (Though) moving within the mind-stuff, the mind-stuff knows Him not.
The unmanifest is His body. (Though) moving within the unmanifest, the unmanifest knows Him not.
The imperishable is His body. (Though) moving within the imperishable, the imperishable knows Him not.
The Death is His body. (Though) moving within Death, Death knows Him not.
He, then, is the inner-self of all beings, sinless, heaven-born, luminous, the sole Narayana.

1. Superimposition is the thought, 'I' am and mine are the body, the senses, etc., which are all other than the Self. Through devotion to Brahman, the wise man should repudiate it.

2. Knowing oneself to be the subject, the witness of intellect and its operations, reject the idea of the Self being other than the subject, identifying the 'I' with that (the subject).

3. Rejecting conformity with the world, the body, and the Shastras, remove superimposition on the Self.

4. The mind of the Yogin perishes as he stays without intermission in the Self alone, knowing, through reasoning, Shruti, and experience, that one is the Self of all beings.

5. Without granting for a moment even a toe-hold for sleep, gossip, verbal exchanges, etc., and self-forgetfulness, meditate on the Self in the self.

6. Casting the body far aside, the offspring of parental exudations, as its status is no better than that of an outcast, and becoming Brahman, seek fulfilment.

7. Dissolve the self in the supreme Self as the pot-space is dissolved in infinite space; then, as the Infinite be silent for ever, O sage!

8. Having become the self-luminous Substratum, as Being, reject both the macrocosm and the microcosm which are but abodes of impurities.

9. Locating the body-bound I-sense in the ever-blissful spiritual Self, renounce the subtle body; eternally be the Absolute.

10. Knowing 'I am that Brahman' in which this world appearance (exists) like a city reflected in a mirror, find fulfilment, O sinless one!

11. Liberated from the grip of egoism, like the moon (after the eclipse), full, ever blissful, self-luminous, one attains one's essence.

12. The destruction of actions leads to that of thought; thence results the dwindling of innate impulses (to act). The obliteration of innate impulses is liberation; it is held to be freedom in life.

13. At all places and by all means, perceiving everything as Spirit, one achieves the dissolution of innate impulses as it strengthens the attitude of universal good will.

14. Never should one be heedless in devotion to Brahman; 'heedlessness is death' so aver the philosophers of Brahman in regard to (this) science.

15. Just as a pulled-up water-reed stays not still, even for a moment, so does Maya (ceaselessly) envelop even a wise man if he averts his face (from the Truth).

16. Whosoever wins absoluteness while alive continues to be absolute even after death. Rooted in concentration, O sinless one, remain steadfast.

17. With the vision of the non-dual Self through unwavering concentration comes the dissolution without residue of the knots of ignorance in the heart.

18. Strengthening the sense of Self vis-à-vis this vision, and rejecting it vis-à-vis the ego, etc., remain indifferent to them all, as to objects like pots and clothes.

19. All things from Brahma down to clumps of grass are nothing but unreal adjuncts. Distinct from the, see one's Self existing as the immutable plenum.

20. One's Self is Brahma, Vishnu, Indra and Shiva; this entire world is one's Self; other than this Self, there is nothing.

21. After repudiating all objective appearances superimposed on one's Self, one remains alone as the supreme Brahman, full, non-dual, stirless.

22. The world is a postulation, as good as non-existent, in the one Reality that is immutable, formless, unqualified; whence is difference?

23. (In the one Reality) devoid of distinctions like the percipient, perception, and the perceived, and of all sufferings, in the absolutely full, spiritual, Self, like unto the ocean at the time of cosmic dissolution, (whence is difference)?

24. Darkness implicit in It as in light is the cause of delusion. Whence is difference in the supreme non-dual and unqualified Reality?

25. In this uniform and supreme Reality, how can the agent of differences dwell? In deep sleep that is nothing but bliss who has perceived difference?

26. This perception of difference is rooted in the mind (of the percipient); there is none of it in the absence of the mind. Therefore, concentrate the mind on the supreme Self as the subject.

27. Upon realizing the Self that is impartite bliss as one's own essence (there follows) the savouring of the timeless bliss that is the Self, both externally and internally.

28. Of detachment the fruit is knowledge: of knowledge the fruit is withdrawal. Experience of Self as bliss leads to peace; again, peace is the fruit of withdrawal.

29. Without the consequent states, the precedent ones are fruitless, indeed. Cessation is supreme satisfaction; matchless bliss is spontaneous.

30. The expressed sense of the word tat (God) has Maya for His adjunct; He is the world-cause. He is characterised by omniscience, etc.; is tinged by transcendence, and is essentially Truth and so forth.

31. The expressed sense of the word 'Tvam' shines forth as the content of the idea and expression 'I'; it is awareness blended with the mind (the inner organ of perception).

32. Only through the exclusion of Maya and avidya, the adjuncts of God and Jiva is the supreme Spirit, the impartite Being, Consciousness and Bliss, indicated.

33. 'To listen', thus is to pursue by means of sentences their import. On the other hand, 'thinking' consists in perceiving its consistency with reason.

34. 'Meditation' is indeed the exclusive attention of the mind fixed on (the import) rendered indubitable through listening and thinking.

35. 'Concentration' is said to be the mind which, outgrowing the dualism between the meditator and meditation, gradually dwells exclusively on the object (of meditation) and is like a flame in a windless spot.

36. Mind's modifications in regard to the Self are uncognized in that state; they are (only) inferred as past, after quitting the state of Samadhi.

37. Crores of karmans, accumulated in this beginningless transmigratory life, are dissolved by means of concentration: (then) pure virtue begins to flourish.

38. The best knowers of Yoga call this concentration the cloud of virtues, since it rains the flood-waters of virtue in a thousand streams.

39-40. When the load of innate impulses is dissolved without residue by means of this (cloud of virtues) and heaps of karmans, good and evil, are totally eradicated, the major text, which at first shone forth immediately, now unobstructed, yields immediate awareness as (clear) as the myrobalan in the palm (of one's hand).

41. The non-occurrence of the impulse (to enjoy, etc.,) in regard to the objects of enjoyment marks the acme of detachment. The highest pitch of awareness is (marked by) the non-occurrence of the egoistic sense.

42(a). The acme of withdrawal is (marked by) the non-occurrence of (even) the latent impulse (to enjoy).

42(b). He is the ascetic of steadfast wisdom who enjoys bliss for ever;

43-44(a). Whose self is merged in Brahman alone; who is immutable and quiescent. Wisdom (prajna) is defined as the unwavering spiritual mode whose content is the unity of Brahman and Atman purged (of all adjuncts).

44(b). Whosoever possesses it (wisdom) without a break is liberated in life;

45. Who has no conceit of 'I' in regard to body and senses; nor the conceit of objects in regard to things other than them - who is free from these two conceits in regard to anything whatsoever is liberated-in-life;

46. Who, in his wisdom, perceives no difference between the subject and Brahman; who neither refers to the creator nor creation is liberated in life.

47. Whose attitude is the same both when he is honoured by the virtuous and when he is persecuted by the wicked is liberated in life.

48. He who has realized the truth of Brahman no longer transmigrates, as hitherto; if he does, this truth has not been realized by him; he is but an extrovert.

49. As long as the experience of pleasure, etc., lasts, so long operative karmans from the past are held to persist. (Causal) actions precede the occurrence of effects; never is this unpreceded by actions.

50. Consequent on the experience 'I am Brahman', karmans accumulated in the course of aeons are dissolved, even as the actions in dreams are, upon waking up.

51. Just as nothing clings to space, so to the sage, who knows the Self to be unattached and indifferent, future actions cling not in the least degree.

52. Just as space is unaffected by the smell of liquor though it touches the pot (containing the liquor), so is Self unaffected by the attributes of Its adjuncts.

53. Karmans done before the dawn of knowledge perish not as a result of that knowledge; they must produce their proper effect even as an arrow shot to hit a target (stops not before hitting it).

54. The arrow discharged (to hit) what was taken for a tiger stops not, though, alter, (the target) is known to be a cow; the target is hit with full force.

55. 'I am un-ageing'; 'I am immortal' - how can one who knows his Self to be such and lives that knowledge fabricate operative past actions?

56. Then only is operative past action real when one mistakes one's Self to be the body. The treatment of the body as Self is improper; therefore reject (the notion) of operative past action.

57. The fabrication of operative past actions is also, indeed, a delusion due to this body.

58. How can the superimposed be real? How can the unreal be born? How can the unborn perish? How can the unreal own operative past actions?

59-60. To answer the dull-witted (who) doubtfully ask how this body persists if the entire effects of nescience with their cause are destroyed by knowledge, Shruti, with an outward eye, propounds the theory of operative past actions; not to suggest to the wise that the body, etc., are real.

61. A total plenum, without beginning and end, measure and change.
Massed being and intelligence, massed eternal bliss, undiminishing,

62. With the sole savour of the subject, full, endless, behold all,
Neither to be shunned nor seized, neither to be held nor propped;

63. Beyond inert forces and actions, subtle, certain, unblemished;
Whose essence is beyond thought, beyond mid and words;

64. Existent, a plenitude, self-proven, pure, awake and matchless.
One only is non-dual Brahman; here is no plurality at all.

To Apantaratamas was this science imparted.
He imparted it to Brahma, who passed it on to Ghorangiras.
The latter gave it to Raikva and Raikva to Rama.
Rama imparted it to all beings.
This is the injunction in regard to Nirvana; this is the injunction of the Vedas, of the Vedas.
This is the secret teaching.

Om! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om! Let there be Peace in me!
Let there be Peace in my environment!
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me!

Here ends the Adhyatmopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Kundika Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1-2. After studying the scriptures during the blemishless period of studentship in which he devotes himself to the service of the teacher, the Brahmacharin with the permission of the teacher, shall marry a suitable wife. Then (at the end of the householder's life) he shall kindle the sacred fire (for renunciation) bravely and perform a sacrifice lasting a day and night in which Brahma, etc., are the deities.
3. Then after dividing his property among his sons in the proper way and giving up all sensory pleasures, he shall journey along sacred places as a Vanaprastha.
4. Subsisting on air only or on (air and) water only or with the addition (in dire need) of approved bulbous roots (and fruits) he shall find all worldly life in his person alone. He shall not (remembering his past comforts) allow his tears fall on the ground.
5-7(a). How can a man, in the company of his wife, be said to have renounced (worldly life) ? How can one who is (merely) known with an appellation (of an ascetic) be said to have renounced ? Hence he should purify himself (first) by renouncing the result of his deeds through self-control (Vanaprastha); thereafter he may take to renunciation. One reaches the stage of forest-life (Vanaprastha) after having maintained the sacred fire (as a householder). He goes to lead the forest-life with self-control accompanied by his wife as though he were a person attached to her.

7(b)-8. 'Why does he undergo (the life of a mendicant monk) in vain, having given up the happiness of worldly life ? What is that (impending) misery the thought of which should make him abandon great pleasures ?' (Such is the query of the wife). 'I am afraid of the (miserable) life in the womb (of another mother) and also the miseries of heat, cold, etc. (So) I wish to enter the cave(-shelter) of renunciation, the means for the painless transcendent state (of Brahman)'. Thus (he replies).

9. Having renounced the sacred fire he shall not return to it (even in mentally reciting the mantras pertaining to it).

10. 'For, I, (i.e. the mantra) (pertaining to this sacred fire) becoming extinct (being incompatible with renunciation) shall be merged into the oncoming (knowledge of Brahman).'

11. He may repeat the mantras pertaining to Self (realization).

12. He shall have consecration. (He shall be) wearing (ochre) coloured garment. (He shall remove) the hairs excluding those in the arm pits and the private parts. With (right) hand raised (he shall set forth as a mendicant monk), abandoning the path of worldly life. He shall move on without (a fixed) abode. Living on alms, he shall deeply ponder over (Vedantic texts) and meditate (on his identity with the transcendent Brahman). He shall possess pure knowledge (pavitram) for the protection of all beings.

13-14. (These) verses are there (or the same theme): (The mendicant monk shall have) a water pot, an (alms-) bowl, a sling (to carry his effects), sandals to traverse a long distance (literally, over the three worlds), a patched garment to withstand cold, a loin cloth to cover (his privities), a purifying ring (pavitram of holy grass), a bath towel and an upper garment; other than these the ascetic shall give up all else.

15. He shall sleep on the sandy bed of a river or outside a temple. He shall not bother his body too much either with pleasures or pain.

16. Pure water should be used for bathing, drinking and cleansing. He shall not become pleased with praise nor shall he curse others when censured.

17. His alms-bowl shall be (a cup) made of leaves and the material for washing shall be the prescribed (fresh earth).

18. Thus provided with the means of living, he shall, with the senses subdued, always mutter the (philosophical) mantras. The wise (ascetic) shall realize in his mind (the identity of the individual self with the universal Self) which is the meaning of Om.

19. (From Brahman arose ether); from ether air; from air fire; from fire water; from water the earth. To (the prime cause of all) these primary elements. Brahman, I resort (in reverence); I resort to the ageless, immortal and indestructible Brahman.

20. In me, the ocean of unalloyed bliss, many a time arise and fall waves of the universe due to the winds of the fanciful sport of illusion (Maya).

21. I am not attached to my body just as the sky is not attached to the clouds. Hence how can I have its (i.e. the body's) characteristics during (the stages of) waking, dreaming and deep sleep ?

22. I am always far beyond imagination like ether; I am different from it (the body) as the sun is from the objects of illumination; I am ever changeless just like the unchangeable (i.e. the Meru mountain) and, like the ocean am I limitless.

23. I am Narayana, I am the destroyer of the (demon) Naraka, I am (Siva), the destroyer of the three (aerial) cities, I am the Purusha, I am the supreme Lord; I am the indivisible consciousness, the witness of all; I am without a superior, I am devoid of 'I-ness' (egotism) and 'mine-ness' (possessiveness).

24-25. (The ascetic) shall, by the practice (of Yoga) bring together the Prana and Apana vital airs in the body. He shall place the (palms of the) two hands at the perineum, gently biting the (tip of the) tongue thrust out to the extent of a grain of barley. Similarly directing the eyes open to the extent of a blackgram seed, towards the (ether of the) ear (and the feet firmly resting) on the ground, he shall not allow the ear (to function) and the nose to smell (i.e. the five senses shall be controlled). (Thus he accomplishes the union of the Prana and Apana vital airs).

26. (Therefore the vital air passing through the Kundalini and the Susumna gets dissolved in the Sahasrarachakra at the top of the head. Then the vision, the mind, vital air and the ‘fire’ of the body reach) the seat of Siva (and get dissolved); that is Brahman; that is the transcendent Brahman. That (Brahman) will be realized by the practice (of Yoga), which is facilitated by the acquisition of practice in previous births.
27. With the (help of the) external and internal organs (the knowledge of the qualified Brahman) called effulgence, reaching the heart and supported by the vital air’s capability (to proceed upwards, goes through the Susumna Nadi) and piercing the skull at the top of the body, one realizes the indestructible (qualified Brahman).
28. Those (sages) who attain the transcendent state (through the passage) in the skull at the top of their body, do never return (to the worldly life) for they realize the lower as well as the higher (Brahman).
29. The attributes of objects seen do not affect the onlooker who is different from them. The attributes of a householder do not affect him who remains non-aligned without any mental modification, just as a lamp (which suffers no change by the objects revealed by it).
30. Let (me) the non-aligned (sage) roll in water or on the ground; I am untouched by their characteristics just as the ether (in the pot) is not affected by the attributes of the pot.
31-32. I am free (from the effect) of activities, and changes, devoid of parts and form, I am without fancies, I am eternal , I am without a support and I am devoid of duality. I am the form of all (beings), I am the all, I am beyond everything and without a second; I am the one indivisible knowledge and I am the compact bliss of the Self.
33. Seeing everywhere the Self, considering the Self as without a second, enjoying the bliss of the Self, I remain without reflections.
34. Walking, standing, sitting, lying or otherwise, the wise sage delighting in the Atman shall live as he wishes (fulfilling his duties; and on leaving the world, will attain final liberation). Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.

1-2. Who is Savitar, who is Savitri ? Who is Savitar, who is Savitri ? Agni is Savitar, earth is Savitri. Where there is Agni there is earth and where is earth there is Agni. The two are causes forming one pair. Varuna alone is Savitar, water – Savitri. When there is Varuna etc., -- they are the sources, forming a pair.
3-6. (Again) Air alone is Savitar, ether is Savitri. Where there is air there is ether (and vice versa) – they are twin sources, forming a pair. Sacrifice alone is Savitar and metres are Savitri – where there is sacrifice there are metres (and vice versa). Thunder is Savitar and lightning is Savitri; where there is lightning (and vice versa). These two are twin sources.
7-8. The moon is Savitar and stars are Savitri. Where there is the moon, there are the stars (and vice versa) – these two are twin sources.
9. Man is Savitar, woman is Savitri. Where there is a man there is a woman and vice versa. They form one pair of sources.
10. Mind is Savitar and world is Savitri – where there is mind, there is woman (and vice versa) – these two are twin sources.
11. Of Savitri the first foot is Earth. ‘Of that Savitar, the admirable; fire indeed is adorable, water and moon are adorable. The second foot is Bhuvar, the mind region; ‘we meditate on the radiance of that deity’ – the fire is the radiance; sun, moon are radiance.

12. The third foot is the firmament – which may inspire our thoughts – this woman and man bring forth.
13. He who knows this Savitri conquers death.
14-15. Of Bala and Atibala Virat Purusha is the seer, Gayatri the metre and deity. A, U, M are seed letters etc. Their application is to the removal of hunger etc., ‘klam’ etc., are the group of six limbs. Meditation: I ceaselessly practise these two, fronted by the moon pouring life into all, adept in removing sin, the rays of Vedic wisdom, whose are forms are Aum, whose bodies are solar in form !
Om, hsim bala, great goddess; hrim, mighty one; klim, yielder of four-fold human goals, granter of the boon of Savitar; hrim, adorable light of the deity !
O Atibala, embodiment of all mercy, destroyer of hunger and fatigue, we meditate on you who may inspire our thoughts. O essence of inspiration, adorned with the crown of Pranava, Hum, Phat, Svaha.
One who knows thus accomplishes his talks and shares his realm with Savitri.
This is the Upanishad.

Atma Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I-1. Now Angirah: The Spirit, manifests Itself, in three ways: the self, the inner Self and the supreme Self.
I-2. There are the organs – the skin, inner and outer: flesh, hair, the thumb, the fingers, the backbone, the nails, the ankles, the stomach, the navel, the penis, the hip, the thighs, the cheeks, the ears, the brows, the forehead, the hands, the flanks, the head and the eyes; these are born and these die; so they constitute the self.
I-3. Next this inner self is (indicated by the elements) earth, water, fire, air, ether, desire, aversion, pleasure, pain, desire, delusion, doubts, etc., and memory, (marked by) the high pitch and accentlessness, short, long and prolate (vowel sounds), the hearer, smeller, taster, leader, agent and self of knowledge vis-à-vis stumbling, shouting, enjoying, dancing, singing and playing on musical instruments. He is the ancient spirit that distinguishes between Nyaya, Mimamsa and the institutes of law and the specific object of listening, smelling and grasping. He is the inner Self.
I-4. Next the supreme Self, the imperishable, He is to meditated on with (the help of) the Yogic steps, breath control, withdrawal (of sense organs), fixation (of mind), contemplation and concentration, He is to be inferred by the thinkers on the Self as like unto the seed of the Banyan tree or a grain of millet or a hundredth part of a split hair. (Thus) is He won and not known. He is not born, does not die, does not dry, is not wetted, not burnt, does not tremble, is not split, does not sweat. He is beyond the gunas, is spectator, is pure, partless, alone, subtle, owning naught, blemishless, immutable, devoid of sound, touch, colour, taste, smell, is indubitable, non-grasping, omnipresent. He is unthinkable and invisible. He purifies the impure, the unhallowed. He acts not. He is not subject to empirical existence.

II-1. The good named the Atman is pure, one and non-dual always, in the form of Brahman. Brahman alone shines forth.
II-2. Even as the world with its distinctions like affirmation, negation, etc., Brahman alone shines forth.
II-3. With distinctions like teacher and disciples (also), Brahman alone appears. From the point of view of truth, pure Brahman alone is.
II-4. Neither knowledge nor ignorance, neither the world nor aught else (is there).
What sets empirical life afoot is the appearance of the world as real.
II-5(a). What winds up empirical life is (its) appearance as unreal.
II-5(b)-6. What discipline is required to know, 'this is a pot', except the adequacy of the means of right knowledge ? Once it is given, the knowledge of the object (supervenes). The ever present Self shines when the means of Its cognition (is present).
II-7. Neither place nor time nor purity is required. The knowledge 'I am Devadatta' depends on nothing else.
II-8. Similarly, the knowledge 'I am Brahman' of the Knower of Brahman (is independent). Just as the whole world by the sun, by the splendour of the Knowledge of Brahman is everything illumined.
II-9-10(a). What can illumine the non-existent, and illusory, non-Self ? That which endows the Vedas, Shastras, Puranas and all other beings with import – that Knower what will illumine ?
II-10(b)-11. The child ignores hunger and bodily pain and plays with things. In the same way, the happy Brahman-Knower delights (in himself) without the sense of 'mine' and 'I'. Thus the silent sage, alive and alone, the embodiment of desirelessness, treats the objects of desire.
II-12. Existing as the Self of all, he is ever content abiding in his Self. Free from all wealth, he rejoices always: though companionless, he is mighty.
II-13. Though not eating, he is ever content, peerless he looks on all alike: though acting, he does nothing: though partaking of fruit, yet, he is no experiencer thereof.
II-14-17. Living in a body, he is still disembodied; though determinate, he is omnipresent; never is this Brahman-Knower, disembodied and ever existent, affected by the pleasant and the unpleasant or by the good and the evil. Because it appears to be encompassed by Rahu (the darkness), the unencompassed sun is said to be encompassed by deluded men, not knowing the truth. Similarly, deluded folk behold the best of Brahman-Knowers, liberated from the bondage of body, etc., as though he is embodied, since he appears to have a body. The body of the liberated one remains like the shed Slough of the snake.
II-18. Moved a little, hither and thither, by the vital breath, (that body) is borne like a piece of timber, up and down, by the flood waters.
II-19-20. By fate is the body borne into contexts of experiences at appropriate times. (On the contrary) he who, giving up all migrations, both knowledge and unknowable, stays as the pure unqualified Self, is himself the manifest Shiva. He is the best of all Brahman-Knowers. In life itself the foremost Brahman-Knower is the ever free, he has accomplished his End.
II-21. All adjuncts having perished, being Brahman he is assimilated to the non-dual Brahman, like a man who, with (appropriate) apparels, is an actor and without them (resumes his natural state),
II-22(a). In the same way the best of Brahman-Knowers is always Brahman alone and none else.
II-22(b)-23. Just as space becomes space itself when the (enclosing) pot perishes, so, when particular cognitions are dissolved, the Brahman-Knower himself becomes nothing but Brahman, as milk poured into milk, oil into oil, and water into water become (milk, oil and water).

II-24(a). Just as, combined, they become one, so does the Atman-knowing sage in the Atman.
II-24(b). Thus disembodied liberation is the infinite status of Being.
II-25. Having won the status of Brahman, no longer is the Yogin reborn, for his ignorance-born bodies have all been consumed by the experimental knowledge of Being as the Self.
II-26-27(a). Because that Yogin has become Brahman, how can Brahman be reborn ? Bondage and liberation, set up by Maya, are not real in themselves in relation to the Self, just as the appearance and disappearance of the snake are not in relation to the stirless rope.
II-27(b). Bondage and liberation may be described as real and unreal and as due to the nescience (concealment of truth).
II-28-29. Brahman suffers from no concealment whatsoever. It is uncovered, there being nothing other than It (to cover It). The ideas, 'it is' and 'it is not', as regards Reality, are only ideas in the intellect. They do not pertain to the eternal Reality. So bondage and liberation are set up by Maya and do not pertain to the Self.
II-30. In the supreme Truth as in the sky, impartite, inactive, quiescent, flawless, unstained and non-dual where is room for (mental) construction ?
II-31. Neither suppression nor generation, neither the bond nor the striving: neither the liberty seeking nor the liberated – this is the metaphysical truth.

Om! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !

May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !

Shiva, who is the Lord of all beings (Pasupathi), is always witness for everything. The minds of all people are controlled as well as sent to different topics by Him only. The soul acts because of him. The words talk because of Him. The eyes see shapes because of Him. The ear hears everything because of Him. Even other organs only perform the actions allotted to them because of Him. This act of His is not due to the nature but by illusion. Whatever has been taught as “What is heard?”, to the beings, has been taught so by Shiva who is Pasupathi and He gives the nature of “What is heard?” to them. He enters the minds of souls, sits there as its nature and gives it the position of the mind. He is different from all things that are known to us through organs. Of all that knowledge taught to the different organs, He is the one who is there taking suitable forms, and gives the being the relevant experience. Therefore eyes, speech and other organs do not go to His great self-shining form. That shine of the soul, which is not due to its action, is due to the soul itself and not the organs. Suppose we decide to do away with rules of logic, it can be told that he who understands Brahman himself becomes the great knower of Brahman.

This type of outside knowledge should be attained by truth, penance and other rules of life dictated by celibacy and by the paths shown by Vedanta. People in whom there are no faults see realistic object of self shine in their own body. Others do not see it. By having a discipline in food habits, mental discipline develops. By mental discipline, one gets wisdom. Step by step. the problems in the mind are solved. By the knowledge of the form of Brahman when the world becomes that which should be enjoyed, he eats the form which is he himself. There is nothing else except oneself. The savant who knows Brahman, whenever he sees the world does not see it as something different from himself. This is the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,

1. Now then Saunaka, the great householder (mahashala) approached in due form the revered sage Pippalada of Angiras family and asked him: (All created things) were surely present in the divine ether of the heart of Brahman (the Hiranyagarbha). How did the great lord create them out of himself in different species and who is this great and powerful lore ? To him (Pippalada) said: The most excellent lore of Brahman which I now expound, (Brahman of that alone) is true. It shines brilliantly in the city of the transcendent Brahman, being beyond Rajas (and the other gunas), partless, pure, indestructible and sustaining the power of the senses and the vital airs. He is the creator of the group of bees (in the form of individual souls) and restrains (their outward vision). Remaining in the city of his Self, doing no worldly work (as an ascetic) (he realizes oneness with Brahman). (But) as a doer of action he reaps the fruit (of repeated births and deaths), like a farmer. The knower of the true nature of action does action, (without attachment). Knowing the secret of action, (that unattached action leads to liberation) (the ascetic) shall do action. Which person (possessing discrimination) will throw the net (of motivated action) on the one (Brahman, screening it) ? (Motiveless action) will not drag him (to worldliness), will not drag him.
2. The deities presiding over the vital breath are four (Vishva, Viraj, Otir and Turya). All the nadis

(where the vital breath and the deities remain are also four). (The former two active in Rama and Arama get fatigued in the waking and dreaming states and rest during) deep sleep as a hawk flying in the sky. Just as a hawk flying in the sky goes (when fatigued) into its abode, the nest, so the speaker (the Self) after remaining in this (waking) and the other (dreaming state, rests in deep sleep). This Self (while resting) in the golden transcendent sheath (of the ether of the heart) and being immortal is active in the three nadis (Rama, etc.,). (The first pada of this being avidya) it remains in the state of Brahman in the three quarters. The remaining pada (the Jiva) attains (its natural state) and then follows (i.e. attains liberation). Hence the speaker of elsewhere (the Jiva in the avidya) and the other (the Tripada Brahman are fancied to be different and thereby the Jiva wanders in bondage.

(Although) the Jiva remains in the golden transcendent sheath (of the ether of the heart, yet it experiences the states of waking, etc., due to avidya). Just as Devadatta (i.e. any person) awakened from sleep when prodded with a stick does not go back (to sleep immediately, so also the Jiva getting wisdom from the Vedanta does not have the delusion of the three states of waking, etc.,); and it is not tainted by good or bad acts (such as the optional) charitable deeds. It is similar to a small boy who experiences joy without specific desires (in whatever thing that comes to him). Just as the luminous being (Jiva), (after getting fatigued in the waking and dreaming states) welcomes the joy of deep sleep, so it experiences bliss by realizing (its oneness with) the supreme effulgence (Brahman), which gives all round lustre to luminaries (such as the sun). Thus the heart (chitta) merges itself in the highest (Brahman) and thus realizing the Paramatman enjoys bliss. The pure colour (i.e. the state of non-distinction) arises from the (grace of) Ishvara. Again by the same path of turya-svapna (dreaming in the fourth state) he gives rest to the Self. Just as a leech moves from one position to another (the Jiva moves from the waking state of the turya to the dreaming state of the turya); this desire (to move from one state to another in the turya) arises due to (the grace of) Ishvara. By this the Jiva enjoys itself (by means of the distinctionful and distinctionless deep meditation, Savikalpa and Nirvikalpa Samadhi). The juncture of the individual and supreme consciousness is rejected as there is a tinge of distinction involved in it. (When distinctionlessness alone exists) it is the highest (i.e. Brahman) and there is nothing other than that. (When Self-realization does not result by the study, etc., of the scripture) then one shall resort to the eight-limbed Yoga; this like a flower of a plantain tree (ever rubbing against the stem and attaining the state of a blossom) succeeds (in attaining perfection). That which remains as the source of Indra (Ishvara) is ever awake there, as the source of the Veda (as Parameshvara). Beyond (the bonds of) good and bad, he (the ascetic) is not tainted by (accidental) good or bad actions. This effulgent Being is the (bestower of) favour on other gods (like the god Brahma), the ‘internal check’ of the form of unattached pure consciousness, the Purusha, the Hamsa of the Pranava, the supreme Brahman. It is not the chief Prana (vital breath). The Pranava is the Self (Jiva). (This state of the Jiva) remains as the first effulgent being. How can he who knows thus (the true nature of the Pranava) set forth difference (between the Jiva and Brahman) ? He realizes that the Jiva is Brahman (alone).

3. Then to this realized person reality (i.e. true wisdom) constitutes the inner tuft and sacred thread. To the Brahmana desirous of liberation is (allowed) the state of the inward tuft and sacred thread. The wearing of externally visible tuft and sacred thread (is necessary) for the householders engaged in rituals. The characteristic of the inward sacred thread is not clearly visible like external thread; it is the union with reality inwardly.

4. It (avidya) is not existent (as the cause is not visible), nor non-existent (as the effect is visible as the phenomenal world), nor both (existent and non-existent part, as the two are incompatible). It is not different (from Brahman as it has no independent existence), nor non-different (as it is not a substance), nor of both (different and non-different, as it is an impossibility). It is not possessed of parts (as the parts are absent in the cause), nor partless (as the effect is seen possessed of parts), nor a combination of both. (Thus avidya is indescribable). It is to be discarded by the realization of oneness of Brahman and the Self; for it is the cause of illusion. Thus (it is to be understood).

5. There is nothing other than Brahman of the five padas (i.e. the turyatita). There are four places for realizing the inward Jiva-Brahman who consists of four padas inside the body. (The vyasti's four padas are: Vishva, Taijasa, Prajna and Turiya. The samasti's four padas are: Viraj, Sutra, Bija and Turiya). In the eyes, throat, heart and head there are (the four) states of waking, dreaming, deep sleep and turya. (Moreover the Atman is to be conceived as) the Ahavaniya, Garhapatya, Dakshina and Sabhya fires. In the waking state (the presiding deity is) the god Brahma, in dreaming state Vishnu, in deep sleep Rudra and the fourth state is the indestructible one, consisting of consciousness. Hence the four states (waking, etc.,) are to be considered as a covering by four fingers and just as the sacred thread is of ninety-six four-finger breadths (in extent) so the inward brahma-sutra consists of ninety-six categories (tattvas). As the sacred thread consists of three threads so the inward brahma-sutra is brought to the state of thirty two categories in each of the three gunas.

This state of the triad purified by wisdom is to be known separately as the three gods (Brahma, Vishnu and Shiva). This is known as the nine Brahman-s possessed of nine attributes. These counted as nine, being rendered into three each having three attributes, are to be identified with the digits of the sun, moon and fire. The first and last (of the triad) are to be turned thrice in the middle and are to be considered as Brahma, Vishnu and Maheshvara. The first and last are to be joined and the knot of non-duality is to be made in the knot of consciousness. Then this which extends from the navel to the Brahmarandhra and connected with the twenty-seven tattvas separately and possessing the three gunas is to be considered as one though they are seen with the characteristics of the Trinity. This (inward) brahma-sutra is to be considered as hanging from the left shoulder reaching up to the right hip. The meeting together of the first and last is to be understood as having one foundation. Things made of clay are considered real (but) it is verbosity (born of ignorance); the transformation is a (mere) name; that it is clay alone is the truth. (As there is no pot without clay, so the primary cause, Brahman alone is real). With the two letters of the Hamsa (i.e. I am the Hamsa, Brahman) he should be convinced of the internal tuft and sacred thread. The state of a Brahmana is the state deserving meditation on Brahman. The state of being a sage has the absence of visible tuft and sacred thread. Thus the householder has visible tuft for performing ritual and the sacred thread for acquiring wisdom. To the state of the semblance of a Brahmana there is the tuft consisting of a mass of hair and sacred thread made of cotton threads. (The brahma-sutra is one alone); it is four (as Vishva, Viraj, etc.,) by quadruplication. The twenty-four tattvas constitute the threads. The nine tattvas constitute the one transcendent Brahman, (but people) provide many paths (such as Sankhya, Yoga, etc.,) due to difference in approach. Liberation is one alone to all, whether they are Brahma and the other gods, divine sages or human beings. Brahman is one alone. The state of the Brahmana is one alone. Castes, stages of life and special duties are divergent. The tuft is the same to the castes and stages of life. To the ascetic seeking salvation the basis of tuft and sacred thread, (the wise) declare, is the Pranava alone. The Hamsa is the tuft, the Pranava is the sacred thread and the Nada is the connecting link. This is the dharma and no other is the dharma. How is that ? The Pranava, Hamsa and Nada constitute the three fold thread and this remains in consciousness in one's heart. Know this to be the three fold Brahman. (The ascetic) shall discard the worldly tuft and sacred thread.

6. Having had a shave removing the tuft, a wise person shall discard the external sacred thread. He shall have as the sacred thread the transcendent Brahman which is indestructible.

7. For avoiding rebirth he shall ever long for liberation. The sutra is so called as it indicates (liberation); the sutra indeed is the highest position.

8. He knows the sutra who has become a seeker after liberation, a mendicant monk. He is the knower of the Veda, having unimpeachable conduct. He is the learned Brahmana who sanctifies by his presence the persons who sit in the same row to dine with him.

9. The Yogin, who is the knower of Yoga, a Brahmana and an ascetic shall wear that sutra by which all this (phenomenal world) is joined together (as a unity) just as gems are strung together in a thread.

10. A learned Brahmana who is deeply intent on Yoga and spiritual wisdom shall discard the external sacred thread. He who wears the sutra consisting of devotion to Brahman attains salvation. There is neither impurity nor the state of eating the leavings of others when one possesses that sutra.

11. Those who, having the sacred thread of spiritual wisdom, possess the sutra inwardly are the knowers of the sutra in the world and they are the (true) wearers of the sacred thread.
12. Their tuft and sacred thread consist of spiritual wisdom (Jnana), they are established in Jnana; to them Jnana alone is supreme and this Jnana is declared to be sanctifying.
13. The wise one whose tuft consists of Jnana and no other, like the flame emanating from fire, is said to possess the (true) tuft; not the others who wear (a mass of) hair.
14. Those who are immersed in activities, whether Vedic (ritual) or worldly actions live as Brahmanas in name only, filling their bellies. They come to grief and have rebirth again and again.
15. The sacred thread hanging from the left shoulder to the right hip is contrariwise (to liberation). The wise shall wear (i.e. possess) true knowledge which is rooted in consciousness, having threads in the form of true principles (tattvas) and extending from the navel to the tip of the aperture in the crown of the head (Brahmarandhra).
16. This sacred thread which forms part of ritual and made of (cotton) threads is to be worn by them (i.e. the ignorant). He whose tuft consists of wisdom as also his sacred thread has all the (true) characteristics of a Brahmana; others have none at all.
17. It is this sacred thread which is the supreme panacea. The wise one who wears this sacred thread attains liberation.
18. That learned Brahmana is entitled to renunciation who has the sacred thread both within and without; but the one having one (i.e. the external one) alone is never entitled to renunciation.
19. Hence by all effort the ascetic shall long for liberation. Discarding the external thread he shall wear the internal sutra within himself.
20. Disregarding the external phenomenal world, tuft and sacred thread he shall hold on to the tuft and sacred thread in the form of the sacred syllable (Pranava) and Brahman (Hamsa) and thus equip himself for liberation. Thus declared the revered sage Saunaka. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Avadhuta Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Then, it is said, Samkriti approached the venerable Avadhuta, Dattatreya, and questioned: Venerable Sir, Who is an Avadhuta ? What is his condition ? What his characteristic ? And what his worldly existence ? To him replied the venerable Dattatreya, the most compassionate:
2. The Avadhuta is so called because he is immortal [akshara]; he is the greatest [varenya]; he has discarded worldly ties [dhutasamsarabandhana]; and he is the indicated meaning of the sentence 'Thou art That', etc., [tattvamasyadi-lakshya].
3. He who rests constantly in himself, after crossing (the barrier of) castes and stages (of social position) and thus rises above varnas and asramas and is in union (with God) is said to be an Avadhuta.
4. His joy [priya] is (to be envisaged as) the head; delight [moda] is his right wing; great delight [pramoda] his left wing; and bliss (his very self). Thus he assumes a fourfold condition.
5. One should identify Brahman neither with the head nor with the middle part nor with the bottom but with (what remains in the shape of) the tail, since it is said that Brahman is ‘the Tail’ and substratum. Thus, those who contemplate this fourfold division attain the supreme Goal.
6. Not by rituals, not by begetting children, not by wealth, but by renunciation [tyaga] alone a few attained immortality.
7. His (the Avadhuta’s) worldly existence consists in moving about freely, with or without clothes. For them there is nothing righteous or unrighteous; nothing holy or unholy. Through all-consuming, correct knowledge [samgrahaneshti] (the Avadhuta) performs Ashvamedha sacrifice within (himself). That is the greatest sacrifice and the great Yoga.

8. Nought of this extraordinary, free action (of his) should be disclosed. This is the great vow [mahavrata]. He is not tainted like the ignorant.
9. As the sun absorbs all waters, and the fire consumes all things (remaining unaffected by them), even so, the pure Yogin enjoys all objects, unstained by virtues or sins.
10. As the ocean into which all waters flow maintains its own nature despite the water pouring in (from all sides), so, he alone attains peace into whom all desires flow in like manner; not he who seeks the objects of pleasure.
11. There is neither death nor birth; none is bound, none aspires. There is neither seeker after liberation nor any liberated; this indeed is the ultimate Truth.
12. Many were my activities perchance in the past for gaining things here and hereafter, or for obtaining liberation. All that is now of the past.
13. That itself is the state of contentment. Verily remembering the same (i.e. the past) achievements involving objects, he now remains thus ever content. The miserable ignorant, desirous of children, etc., needs must suffer.
14. Wherefore shall I suffer, who am filled with supreme bliss ? Let those who yearn to go to the other worlds perform rituals.
15. What shall I, who am of the nature of all the worlds, perform ? For what and how ? Let those who are worlds, perform ? For what and how ? Let those who are qualified interpret the Shastras or teach the Vedas.
16. I have no such qualification, since I am free of action. I have no desire for sleeping or begging, bathing or cleaning. Nor do I do them.
17. If onlookers thus superimpose, let them do so. What matters to me the superimposition of others ? A heap of the red-black berries (of the Abrus precatorius) would not burn, even if others superimposed fire on it. Likewise, I partake not of worldly duties superimposed (on me) by others.
18. Let them, who are ignorant of the reality, study the scriptures; knowing (the reality) why should I study ? Let them who have doubts reflect (upon what was studied). Having no doubts, I do not reflect.
19. Were I under illusion, I may meditate; having no illusion, what meditation can there be (for me) ? Confusion of body for the self, I never experience.
20. The habitual usage ‘I am a man’ is possible even without this confusion, for it is due to impressions accumulated during a long time.
21. When the results of actions set in motion [prarabdha-karman] are exhausted, the habitual usage also ends. This (worldly usage) will not cease even with repeated meditation unless such actions are exhausted.
22. If infrequency of worldly dealings is sought, let there be contemplation for you. Wherefore should I, to whom worldly dealings offer no hindrance, contemplate ?
23. Because I do not have distractions, I do not need concentration, distraction or concentration being of the mind that modifies.
24. What separate experience can there be for me, whom am of the nature of eternal experience ? What has to be done is done, what has to be gained is gained for ever.
25. Let my dealings, worldly, scriptural or of other kinds proceed as they have started, I being neither an agent (of action) nor one affected (by it).
26. Or, even though I have achieved what has to be achieved, let me remain on the scriptural path for the sake of the well-being of the world. What harm for me thereby?
27. Let the body be engaged in the worship of gods, bathing, cleaning, begging and so forth. Let speech repeatedly utter the tara-mantra or recite the Upanishadic passages.
28. Let thought contemplate Vishnu or let it be dissolved in the bliss of Brahman. I am the witness. I neither do nor cause any doing.
29. Being contented with duties fulfilled and achievements accomplished, he ceaselessly reflects as follows with a contented mind:

30. Blessed am I, blessed am I. Directly and always, I experience my own self. Blessed am I, blessed am I, the bliss of Brahman shines brightly in me.
31. Blessed am I, blessed am I. I do not see the misery of existence. Blessed am I, blessed am I; my ignorance has fled away.
32. Blessed am I, blessed am I; no duty exists for me. Blessed am I, blessed am I; everything to be obtained is now obtained.
33. Blessed am I, blessed am I. What comparison is there in the world for my contentment ! Blessed am I, blessed am I; blessed, blessed, again and again blessed.
34. Logical ! The virtues accrued have yielded fruit ! Indeed they have ! By the richness of virtue we are as we are.
35. Wondrous knowledge, wondrous knowledge ! Wondrous happiness, wondrous happiness ! Wondrous scriptures, wondrous scriptures ! Wondrous teachers, wondrous teachers !
36. He who studies this also achieves everything to be achieved. He becomes free of the sins of drinking liquor. He becomes free of the sins of stealing gold. He becomes free of the sins of killing a Brahmin. He becomes free of actions, ordained or prohibited. Knowing this, let him wander according to his free will. Om, Truth. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Avadhuta Upanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Tripura Tapini Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

I-1: Now, in this sphere (of nescience), the Lord (Sadasiva), assuming the guises of Prajapati, Vishnu and Rudra, comes to be styled Goddess Tripura. By His primeval Power are fashioned the three abodes – the earth, the atmosphere and the heavens, or the heavens, the earth and the nether world. In the form of hrim, identical with the maya of Hara, the divine Hrillekha permeates, with Her terrible might, the terminus of the three peaks (above the junction of the two eyebrows), the seat of equilibrium of the three gunas, and the region where the world of objects is dissolved. This selfsame divinity is called Tripura.

I-2: On that adorable splendour
Of the divine Creator we
Meditate; may He our thoughts inspire –
Who beyond all darkness is, Om.
I-3: Let us for all-knowing Fire the soma press
Who, of our foes, the wealth consumes;
As boat over river, so may He help
Us over all difficulties, all troubles.
I-4: Let us adore with sacrifice the three-eyed God,
Fragrant increaser of earthly growth.

Like cucumber fruit from its stalk released,
Let me from death, find freedom unto immortality.

I-5: The supreme sovereign, the goddess of the three cities, is the embodiment of the three Vedas and the supreme knowledge consisting of the 108 letters. The first four divisions elucidate Brahman; the second pertains to Sakti or Power; and the third to Siva, the Good.

I-6: It is recorded that the worlds, the Vedas, the sciences, legends, codes, medical works and astronomical treatises have all proceeded from the union of Siva and Sakti (Goodness and Power).

I-7: Now we shall elucidate the supreme mystery of it (i.e. the mantra given above). The syllable tat of the great mantra is the eternal Brahman, the supreme Lord, indefinable, impeccable, unconditioned, and unconstrained. He thinks, perceives, evolves, desires the status of consciousness. Thus that sole Deity, essentially good, evolves as the visible world. In the ascetics, sacrifices, mystics, He desires and what is desired is born. Being free from desires (in truth) and impeccable, He holds sway. He puts forth (letters like) a, ka, ca, ta, ta, pa, ya and sa. Hence is the Lord named Desire. So, technically, (the Lord as) Desire pervades ka. Desire alone is this tat. Thus is karma understood. Hence it is the sense of tat. Whoso knows thus (becomes the Lord).

I-8: Savitur varenyam. The root supreme means ‘to give birth to a living thing’. Savitur gives birth to living things; power gives birth.

I-9: This primeval power is Tripura,
The supreme sovereign, Tripura;
Goddess great with ear-rings adorned
In sphere of fire abiding.

I-10: Whosoever masters (this knowledge) pervades everything. The power of the triangle (the serpent power) creates with (the aid of the) exalted letter e. So only the letter e is taken.

I-11: Varenyam means the best, the adorable, the imperishable, worthy of obeisance. So varenyam is understood as the letter e. Whoso knows this (becomes the best).

I-12: Bhargo devasya dhimahi – this we shall expound: Dha denotes bearing. By thought is the supreme Lord borne. Bharga is the shining one that dwells in the centre; the imperishable fourth (letter), the immediate Fourth, the all, the inmost of everything. The fourth letter i is in the middle of words. Thus is the form of bharga expounded, they say. So the letter i is understood as the equivalent of bhargo devasya dhi.

I-13: The exposition of mahi. The letter in which are present greatness, inertness and hardness is mahi. The letter la is the supreme abode. The letter la denotes the sphere, predominantly hard, comprising the seas, the mountains, the seven islands and the forests, and having a resplendent form. By mahi the goddess Earth is denoted.

I-14: Dhiyo yo nah prachodayat. May the supreme Self, the primeval, transcendental Sadasiva, inspire (our) thoughts, (our) luminous Self, with the steadfast letter la towards the transcendental, undifferentiated Real, which is beyond the sphere of desire for contemplation. Without verbal utterance, holding this in mind only, should one meditate.

I-15: Paro rajase savadom. Finally that (which is other than the Self) becomes the supreme Light, pure consciousness, the divinity dwelling in the heart, whose mark is consciousness, and which is (the same as) hrim, whose abode is the heart. So the group of five letters, Vagbhavakuta, which gives rise to the five elements and consists of five sections, is clarified. Who knows thus (reaps the results).

I-16: Now the next group that has become Kamakala is called Kamakuta, say the wise. In the utterance of the thirty-two sacred syllables, tat savitur varenyam, etc., tat is the supreme Self, Sadasiva, the imperishable, the pure, the unconditioned. The syllable ha, setting forth the identity (with Siva), has the form of Siva; it is held to be unarticulated, (though) a syllable. Thus, remaining external, it (ha) indicates the Power.

I-17: Along the line indicated earlier of tat savituh the moon (whose seed-syllable is sa) must be placed next to the sun (whose seed-syllable is ha). (The light of the sun) fills the region between the basic circle and the sacred orifice of the crown. The syllable sa is said to be unique. (He who is meditated on as tat and savitur) is the divine being whose essence is Siva and Sakti.

I-18: Siva is the Supreme God
So (Brahman-knowers) say;
Sakti is all that is born;
Sun and moon united are
Hamsa – Brahman attributeless.

I-19: From Siva supreme, who creates
Desire's objects, wells up desire;
Lord of desires, the choice Light
Is described as the letter ka.

I-20: Tat Savitur varenyam Bhargo devah. The imperishable milk that wipes out the effects of acts and their agents is worth imbibing. That imperishable (milk) is won through the union of the supreme Self and the individual self. That is the clear third syllable ha. It is indeed Sadasiva, the flawless, the shining divinity. The last syllable is thus expounded as the supreme abode.

I-21: Dhi denotes upholding; the upholding of inert matter is associated with mahi, denoted by the syllable, la. The sense of la coming after ha denoting Siva is clearly (Brahman). The last syllable is the Supreme Spirit. May it inspire our thoughts !

I-22: Paro rajase savadom: This group is the abode of Kamakala (i.e. the Vagbhava group). He who treads the six paths (such as the path of letters) reaches the seat of Vishnu. Whoso knows thus (reaches that seat). Nothing besides this (exists), says the Lord.

I-23: After this the other, the third group, Saktikuta, attains (accord) with the Gayatri of thirty-two syllables.

I-24: Tat Savitur varenyam. From the Self (comes) the sky; from the sky the air stirs forth. What comes into being in dependence on It is adorable. Befitting Savitur is the coming together of the individual self and the Supreme Self. The syllable denoting the individual self, (sa), clearly attains the form of the luminous Power.

I-25: Bhargo devasya dhi. With these words is counted the syllable (ka) denoting Siva who contains (all). With mahi, etc. (la is in accord). With the desirable, lovely, visible remainder (i.e. dhiyo yo nah, etc.), the desirable, lovely (hrillekha is in accord). Thus is Saktikuta elucidated.

I-26: Whoso repeats thus the fifteen-syllabled mantra of Tripura attains all desires; he attains all enjoyments; he conquers all worlds; he causes all words to bloom; he attains the status of Rudra; breaking through the abode of Vishnu (the veil of Maya), he reaches the supreme Brahman.

I-27: Having set forth the primeval vidya (incantation), the Sakti group (sa ka la hrim) and Power and Siva (denoted by sa ka) (must be contemplated in the first abode, the wakeful state). The Lopamudra incantation (ha sa ka la hrim) (must be contemplated) in the second abode, (the dream state).

I-28: In the third abode (or the collective sleep state) must be contemplated the previous incantation, the Power, hrillekha, without the nasal sound (sa ka la hri), the incantation on which Durvasas, the wrathful sage, meditated.

I-29: The Vagbhava group of the previous incantation is described as pertaining to Manu, Chandra and Kubera.

I-30: After Madana (or klim) comes the auspicious Vagbhava; next is the Kamakala (ka, etc.); next is the Sakti group, sa, etc. This grouping, in this order, was adored by Manu, and must be contemplated in the fourth abode (the Visva state).

I-31: (First) that which is styled Siva and Sakti (namely ha, etc.); then Vagbhava; again the Siva and Sakti group; and the third (sa, etc.) – this incantation, adored of Chandra, is to be contemplated in the fifth abode (the Taijasa state).

I-32: The incantation of Siva, etc., added to that of Chandra is the incantation of Kubera; it must be contemplated in the sixth abode (the Prajna state). Whoso knows this (attains Kubera's wealth).

I-33: Leaving out the fourth vowel i, and placing the sun and the moon (represented by ha and sa) in the beginning of all (groups), there results the vidya (incantation) promoting power over desires; it is named after Agastya and must be meditated on in the seventh abode (the Viraj state).
I-34: In the incantation (of Agastya) given above, set in twofold manner, ha ha, representing the incantations beginning with Kama and Madana; then sa, the seed-syllable of Sakti, and ka, the beginning of Vagbhava. Of sa and ka, let the vowels be shortened into half-syllables. This is the incantation of Nandi (to be contemplates) in the eighth abode (the Sutratman state).
I-35: The Vagbhava group; the incantation of Agastya, consisting of words and meanings styled Kamakala; (then) all the power of Maya (the Sakti group) – (these, integrated, were adored by the sun and so) this is called the incantation of Prabhakara. (It must be meditated on) in the mind abode (the state of the causal abode).
I-36: Again the incantation of Agastya; (then) Vagbhava; the seed-letter of Sakti (hrim); the seed-letter of Kama (klim); the seed-letters of Siva and Sakti (hamsa); (again) the seed-letter of Kama (klim); the seed-letter of the earth (lam); that of Maya (hrim); the abode of Kamakala (the six syllables beginning with ha); the seed-letters of the moon and the sun (so’ham); the seed-letter of Kama (klim); that of Siva (ham); that of Mahiman (sa); the third (i.e. hamsa, so’ham and hamsa) – (integrated), this incantation, adored by Shanmukha must be meditated on in the tenth abode.
I-37: Repeating the incantation of Agastya after that of Shanmukha, one gets the incantation of the supreme Siva who rules over the last region. It must be meditated on in the eleventh abode (in the spirit of Anujnatir).
I-38: Repeating the incantation of Agastya with Vagbhava, the incantation of Kubera, the abode of Kamakala and the sovereign group of Sakti derived from the incantation of Lopamudra, one gets the incantation of Vishnu. It must be meditated on in the twelfth abode (in the spirit of pure Anujna). He who knows thus (becomes Vishnu).
I-39: The Lord (Sadasiva) said to all the gods: Having listened to the incantation (set forth by Me) and made it clear to yourself (‘I am Brahman’), know (there is nothing other than Brahman) and reduce (whatever appears besides) to Brahman. Enthrone the supreme vidya, the Divinity in the heart – the Divinity styled Kama, the Primeval One; whose form is the Fourth; who transcends the Fourth, who exceeds all; who occupies all seats consecrated with holy spells; who is surrounded on all sides by deities seated on the main and subordinate seats; who pervades all parts (from Prana, vital breath, to naman, name); the deity who is replete with delight; who is in union with the supreme Spirit; who is in the heart; whose gift is immortality; who is complete and who is possessed of senses; who, forever, is uprisen; who comprises three groups; has three abodes, and is the supreme and most excellent Maya; who is the supreme power of Vishnu. Enthrone in the pericarp of the heart’s lotus the supreme, sacred Lakshmi, the Maya ever uprisen; who controls the senses of Her devotees; who overwhelms the god of love; who is armed with bow and arrow; who inspires eloquence; who abides in the centre of the moon’s sphere, is adorned with the crescent, and assumes the guise of the seventeen Prajapatis. She is the great one, eternally present. Her hands holding a noose and a goad are charming. She, the three-eyed one, shines like the rising sun. In the heart meditate on the goddess Mahalakshmi, comprehending all glories and possessed of all auspicious marks. Her own nature is Spirit. She is flawless. Her name is Trikuta. She has a smiling face, is beautiful, is the great Maya, and is extremely fascinating. She is adorned with great ear-rings. She rests on the threefold seat and abides in the nameless sacred abode, Sripitha. She is the great Bhairavi, the power of Spirit, the great Tripura. Meditate on Her through the great yoga of meditation. Whoso knows Her thus (fulfils his life). This is the great Upanishad.

II-1: Then, therefore, having uttered the verse, ‘Let us for all-knowing Fire the soma press’, etc., one achieves the realization of Tripura.
II-2: The seers said: Explain the form of the extensive seed-letters latent in the beginning, middle and end of the glorificatory verse, ‘Let us for all-knowing fire…’

II-3: The Lord said to them: Utter the verse, ‘Let us for all-knowing Fire the soma press’, etc. Repeat backwards the last group of the Adividya (i.e. sa ka la hrim). Lengthen the first syllable of the first group (as ka) and that of the second group (as ha). (Together we get ka ha). ‘Let us press the soma’. They say that (this verse refers to the state in which) cosmic ignorance vanishes; it is competent (to extinguish all that has been imagined as other than Brahman); it is the most excellent and blissful; it is the great glory.

II-4: The first group (called Vagbhava), the same as all prosperity, causes the sublation (of the world of objects); the second group (named after Kama) supports (the world of objects); the third (named after Sakti) brings it into being. Thus meditating on the three groups and purifying the mind, and elucidating the incantation of Tripura, one utters the mantra ‘Let us for all-knowing Fire the soma press’, etc.; then (there dawns) the wisdom called the incantation of Mahavidyeshvari.

II-5: (Relying on) the incantation of Tripureshvari, having uttered the word jatavedase [‘for all-knowing Fire’] and associating the dot denoting the divine principle of Siva with the vowels a, etc., of the Pranava, one gets the serpent-power that has become one with immortality and has assumed the triangular form (at the base of the spinal column).

II-6: Thus, of the chief principle of Adividya, the first group (beginning with ka) is Vagbhava; the second (beginning with ha) is the Kamakala. With the utterance of the syllables jata, the supreme Self is clearly expressed.

II-7: By the syllables jata, etc., the supreme (undifferentiated) Self, Siva, is denoted.

II-8: From birth onwards given to desires, one desires (Lordship). (When desires are renounced) perfection (of one’s nature results). (So the knowers of Brahman) declare.

II-9: That very thing (the perfect spirit of Siva), we declare aright as installed in the three la-s, the seed-letters of the earth. Clarifying the letters of the mantras in the light of the significance of the three la-s (which denote existence-knowledge-bliss absolute), each in the midst (of the three groups), the word gotra must be understood. The principle of Siva is said to have been installed in this gotra. Thus has it been elucidated. Then follows the Kamakala (the second group beginning with ha). The rest may be elucidated as before with reference to vamam (competent). The incantation thus explained is styled Sarvarakshakari, the All-protecting one.

II-10: Thus having clarified this incantation of Tripureshi by means of the verse jatavedase, etc., there remains but the one supreme Divinity, the Light. Or (this results from) the incantation (consisting of the three groups). Grant the boon of the Fourth (i.e. meditate on the fact that the three groups do not exist independently of Siva). Fully identify the ‘I’ - sense with the nature of the Lord. Relate each of the three groups with the incantation styled the All-protecting one. Also clarify the incantation of the Atmasana form. Repeat the verse jatavedase, etc., and (once more) recall to mind the All-protecting incantation. Assign the form of Siva and Sakti to the initial and final positions (of the All-protecting incantation). Know that the syllable sa in the verse jatavedase, etc., has Sakti as its quintessence and that the word soma represents the prowess whose quintessence is Siva. Whoso knows this becomes great.

II-11: Thus elucidate this incantation which abides in Tripura and which is set forth in the circular seat. Repeat the verse jatavedase, etc., and also the incantation of Tripureshvari which is ever ascendant and whose quintessence is Siva and Sakti, as already set forth. Jatavedas symbolizes Siva, and sa has the imperishable Sakti as its essence. Elucidate Tripura, the ever-ascendant Mahalakshmi, resting on the seat of mantras (symbolized by ha and sa), denoting the sun and the moon, pervading the three groups and subsisting in between Siva and the primeval Power. Repeat the verse jatavedase sunavama somam, etc., and call to mind the previous incantation associated with the seat of the real Self. With the words veda, etc., (in the verse), essentially the same as the sun denoted by ha, is indicated the universal Power of the Spirit (cicchakti) ever-ascendant. Put over it the dot (denoting the Siva principle). Elucidate the incantation of Tripura, garlanded, abiding in the seat of the Adept. Repeat the verse jatavedase sunavama somam, etc. Relying on the enchanting Tripura, contemplate (Her) in the syllables ka la.

Elucidate the embodied incantation of Tripura, the sovereign over all incantations. Repeat jatavedase, etc., and relying on Tripura, the Lakshmi, one consumes fire.
II-12: Elucidate the incantation of Tripura, the Mother, the sovereign threefold Light, knowing that she consumes with a mouth of fire.
II-13: Thus with the words sa mah parsad ati durgani visva, She illuminates the supreme, She who is the inner Self. Her incantation, here, having become an effect, is utilized in the act of hailing. She is deemed competent in every way.
II-14: Thus these eight incantations, the very limbs of the divine Mahamaya are elucidated.
II-15: The gods verily said to the blessed Lord: Tell us about the foremost of the wheels, which promotes all desires, is adored of all, takes all forms, faces all quarters, and is the gateway to Liberation, by adoring which the Yogins cut through (the knot of differences) into the undifferenced bliss of supreme Brahman.
II-16: To them the blessed Lord said: We shall elucidate the concept of Srichakra.
II-17: Make a triangle with three vertices. In it take as a measure a line, lengthen it, and make a triangle farther in front of it. Parallel to the base of the first triangle, but over all, make another triangle. The first triangle is the wheel, the second is the intermediary region, and the third has, marking it, the eight triangles.
II-18: Then, moving the line beyond the intermediary quarters, on the extremities of the eight spoked wheel move the line for soliciting the Sadhyas etc. Have the upper part marked with triangles. Draw four lines going up from the closed regions. In due order, with the two measuring lines, the wheel comes to be marked with ten triangles.
II-19: In the same manner, again, the wheel with ten spokes takes shape.
II-20: The wheel with fourteen spokes takes shape by joining the measuring line brought up to the parts of the ten spokes, after having joined the four vertices of the central triangles with the triangles at the extremities of the four lines.
II-21: Then take shape respectively the wheels enveloped in the eight lotuses, the sixteen lotuses, and the earth-wheel with four gates.
II-22: Thus has the wheel been elucidated by the process of construction.
II-23: I enumerate in the reverse order (the elements of) the wheel consisting of the nine selves. The first wheel enchants the three worlds; has the eight powers such as the power to assume the atomic size etc.; has the eight mothers; has the decade beginning with the All-agitating force; etc.; is manifest, is occupied by Tripura, and is characterized by the mystic mark of the All-agitating force.
II-24: The second wheel fulfils all expectations, is conjoined with the sixteen attractive powers beginning with sakama. It is well protected, occupied by the sovereign Tripura, and is characterized by the mystic mark of the All-scattering force.
II-25: The third wheel agitates all and is adorned with the eight flowers of Cupid. It is better secured, occupied by the beautiful Tripura, and characterized by the mystic mark of the All-fascinating force.
II-26: The fourth wheel grants excellence to all; has fourteen forces like the All-agitating force; is associated with a tradition; is occupied by the Dweller in the three cities, and is marked by the mystic mark of the All-subduing force.
II-27: The fifth wheel, beyond the fourth, accomplishes all ends; has the ten forces such as the power to yield all perfections; has the fullness of the Kaula; is occupied by Mahalakshmi who is Tripura, and is marked by the mystic mark of the greatly exciting force.
II-28: The sixth wheel protects all; has ten traits such as omniscience; is devoid of interspaces; is occupied by the garlanded Tripura; and has the mark of the great goad.
II-29: The seventh wheel cures all diseases; has eight forces such as the force to subdue; has its mysteries; and bears the mystic mark of the khechari.
II-30: The eighth wheel grants all perfections; is characterized by four weapons, and the mysteries, higher and lower. It is occupied by the mother, Tripura, and has the mystic mark of the seed.

II-31: The ninth master-wheel is replete with all delight and is associated with the triad such as Kameshvari. It is exceedingly mysterious, occupied by the great Tripura, the beautiful, and has the mystic mark of the triangle.
II-32: All the metres indeed have passed over as spokes into the wheel. This wheel is the Srichakra.
II-33: In its hub, in the sphere of fire, are the sun and the moon. Worship the seat of the syllable Om there. There is the Imperishable in the form of the point. Call to mind the supreme Incantation, sky-like, and immanent in it. Bring thither the great Tripura, the beautiful. Petition Her with the single verse:
Goddess ! In milk bathed, with sandal paste
Besmeared ! Goddess! With bilva leaves worshipped !
Durga ! I seek refuge in Thee.
Adore Her with the mantra of Mayalakshmi. Thus spoke the blessed Lord.
II-34: With these mantras adore the blessed Goddess. Then She becomes pleased and manifests Herself. So whoever worships with these mantras sees Brahman. He sees all things and achieves immortality – whosoever knows thus. This is the great Upanishad.

III-1: The gods said to the blessed Lord: We would fashion the mystic marks. The blessed Lord told them: Seated in the lotus posture with the region of the knees touching the earth, make the mystic marks.
III-2: He who knows the mystic mark of the triangle attracts all; he knows all; enjoys all fruits; he breaks up all and immobilizes the foe. Keeping the middle fingers over the ring fingers, he (brings together) the little fingers and the thumbs, the forefingers being left free like rods pointing downward. Thus is the first mark made (the triangle).
III-3: The same with the middle fingers joined is the second (the seed).
III-4: The third has the shape of the goad.
III-5: Rubbing the palms in the reverse order, bringing together the thumbs and the forefingers, the fourth is formed (the great goad).
III-6: The fifth (the great Deluder) is made when the thumbs are joined to the nails of the middle fingers, after rubbing with the forefinger on the little finger and the ring fingers held straight with the middle fingers.
III-7: The same shaped at the tip like a goad is the sixth (the All-subduing).
III-8: Keeping the left hand in the right resting posture, the ring fingers in the middle of the little fingers, and the middle fingers with the forefingers crossed over them, the thumbs straight, one gets the seventh, the khechari (the All-attracting).
III-9: In the all-upright, all-retracting posture, keeping each little finger in the space between its middle finger and the ring finger, and at the sides the forefingers in the shape of the goad, and the thumbs and palms in contact, the eighth is formed (the All-scattering).
III-10: The ring fingers rest on the back of the middle fingers; the thumbs holding the middle fingers on which rest the forefingers remain in the middle – thus is the ninth formed (the All-agitating).
III-11: Keeping the little fingers equally in and the thumbs, too, equally in, the mystic mark comes to have three sections. The five arrows, the mystic marks such as the five, are clear.
III-12: Krom is the seed of the goad; (ha, sa are those of Siva and Sakti; kha, of killing; prem, of enchantment); ha, sa, kha, prem, of khechari; ha (of the sun); straum (of desire); (ka) the first seed of Vagbhava is the ninth. (Ha, the first seed of Kamakuta) is the tenth. Whoso knows thus (becomes an adept in mantra).
III-13: Now, therefore, we shall expound the wheel that has become the Kamakala. Hrim, klim, aim, blum, straum – these five desires pervade the whole wheel. Wrap up the middle desire, aim, in the past (desire), straum, (i.e. aim, straum, aim). Let this group be put within blum. Bind up twice the end sought with the two medial aim-s and worship (setting them) in the birch-bark. Whoso knows this wheel knows all; he attracts all the worlds; he immobilizes everything. The wheel dyed in indigo slays foes, arrests all movements. Smearing it with lac, one controls all worlds. Uttering the formula nine lakhs of times, one attains the status of Rudra. Wrapping up (the wheel) in the inscribed diagram, one becomes victorious. Offering oblation in the fire built in a triangular fire-place, one wins over women. Doing so in a fire-place shaped like a rod or a circle one acquires unrivalled wealth. Doing so in a square fire-place one gets rain. If one offers oblations in a triangular fire-place, foes are killed, movements are immobilized Offering flowers, one becomes victorious. Offering substances having great tastes, one becomes surcharged with supreme joy. The great tastes are the six tastes.

III-14: We invoke you, Leader of hosts,
Of poets, poet, most renowned;
Doyen of kings, among Brahman-s
Lord of Brahman-s, pay heed to us.
Come with protection to our homes.

Uttering this hymn, touch the body pronouncing ga with the dot above. Bow down to Ganesha saying gam to Ganesha. Om, Bow unto the blessed Lord, with ash-smeared limbs, of formidable prowess. Kill ! Kill !! burn ! burn !! consume ! consume !! subdue ! subdue !! erase ! erase !! Breaker up of the plough ! At the foot of the trident , secure the accomplishment of the symbol. Dry up ! Dry up !! The Eastern sea ! Immobilize ! Immobilize!! You who disrupt the counsels, the machines, the strategy, the messengers, the armies of the enemy, tear up ! tear up !! cut up ! cut up !! hrim, phat, Svaha. With this worship the Lord of the field.

III-15: Oh maid of noble lineage !
We know, we contemplate a crore
Of mantras; so many Kula's force
Inspire us ever.

Thus adoring the maiden, whichever aspirant meditates, attains immortality. He attains renown and the full stretch of life. Or, knowing the Supreme Brahman, he abides. Whosoever knows thus (wins the fruit). This is the great Upanishad.

IV-1: The gods, verily, said to the blessed Lord: Lord ! The heart of the most excellent Gayatri pertaining to Tripura has been expounded to us.

IV-2: In the hymn of jatavedas
Tripura's eight (vidyas) are limned.
Thus adoring Her, from the bonds
Of life the Yogin is released.

IV-3: Now tell us about Mrityumjaya (victory over death). Hearing the words of all the gods speaking thus, the victory over Death is revealed through the hymn on Tryambaka in the Anustubh metre.

IV-4: Whence is the word Tryambaka derived ? Being master of the three cities, he is Tryambaka.

IV-5: Why say: 'Let us sacrifice' ? 'Sacrifice' means 'worship', 'extol' the real, by the two syllables mahe. By the immutable single letter kam (after Tryamba) victory over Death is expressed. So it is said: 'Let us sacrifice'.

IV-6: Now, why say 'fragrant' ? He attains renown on all sides. Hence it is said 'fragrant'.

IV-7: Why say 'increases growth' ? He creates all the worlds, saves all the worlds, pervades all the worlds. Hence He is said to increase growth.

IV-8: Why say 'like cucumber fruit … let me find freedom' ? As the cucumber is fast held by the stalk, so is (man) bound fast, and he is released from death, the bondage of transmigration; he becomes free.

IV-9: Why say 'unto immortality' ? One achieves immortality, achieves the imperishable; one becomes Rudra.

IV-10: The gods verily said to the blessed Lord: Everything has been expounded to us. Now tell us all those mantras pertaining to Siva, Vishnu, Surya, Ganesha, by lauding with which Bhagavati will reveal Herself.

IV-11: The blessed Lord said:
With ‘Tryambaka’ in sloka-metre
Worship the Conqueror of Death;
It is laid down that the single letter
Is pervaded, as shown afore.
IV-12: One who worships with the mantra of the Yajus, ‘Om, Obeisance to Siva’ attains the status of Rudra and achieves blessedness. He who knows thus (does so).
IV-13: That supreme abode of Vishnu,
Like an eye across the heavens,
The wise always behold.
IV-14: Vishnu faces all quarters. As oil surrounds and fills a ball of sesamum, He pervades (all things). His supreme abode is the high sky. The wise, namely gods like Brahma, behold it, i.e., hold it for ever in the heart. Hence, Vishnu’s own form is derived from His abiding, existing, in all beings. He is Vasudeva (the god who dwells in all).
IV-15: Om Namah consists of three syllables. Bhagavate has four syllables. Vasudevaya has five syllables. This is the twelve-syllabled mantra of Vasudeva. He (who knows this) surmounts all hardships, lives a full life, achieves mastery over beings, and enjoys possession of wealth and cattle.
IV-16: The letters a, u and meditation constituting the Pranava denote the inward bliss, the all-pervading Brahman. Putting them together, (there is formed) Om.
IV-17: Swan sailing in the pure sky,
Dweller in the atmosphere,
Sacrificer near the altar,
Guest walking into the house,
Dweller in men, in noble things,
In the right and in sky; in water born,
Born in the light, in the right, in mounts;
The Right, the great – (He is the Lord).
IV-18: All fruits he wins who repeats the previous mantra of the sun together with the Powers, namely the dawn, the dusk, the intellect, which are the true, ordered, embodied Light. By each of the other luminous words in the mantra of the Surya is it upheld. Words like, ‘in water born’, etc., denote the Powers. He dwells in the high abode, the heavens, pertaining to the sun.
IV-19: Worshipping the Lord of hosts with the mantra given previously (III-14), ‘We invoke you, Leader of hosts’, etc., in the traistubha metre, together with the monosyllable, one achieves the status of Ganesha.
IV-20: Next have been laid down the Gayatri, the Savitri, the unuttered mantra (ajapa), that of Sarasvati, the matrika (or alphabet): By It, all this has been pervaded.
IV-21: Aim, the Goddess of speech ! We know; klim, the Goddess of desire ! We meditate; sau, May the Power inspire us. Thus, in the morn, Gayatri; at midday, Savitri; and at dusk, Sarasvati. The ajapa, ‘hamsa’, the unuttered (is chanted) without break. The matrika, comprising fifty letters, from a to ksa, pervades all words, all Shastras, all Vedas. The Goddess pervades all things. Obeisance, obeisance, unto Her !
IV-22: The blessed Lord said to them: Whoso perpetually lauds the Goddess with these mantras beholds all things. He attains immortality – whoso knows this. This is the Upanishad.

V-1: The gods, verily, said to the blessed Lord: Clearly has been explained to us the section on activities and what pertains to Tripura with all related topics. Next tell us about the attributeless Supreme.
V-2: The blessed Lord spoke to them: By means of the fourth and final Maya (avidya, jnana, vijnana and samyagjnana), has the supreme Brahman been indicated, the supreme Person, the supreme Self, whose essence is consciousness. The hearer, the thinker, the seer, the teacher, the toucher, the proclaimer, the cognizer, the supreme knower, the inner person in all persons – that Self must be cognized.

V-3: In that there are neither worlds seen nor unseen; no gods or demons; beasts or non-beasts; ascetics or non-ascetics; outcastes or non-outcastes; brahmins or non-brahmins. Alone and single, the supreme Brahman, all-quiet, shines forth. Gods, seers, manes, prevail not there. The awakened knower, the all-knower is Brahman.

V-4: In this context there are the following verses:
Hence the seeker after liberation
Must from object his mind withdraw;
For, liberation is indeed
Mind's detachment from objects.
V-5: Two kinds of minds there are:
Pure and impure;
Impure the mind, desire-ridden,
The pure of desires freed.
V-6: Mind alone is cause of man's Bondage and release; bondage is
Clinging to objects; the mind
Withdrawn therefrom promotes release.
V-7: Shorn of attachment to objects,
And restricted to the heart,
Mind thus ceases to be mind –
Such is the state supreme.
V-8: Control the mind until
It quiescence reaches in the heart.
This is knowledge and meditation;
The rest is naught but words.
V-9: Brahman is not thinkable alone,
Nor unthinkable; think not;
Yet, only think; thus, surely,
Become Brahman, the same to all.
V-10: Yogin dissolves himself with self
In Being, through meditation (high);
Meditation on non-self is deemed
No meditation at all.
V-11: That Brahman has no parts
Is beyond concepts, without blemish.
Knowing 'I am That', by slow degrees
One Brahman does become.
V-12: Knowing It as beyond concepts,
Endless, without cause or parallel;
Immeasurable and beginningless,
The man of wisdom is released.
V-13: There is no restriction, no origin;
None in bondage: none who strives;
None seeks liberation; aye, none
Liberated – this is truth.

V-14: In wakeful state, in dreams, in sleep
Know that the Self is only one;
For one who passes beyond these states
Rebirth there is none.
V-15: One real Self alone exists
In diverse beings; as one,
Or many is It seen, like
Moon in water's sheen.
V-16: As when a pot is moved,
The sky, pot-bound moves not –
So is the living Self unmoved,
Like sky when only pot has moved.
V-17: When repeated in different forms,
Like pot from pot distinct,
He knows not in these divisions,
And yet at all times knows.
V-18: As long as illusions of words
Encompass one, difference lasts;
When darkness is scattered,
It is unity one sees.
V-19: The lower Brahman is the Word;
The Eternal, when that wears off,
Remains; Its knower shall, for peace of mind,
On the Eternal meditate.
V-20: Two Brahman-s are to be pondered on:
The Word and Brahman Supreme;
In the Word well versed, one attains
Brahman Supreme.
V-21: The acute mind, after study of texts,
On knowledge and wisdom intent,
Must forsake all, as one who seeks grain
Forsakes the husk perforce.
V-22: Milk has but a single colour
Though drawn from diverse cows;
As milk is knowledge known,
Its sources are like cows.
V-23: Focussing the eye of knowledge
Evoke the thought: 'I am Brahman,
The great, supreme abode without
Parts or movement, the quiescent One.'
V-24: Whoso knows thus the one supreme form of Brahman, the Fourth, abiding in all beings, dwells in the imperishable supreme abode.
V-25: I seek refuge, for the sake of life, in this fourth Power of Knowledge, the cause of the manifestation of Brahman.
V-26: In the order of Akasa, etc. Akasa is the supreme source of all these elements. All these beings, verily, are born of Akasa, and they merge in Akasa. Because of it they live, once they are born. So, know Akasa to be the seed.
V-27: That very thing, know as the seat of Akasa, of air, of fire, of water, of precious stones. Whoso knows this attains immortality.

V-28: Therefore, whoever knows this fourth (Wisdom or vidya) pertaining to the glory of Kamaraja (the Self in liberation) with its elevenfold form as the imperishable Brahman attains the fourth state – whoever knows this. This is the great Upanishad.

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

Here ends the Tripura-Tapini Upanishad, included in the Atharva-Veda.

Devi Upanishad

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

1. All the gods waited upon the Goddess (and asked): 'Great Goddess, who art Thou ?'
2. She replied: I am essentially Brahman. From Me (has proceeded) the world comprising Prakriti and Purusha, the void and the Plenum. I am (all forms of) bliss and non-bliss. Knowledge and ignorance are Myself. Brahman and non-Brahman are to be known – says the scripture of the Atharvans.
3. I am the five elements as also what is different from them. I am the entire world. I am the Veda as well as what is different from it. I am the unborn; I am the born. Below and above and around am I.
4. I move with Rudras and Vasus, with Adityas and Visvedevas.
Mitra and Varuna, Indra and Agni, I support, and the two Asvins.
5. I uphold Soma, Tvastir, Pusan and Bhaga,
The wide-stepping Vishnu, Brahma, Prajapati.
6. To the zealous sacrificer offering oblation
And pressing the Soma-juice do I grant wealth;
I am the state, the Bringer of Wealth;
Above it all, place I its protector.
7. Whoso knows my essence in the water of the inner sea,
Attains he the Goddess's abode.
8. Those gods said:

Salutation to the Goddess, the great Goddess !
To Siva, the auspicious, salutation, for ever more.
To blessed Prakriti, salutation !
Ever to Her we bow.
9. Refuge I seek in Her who is the colour of fire,
Burning with ascetic ardour, Goddess resplendent,
Delighting in actions' fruits; O Thou, hard to reach,
Dispel Thy gloom.
10. The gods engendered divine Speech;
Her, beasts of all forms speak;
The cow that yields sweet fruits and vigour –
To us may lauded Speech appear.
11. To holy Siva, to Daksha's daughter,
To Aditi and Sarasvati,
To Skanda's Mother, Vishnu's Power,
To Night of death by Brahma lauded,
We render obeisance.
12. Know we Great Lakshmi,
Goddess of good Fortune;
On all fulfilment do we meditate.
May the Goddess inspire us !
13. Through You, Dakshayani, was Aditi born;
She is your daughter; after her were born
The gods auspicious,
Friends of deathlessness.
14. Love, womb, love's part, the bearer of the thunderbolt
The cave, ha-sa, the wind, the cloud, Indra;
Again the cave, sa-ka-la with Maya –
So runs the full primeval science begetting all.
15. This is the power of Self, enchanting all, armed with the noose, the hook, the bow and the arrow.
This is the great and holy Science.
16. Who knows thus tides over grief.
17. Divine Mother ! Salutation to you; protect us in all possible ways.
18. She, here, is the eight Vasus, the eleven Rudras, the twelve Adityas, She is the all-gods, (those) who drink Soma and (those) who do not; she is the goblins, the demons, the evil beings, the ghosts; she also, beings super-human, the semi-divine. She is Sattva, Rajas and Tamas. She is Prajapati, Indra and Manu. She is the planets, stars and luminous spheres. She is the divisions of time, and the form of primeval Time. I salute Her ever:
19. Goddess who banishes distress
Grants pleasure and deliverance alike,
Infinite, victorious, pure,
Siva, Refuge, the Giver of good.
20. Seed all-powerful of the Goddess' mantra,
Is sky, conjoined with 'i' and fire,
With crescent moon adorned.
21. On the single-syllabled mantra
Meditate the pure-hearted sages,
Supremely blissful;
Of wisdom the veriest oceans.

22. Fashioned by speech; born of Brahman; the sixth
With face equipped; the sun; the left ear where
The point is; the eighth and the third conjoint.
23. The air, with Narayana united,
And with the lip; vicce, the nine-lettered;
The letter, shall delight the lofty ones.
24. Seated in the lotus-heart,
Resplendent as the morning sun,
Goddess, bearing noose and hook,
With gesture granting boons, dissolving fears;
Tender, three-eyed, red-robed, granting devotees
Their hearts' desires,
Thee I adore.
25. I bow to Thee, Goddess,
Thou dispeller of gravest fears,
Vanquisher of obstacles;
Thou wearer of great Mercy's form.
26. Brahma and others know not Her essence; so is she called the Unknowable. She has no end; so is she called the Endless. She is not grasped and so is she called the Incomprehensible. Her birth is not known and so is she called the Unborn. She alone is present everywhere, and so is she called the One. She alone wears all forms, and so is she called the Many. For these reasons is she called the Unknowable, the Endless, the Incomprehensible, the Unknown, the One and the Many.
27. The Goddess is the source of all mantras:
Of all the words the knowledge is Her form.
Her conscious Form transcends all cognitions;
She is the witness of all emptiness.
28. Beyond Her is nothing; renowned is She
As unapproachable; afeared of life,
I bow to the inaccessible One,
Bulwark against all sins; the Pilot who
Steers me across the sea of worldly life.
29. He who studies this Atharva Upanishad gains the fruit of repeating five (other) Atharva Upanishads; he who, having mastered this Atharva Upanishad, persists in worship.
30. Of this vidya ten million chants
Are less than the worship's fruit.
Eight and hundred recitations thereof
Make but this rite's inauguration.
31. Who reads it but ten times,
Is released at once from sins;
Through the grace of the Goddess great,
Tides he over obstacles great.
32. Reading it in the morning one destroys the sins of the night; reading it in the evening one destroys the sins committed by day. Thus, reading both in the evening and morning, the sinner becomes sinless. Reading it midnight, too, the fourth 'junction', there results perfection of speech. Its recitation before a new image brings to it the presence of the deity. Its recitation at the time of consecration (of an image) makes it a centre of energy. Reciting it on Tuesday under the asterism Ashvini, in the presence of the great Goddess, one overcomes fell death – one who knows thus. This is the secret.

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;

Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

Tripura Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier

Om ! Speech is rooted in my thought (mind) and my thought is rooted in my speech.
Be manifest, patent, to me; be ye two, for me, the lynch-pins of the Veda.
Let not Vedic lore desert me.
With this mastered lore, I join day with night.
I shall speak what is right; I shall speak what is true.
Let that protect me; let that protect the speaker.
Let that protect me.
Let that protect the speaker, protect the speaker !
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

1. Three cities are there, and pathways three for all.
(On the dais of Fortune) are letters a, ka, tha and others.
In them there dwells, never-ageing, ancient,
The exceeding grandeur of the gods.
2. Subject to Her whose sources are nine
Shine forth the centres nine and Yogas nine,
Nine deities and regents of the planets nine,
Gentle healing deities nine and gestures nine.
3. The One she was, the Foremost;
She was the nine, the nineteen and the twenty-nine;
The forty, she; may the radiant energies three,
As fond mother’s love, encircle me.
4. In the beginning was upblazing Light;
Gloom and Motion stretched athwart the Ageless;
The Moonlight gladness and delights; these spheres
Adorn indeed (the knowers of Brahman).
5. Of the three lines, abodes, three worlds and three spheres

With triple constituents (She is the prop).
This group of three among the sheaths is prime.
In diagram drawn with mystic words
The God of Love with Fortune's Goddess dwells.
6. The Exhilarating and the Proud,
The Auspicious, the Lucky and the Lovely,
The Perfected, the shy, the Witty One,
The Gratified, the chosen and the Full,
The Wealthy, the Forbidden, the Graceful,
The Eloquent – (These on Consciousness do wait).
7. Attended thus the Power of Consciousness
Is drunk with the draught of Immortality;
Knowing Her and worshipping Her throne
(Her devotees) on heaven's great vault do dwell
And enter the supreme Triple City.
8. Desire, the womb, the Digit of Desire,
The Wielder of the Thunderbolt, the Cave,
Ha sa, the Wind, the Cloud, the King of Heaven,
Yet again the Cave, sa ka la and maya –
Such is the primeval Wisdom, embracing all,
Mother of the vast universe.
9. Uttering in secret Her three basic letters –
The sixth, the seventh and the eighth –
Lauding the Lord, the theme of the Upanishads,
The Seer, the Fashioner, the Free to Will,
(Seekers) achieve the state of Immortality.
10. The Mother of the Universe sustains
Her abode – the Destroyer's Face, the Circle of the Sun,
The core of sounds, the span of time,
The Eternal, half the lunar month;
With sixteen (She sustains the core of their abode).
11. Or, worshipping the digit of desire in its manifold forms,
Enthroned in the three cavernous homes and in symbols
Of the rounded breasts and face set in the spheres,
The man of desires gains that which he wants.
12. Dressed fish, goat's flesh,
Cooked rice, pleasure of sex,
Who offers to the Goddess great,
Merit and success for himself achieves.
13. With (Sarasvati) fair and (Lakshmi), World's Mother,
(Gauri), roseate, primeval Power, withdrawer of the world,
Binds with noose creatures who grasp, and tread
Attachment's path; and swiftly smites with bow and arrows five.
14-15. The Power of Consciousness and desire's Lord,
Lord of auspicious powers, coequals both,
Of equal prowess, in energy equal,
Grant gifts to the fortunate here.
Of the two, the un-ageing Power, the world's womb,
With offering of knowledge pleased,

Removes the aspirant's twofold sheath.
With mind averted from illusion's sphere
He becomes Creator, Protector,
Withdrawer of the world;
Nay, one with Cosmic Being.
16. This is Tripura's great Upanishad,
Imperishable, which, in glorious words
The Rig, Yajus, Saman and Atharvan
And other forms of knowledge laud.

Om, Hrim, Om, Hrim – thus ends the secret doctrine.

Om ! Speech is rooted in my thought (mind) and my thought is rooted in my speech.
Be manifest, patent, to me; be ye two, for me, the lynch-pins of the Veda.
Let not Vedic lore desert me.
With this mastered lore, I join day with night.
I shall speak what is right; I shall speak what is true.
Let that protect me; let that protect the speaker.
Let that protect me.
Let that protect the speaker, protect the speaker !
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

Here ends the Tripura Upanishad, included in the Rig-Veda.

Katharudra Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. The Gods, it is said, requested of the venerable (Brahma): Venerable Sir, impart to us the spiritual knowledge. He, the creator (Prajapati), replied:
2. After removing the hair including the tuft and discarding it, and after removing the sacred thread, looking at one's son (the following shall be uttered): 'Thou art the scripture , thou the sacrifice, thou the Vasatkara, thou the syllable Om, thou art Svaha, thou Svadha, thou the doer and thou the creator'. Then the son shall say: 'I am the scripture , I am the sacrifice, I am the Vasatkara, I am the syllable Om, I am Svaha, I am Svadha, I am the doer and I am the creator, I am the divine architect (Tvastir), I am the base'. These are the words (to be uttered). While parting (from the son) he shall not shed tears. Should he shed tears, the line of progeny will be broken. Circumambulating clockwise (his village) and not looking at anything he shall depart. Such a one is fit for the world of Brahman.
3. After studying the Vedas as a celibate student and performing the duties prescribed in the scriptures, after marrying and begetting sons and providing them with suitable means, having performed sacrifices according to ability, he who has been permitted by elders and relatives shall take to renunciation. Reaching the forest he shall perform the Agnihotra sacrifice for twelve nights by pouring oblations of milk into the fire; for twelve nights he shall subsist on milk. At the end of twelve nights, the wooden vessels, being no more of use, shall be offered to the fire (with the mantra): 'This is the oblation of cooked rice to the Vaishvanara fire, to Prajapati, (this is) the oblation appointed in three potsherds to Vishnu and Agni'. The clay pots shall be consigned to the waters; the metal ones shall be given to the teacher, with the mantra: 'May you not desert me while parting from me, may I not desert you while I part from you'. He shall prostrate before the three fires – the household-fire, the southern-fire and the fire in which the oblations are offered. Some say that he shall consume a handful of ashes from the place where the fire-kindling sticks stand. After removing the hair including the tuft and discarding it, he shall abandon the sacred thread in the waters with the mantra, 'Bhuh Svaha'. Therefore, he shall resort to starvation or drowning in water or entering fire, or betake himself to the battle field; or he shall journey forward until he falls and dies or he shall enter a hermitage of elderly ascetics. He shall consume milk as the repast (of the evening). That shall be his offering for the evening. That (milk which he takes) in the morning is his morning (offering); that of the new-moon-day, the new-moon-day sacrifice; that of the full-moon-day, the full-moon-day sacrifice. The shaving of the hair, beard, etc., and cutting of nails in the spring comprise his Agnishtoma sacrifice.

4. After renunciation he shall not resume the fire-rituals. He shall recite the spiritual mantra: 'For I have become Death and would enter that which is coming into being (i.e. Brahman-knowledge)', etc. Saying 'Welfare to all beings', and contemplating the Self and naught else, lifting up the arms, he shall be one who has abandoned the (usual) path; he shall move about without any (fixed) abode. He shall subsist on alms, and shall not give any (gift). He shall not wear even scant (apparel) save during the rainy season for the protection of the animal body. Here are the verses (to support this):
5-6. The water-pot, the ladle, the sling (to carry his effects), the staff, foot-wear, covering to protect from the cold, the loin-cloth, the garment (to cover the body), the ring of Kusa grass, the bath towel, as well as the upper cloth, the sacred thread and the scriptures – all these an ascetic shall renounce.
7. With purified water he shall bathe and wash and also drink of the same. He shall sleep on the sands of a river (bank) or in temples.
8. He shall not make the body endure the extremes of comfort or hardship. He shall not exult when praised, nor curse others when blamed.
9-11. The one who bears a staff (ascetic) shall be unfalteringly firm in celibacy. Looking at, touching, sporting, talking about, entering into secret dialogue, imagining, thinking about, or physical enjoyment (with women) – this is what the learned call the eightfold cohabitation. Brahmacharya [celibacy] is the contrary. It should be observed by those who seek Liberation.
11-12. The self-effulgent light which illumines the world ever shines. It is indeed the witness of the world, the Self of all, pure in form, the basis of all beings, whose nature is pure consciousness.
13. Not by action, not by (begetting) children, not by anything else, only by knowing Brahman, man attains Brahman.
14-15. That Brahman, which is without a second, and which is Truth, Knowledge and Happiness, is the object of (real) knowing. The best of the twice-born, who know Brahman residing in the cave which is called the highest heaven, during his transmigratory existence known as 'illusion', 'ignorance', etc., attain all desired things instantaneously.
16. He who realizes his own Self, which is the witness of the power called ignorance and illusion, knowing 'I am Brahman alone' becomes Brahman Itself.
17. From this Self which is one with Brahman and which is possessed of power (i.e. maya) arose the unmanifest ether (Akasa) like a rope-serpent.
18. Then from the ether emerged the unmanifest touch which is named 'air' (Vayu). Then from air emerged fire; from fire, water; and from water, the earth.
19. Then after dividing and compounding all those subtle (elements) into five, from them alone the auspicious Lord created the cosmic egg.
20. Enfolded in the cosmic egg are gods, anti-gods, Yakshas, Kinnaras, human beings, animals, birds, etc., in accordance with (the result of) their own actions.
21. The bodies of beings which appear in the form of (a framework of) bones, sinews, etc., is the self of the nature of food for the all-pervading Self.
22. Then, further within, is the self of Prana [vital energy] split (into five). Still further within is the self of the nature of mind which is different (from the others).

23. Next, even further within and different is the self of the nature of knowledge. Then, in the interior, distinct, is the self of the nature of bliss.
24. That (self) of the nature of food is pervaded by (the self) of the nature of vital energy; similarly (the self of) vital energy is by the nature (pervaded) by (the self) of the nature of mind.
25. The mind-self is pervaded by the self of knowledge. The ever-happy self of the nature of knowledge is always pervaded by bliss.
26. In the same way, the self of bliss is pervaded by Brahman, the witness, the innermost of all. Brahman is not (pervaded) by anything else.
27-28. By realizing directly this Brahman, which is named the Support (the Tail puccha), which is of the nature of truth, knowledge and non-duality, the essence, the joy, the eternal, the dweller in the body becomes happy everywhere. Wherefrom otherwise can there be happiness ?
28-29. If this supreme bliss which is the very Self of all beings were not existent, which human being can be alive ? Who can ever be active ?
29-30. Therefore it is this Being, shining fully in the consciousness, that ever makes happy the individual self, which is otherwise full of sorrow.
30-32. Only when the great ascetic realizes his complete unity without any difference from this, which is described as unseen, etc., he attains total fearlessness. This is the ultimate Good, supreme Immortality, absolute Existence, transcendent Brahman, beyond the three divisions (of time).
32-33. When an individual experiences even a slight difference in this (identity) he will have fear; there is no doubt.
33-34. Because of this sheath of bliss, from (God) Vishnu to a pillar – all always realize happiness though in different degrees.
34-35. For him who is versed in the scriptures, disinterested in attaining any position, and happy, the bliss which is his very nature shines forth by itself.
35-36. It is well known that word functions dependent upon a base (like jati, dravya, kriya, guna). Because of the absence of any (such) base, words recoil (from Brahman). For how can the word function in respect of the absolute bliss devoid of any base ?
37-38. This subtle mind which makes all things its object turns back from That, from which retreat also (the senses), hearing, touch, sight, etc., as well as the organs of actions; they are not capable of reaching the Supreme.
38-39. Realizing that Brahman which is Bliss, without a second, devoid of attributes, the solidarity of truth and consciousness, as one’s own Self, one fears nought.
39-40. He who knows thus from the teaching of his Guru, who becomes master of himself, never suffers from the impact of good or bad actions.
40-41. The whole world which appeared formerly as the inflictor and the inflicted now shines as one’s own Self, owing to the knowledge arising from the Vedantic teaching.
41-42. The pure (Brahman), God, the individual self, the knower, the means of knowledge, the object of knowledge and the result – thus, for empirical purposes, is the sevenfold distinction made.
43-44. (The Consciousness) devoid of the condition of Maya [cosmic nescience] is termed ‘pure’ (Brahman). When related to the cosmic nescience, it is God. Under the influence of the individual nescience (Avidya) it is the individual self. When related to the internal organ it is called the knower. In relationship with the modifications of the internal organ, it is called the means of knowledge.
45-46. The Consciousness which is not known is termed ‘object’; and the consciousness which is known is called ‘result’. The intelligent man should meditate upon his own Self as devoid of all conditioning.
46. He who knows this in reality becomes Brahman itself.
47. Now I speak of the true essence of the teaching of all Vedanta: dying oneself, becoming oneself, one yet remains oneself. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Katharudropanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Bhavana Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.
May Indra, of wide renown, grant us well-being;
May Pusan, and all-gods, grant us well-being.
May Tarksya, of unhampered movement, grant us well-being.
May Brihaspati grant us well-being.
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

1. The holy Teacher is the Power (Para-Sakti) that is the cause of all.
2. Of that Power the body with its nine orifices is the form.
3. It is the holy Wheel in the guise of the nine wheels.
4. The Power of the Boar is paternal: Kurukulla, the deity of sacrifice, is maternal.
5. The (four) human Ends are the oceans (purusharthas - dharma, artha, kama and moksha).
6- 7. The body with the seven constituents (Chile, blood, flesh, fat, bone, marrow and semen) like the skin and the hair is the island of the nine gems.
8. Resolutions are the wish-granting trees; energy (of the mind) is the garden of the trees of plenty.
9. The six seasons are the tastes, namely sweet, sour, bitter, pungent, astringent and saltish, which are apprehended by the tongue.
10. Knowledge is the material for worship; the object of knowledge is the oblation; the knower is the sacrificer. The meditation on the identity of the three, knowledge, its object, and the knower, is the worship rendered to the holy Wheel.
11. Destiny and sentiments like love are (the miraculous attainments like) atomicity, etc. Lust, anger, greed, delusion, elation, envy, merit, demerit – these constitute the eight powers of Brahma, etc. (Brahma, Maheshvari, Kaumari, Vaishnavi, Varahi, Raudri, Charmamunda and Kalasamkarsini).
12. The nine abodes (muladhara etc.,) are the powers of the mystic gestures.
13. The earth, water, fire, air, ether, ear, skin, eye, tongue, nose, speech, feet, hands, the organs of evacuation and generation and the modification of mind are the sixteen powers such as the pull of lust, etc.

14. Speech, grasp, motion, evacuation, generation, and the attitudes of rejection, acceptance and apathy are the eight (entities) such as the flower of love, etc.
15. Alambusa, kuhu, visvodara, varana, hastijihva, yasovati, payasvini, gandhari, pusa, sankhini, sarasvati, ida, pingala and susumna – these fourteen arteries are the fourteen powers such as the all-exciting, etc.
16. The five vital breaths and the five minor breaths are the ten divinities of the outer spokes, (styled) Sarvasiddhiprada, etc.
17. The digestive fire becomes fivefold through distinctions based on its association with this pre-eminent breath. (They are) what ejects, what cooks, what dries, what burns and what inundates.
18. Owing to the prominence of the minor breath, these (fires) in the human body come to be styled as the corroder, the ejector, the agitator, the yawner and the deluder. They promote the digestion of the fivefold food: eaten, chewed, sucked, licked and imbibed.
19. The ten aspects of Fire are the ten divinities of the inner spokes, Sarvajna, etc.
20. The qualities of cold, heat, pleasure, pain, desire, sattva, rajas and tamas are the eight powers, vasini, etc.
21. The five, rudimentary sound, etc., are the flowery shafts.
22. Mind is the bow made of sugarcane.
23. Attachment is the cord (that binds).
24. Aversion is the hook.
25. The unmanifest, the Great, and the principle of Egoism are the divinities of the inner triangle: Kameshvari, Vajreshvari and Bhagamalini.
26. Absolute awareness, verily, is Kameshvara.
27. The supreme divinity, Lalita, is one’s own blissful Self.
28. Of all this the distinctive apprehension is the red glow.
29. Perfection (ensues from) exclusive concentration of the mind.
30. In the performance of meditation consist (various acts of) respectful service.
31. The act of oblation is the merger in the Self of distinctions like I, Thou, Existence, non-Existence, the sense of duty and its negation, and the obligation worship.
32. Assuagement is the thought of identity of (all) objects of imagination.
33. The view of time’s transformation into the fifteen days (of the half lunar month) points to the fifteen eternal (divinities).
34. Thus meditating for three instants, or two, or even for a single instant, one becomes liberated while living; one is styled the Siva-Yogin.
35. Meditations on the inner wheel have been discussed (here) following the tenets of Saktaism.
36. Whoso knows thus is a student of the Atharvasiras.

Om ! Gods ! With ears let us hear what is good;
Adorable ones ! With eyes let us see what is good.
With steady limbs, with bodies, praising,
Let us enjoy the life allotted by the gods.

Rudra Hridaya Upanishad

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Now, at this moment, I take refuge in that Pure State of the Supreme Absolute which can be known by the Vidya, called the Rudra Hridaya Upanishad.
After prostrating before the celebrated form of Sri Mahadeva-Rudra in his heart, adoring the sacred Bhasma and Rudraksha and mentally reciting the great Mahavakya-Mantra, Tarasara, Sri Suka asked his father Sri Vyasa Maharshi, thus:
Who is the real God of gods? In whom are all these existences established? By worshipping whom, can I please the Devas in whole?
Hearing these words, Sri Veda Vyasa replied thus:
Rudra is the embodiment of all Devas. All devas are merely different manifestations of Sri Rudra Himself. On the right side of Rudra, there is the sun, then the four-headed Brahma, and then three Agnis (fires). On the left side, there exist Sri Umadevi, and also Vishnu and Soma (moon).
Uma Herself is the form of Vishnu. Vishnu Himself is the form of the moon. Therefore, those who worship Lord Vishnu, worship Siva Himself. And those who worship Siva, worship Lord Vishnu in reality. Those who envy and hate Sri Rudra, are actually hating Sri Vishnu. Those who decry Lord Siva, decry Vishnu Himself.
Rudra is the generator of the seed. Vishnu is the embryo of the seed. Siva Himself is Brahma and Brahma Himself is Agni. Rudra is full of Brahma and Vishnu. The whole world is full of Agni and Soma. The masculine gender is Lord Siva. The feminine gender is Sri Bhavani Devi. All the mobile and immobile creation of this universe, is filled up with Uma and Rudra. The Vyakta is Sri Uma, and the Avyakta is Lord Siva. The combination of Uma and Sankara is Vishnu.
Hence everybody should prostrate to Sri Maha Vishnu with great devotion. He is the Atman. He is the Paramatman. He is the Antaratman. Brahma is the Antaratman. Siva is the Paramatman. Vishnu is the Eternal Atman of all this universe. This whole creation of Svarga, Martya and Patala Lokas is a big tree. Vishnu is the top portion (branches) of this tree. Brahma is the stem. The root is Lord Siva.

The effect is Vishnu. The action is Brahma. The cause is Siva. For the benefit of the worlds. Rudra has taken these three forms.

Rudra is Dharma. Vishnu is the world. Brahma is Knowledge. Therefore, do Kirtan of His name, 'Rudra', 'Rudra'. By singing like this, the hallowed name of this great Lord, all your sins will be destroyed.

Rudra is man. Uma is woman. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Brahma. Uma is Sarasvati. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Vishnu. Uma is Lakshmi. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Sun. Uma is shadow. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is moon. Uma is star. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is day. Uma is night. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Yajna. Uma is Vedi. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Agni, Uma is Svaha. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Veda. Uma is Sastra. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is tree. Uma is creeper. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is scent. Uma is flower. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is meaning. Uma is word. Prostrations to Him and Her. Rudra is Linga. Uma is Pitha. Prostrations to Him and Her.

The devotee should worship Sri Rudra and Uma with these Mantras referred to above. O my son, Suka! With these hymns, you should meditate on the Eternal Para-Brahman, which is beyond the reach of the senses, which is pure Existence, knowledge and Bliss and which cannot be understood either by the speech or by the mind. After knowing this, there is nothing more to be known, because everything is the form of That, and there is nothing separate from That.

There are two Vidyas to be known. They are Para and Apara. Apara Vidya is the embodiment of the four Vedas and their six Angas. They do not deal with the Nature of the Atman. But the Para Vidya is called the Moksha-Sastra. It deals with that supreme philosophy of the Absolute Truth, ununderstandable, impersonal, Nirguna, Nirakara, without ears, without eyes, without hands, without feet, eternal, omnipresent, imperishable, and knowable by the intelligent daring sages.

From that Lord Siva who performs a terrible penance in the form of Supreme Jnana-Marga, this whole world is created which is the food of the mortals. This world is Maya. It seems to appear just like a dream. It is superimposed on the Lord just like a rope on a serpent. This is the eternal Truth. There is no creation in reality. All is absolute. All is Truth. Knowing this, one is liberated at once.

Only through Jnana, you can get rid of this Samsara. Only through Jnana, you can understand this existence and never through Karma. Understand this through the guidance of a Brahmanishtha-Srotriya Guru. The Guru will give the disciple all the necessary knowledge of Brahman, the Absolute. By cutting off the bondage of Ajnana or Avidya, one should take refuge in Lord Sadasiva. This is the real wisdom to be understood by an aspirant seeking after Truth.

The Pranava is the bow. The Atman is the arrow. The Para-Brahman is the target. Just like the arrow, the Atman will become one with Brahman.

But all these three, the bow, the arrow and the target are not different from that Sadasiva. There do not shine the bodies of the sun, moon or the stars. There does not blow the wind, there do not exist many Devatas. He, the One Lord only exists. He only, the Purity of purities, shines for ever and ever.

There are two birds in this body, the Jiva and the Paramatman. The Jiva eats the fruit of his Karmas, but the Paramatman is untouched by anything. The Paramatman is only the Sakshi. He does not do anything. He only assumes the form of the Jiva through His Maya, just as the Akasa inside a pot seems to be different from the Akasa outside and assumes the form of the pot. In reality all is Siva, Advaita, the One Absolute. There is no difference of whatever kind.

When all is understood to be One, Omkara, the Absolute, there is no sorrow, there is no Maya. Then the attainment of the Advaita-Paramananda is very easy. Think that you are the basis of all this universe, you are the One, Kevala, Sat-Chit-Ghana. All people cannot understand this Truth. Those devoid of Maya can know this secret. After knowing this, the Atman does not move towards any place at any time. It becomes one with the Absolute, just like Ghatakasa with Paramakasa. Just as Akasa does not move anywhere, similarly this Atman does not have any movement. It becomes one with OM.

One who knows this great secret Truth is the real Muni. He becomes the Para-Brahman Itself. He becomes Satchidananda. He attains permanent peace.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Rudra-Hridayopanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Yoga-Kundalini Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

CHAPTER - I

1. Chitta has two causes, Vasanas and (Prana) Vayu. If one of them is controlled, then both are controlled.
2. Of these two, a person should control (Prana) Vayu always through moderate food, postures and thirdly Sakti-Chala.
3-4. I shall explain the nature of these. Listen to it, O Gautama. One should take a sweet and nutritious food, leaving a fourth (of his stomach) unfilled, in order to please Shiva (the patron of Yogins). This is called moderate food. Posture herein required is of two kinds, Padma and Vajra.
5. Placing the two heels over the two opposite thighs (respectively) is the Padma (posture) which is the destroyer of all sins.
6. Placing one heel below the Mulakanda and the other over it and sitting with the neck, body and head erect is the Vajra posture.
7. The Sakti (mentioned above) is only Kundalini. A wise man should take it up from its place (Viz., the navel, upwards) to the middle of the eyebrows. This is called Sakti-Chala.
8. In practising it, two things are necessary, Sarasvati-Chalana and the restraint of Prana (breath). Then through practice, Kundalini (which is spiral) becomes straightened.
9-10(a). Of these two, I shall explain to you first Sarasvati-Chalana. It is said by the wise of old that Sarasvati is no other than Arundhati. It is only by rousing her up that Kundalini is roused.
10(b)-11(a). When Prana breath is passing through (one’s) Ida (left nostril), he should assume firmly Padma-posture and should lengthen (inwards) 4 digits the Akasa of 12 digits.

11(b)-13(a). Then the wise man should bind the (Sarasvati) Nadi by means of this lengthened (breath) and holding firmly together (both his ribs near the navel) by means of the forefingers and thumbs of both hands, (one hand on each side) should stir up Kundalini with all his might from right to left often and often; for a period of two Muhurtas (48 minutes), he should be stirring it up fearlessly.
13(b)-14. Then he should draw up a little when Kundalini enters Susumna. By this means, Kundalini enters the mouth of Susumna. Prana (also) having left (that place) enters of itself the Susumna (along with Kundalini).
15. By compressing the neck, one should also expand the navel. Then by shaking Sarasvati, Prana goes above (to) the chest.
16-17. Through the contraction of the neck, Prana goes above from the chest. Sarasvati who has sound in her womb should be shaken (or thrown into vibration) each day. Therefore by merely shaking it, one is cured of diseases.
18. Gulma (a splenetic disease), Jalodara (dropsy), Pliha (a splenetic disease) and all other diseases arising within the belly, are undoubtedly destroyed by shaking this Sakti.
19. I shall now briefly describe to you Pranayama. Prana is the Vayu that moves in the body and its restraint within is known as Kumbhaka.
20. It is of two kinds, Sahita and Kevala. One should practise Sahita till he gets Kevala.
21. There are four Bhedas (lit., piercings or divisions) viz., Surya, Ujjayi, Sitali and Bhastri. The Kumbhaka associated with these four is called Sahita Kumbhaka.
22-23. Being seated in the Padma posture upon a pure and pleasant seat which gives ease and is neither too high nor too low, and in a place which is pure, lovely and free from pebbles, etc., and which for the length of a bow is free from cold, fire and water, one should shake (or throw into vibration) Sarasvati;
24. Slowly inhaling the breath from outside, as long as he desires, through the right nostril, he should exhale it through the left nostril.
25. He should exhale it after purifying his skull (by forcing the breath up). This destroys the four kinds of evils caused by Vayu as also by intestinal worms.
26(a). This should be done often and it is this which is spoken of as Surya-Bheda.
26(b)-27. Closing the mouth and drawing up slowly the breath as before with the nose through both the Nadis (or nostrils) and retaining it in the space between the heart and the neck, one should exhale it through the left nostril.
28. This destroys the heat caused in the head as well as the phlegm in the throat. It removes all diseases, purifies his body and increases the (gastric) fire within.
29. It removes also the evils arising in the Nadis, Jalodara (waterbelly or dropsy) and Dhatus. This Kumbhaka is called Ujjayi and may be practised (even) when walking or standing.
30. Drawing up the breath as before through the tongue with (the hissing sound of) 'Sa' and retaining it as before, the wise man should slowly exhale it through (both) the nostrils.
31. This is called Sitali Kumbhaka and destroys diseases, such as Gulma, Pitha, consumption, bile, fever, thirst and poison.
32. Seated in the Padma posture with belly and neck erect, the wise man should close the mouth and exhale with care through the nostrils.
33. Then he should inhale a little with speed up to the heart, so that the breath may fill the space with noise between the neck and skull.
34-35. Then he should exhale in the same way and inhale often and often. Just as the bellows of a smith are moved (viz., stuffed with air within and then the air is let out), so he should move the air within his body. If the body gets tired, then he should inhale through the right nostril.
36-37(a). If his belly is full of Vayu, then he should press well his nostrils with all his fingers except his forefinger and performing Kumbhaka as before, should exhale through the left nostril.
37(b)-38. This frees one from diseases of fire in (or inflammation of) the throat, increases the gastric fire within, enables one to know the Kundalini, produces purity removing sins, gives happiness and pleasure and destroys phlegm which is the bolt (or obstacle) to the door at the mouth of Brahma-Nadi (viz., Susumna).

39. It pierces also the three Granthis (or knots) differentiated through the three Gunas. This Kumbhaka is known as Bhastri and should especially be performed.
40. Through these four ways when Kumbhaka is near (or is about to be performed), the sinless Yogin should practise the three Bandhas.
41. The first is called Mulabandha. The second is called Uddiyana and the third is Jalandhara. Their nature will be thus described.
42. Apana (breath) which has a downward tendency is forced up by one bending down. This process is called Mulabandha.
43. When Apana is raised up and reaches the sphere of Agni (fire), then the flame of Agni grows long, being blown about by Vayu.
44-45(a). Then Agni and Apana come to (or commingle with) Prana in a heated state. Through this Agni which is very fiery, there arises in the body the flaming (or the fire) which rouses the sleeping Kundalini through its heat.
45(b)-46. Then this Kundalini makes a hissing noise, becomes erect like a serpent beaten with stick and enters the hole of Brahmanadi (Susumna). Therefore Yogins should daily practise Mulabandha often.
47-48(a). Uddiyana should be performed at the end of Kumbhaka and at the beginning of expiration. Because Prana Uddiyate (viz., goes up) the Susumna in this Bandha, therefore is called Uddiyana by the Yogins.
48(b)-49(a). Being seated in the Vajra posture and holding firmly the two toes by the two hands, he should press at the Kanda and at the place near the two ankles.
49(b)-50. Then he should gradually upbear the Tana (thread or Nadi) which is on the western side first to Udara (the upper part of the abdomen above the navel), then to the heart and then to the neck. When Prana reaches the Sandhi (junction) of navel, slowly it removes the impurities (or diseases) in the navel. Therefore this should be frequently practised.
51. The Bandha called Jalandhara should be practised at the end of Kumbhaka. This Jalandhara is of the form of the contraction of the neck and is an impediment to the passage of Vayu (upwards).
52. When the neck is contracted at once by bending downwards (so that the chin may touch the breast), Prana goes through Brahmanadi on the western Tana in the middle.
53. Assuming the seat as mentioned before, one should stir up Sarasvati and control Prana.
54. On the first day Kumbhaka should be done four times; on the second day it should be done ten times and then five times separately;
55. On the third day, twenty times will do and afterwards Kumbhaka should be performed with the three Bandhas and with an increase of five times each day.
56-57. Diseases are generated in one’s body through the following causes, viz., sleeping in daytime, late vigils over night, excess of sexual intercourse, moving in crowd, the checking of the discharge of urine and faeces, the evil of unwholesome food and laborious mental operation with Prana.
58. If a Yogin is afraid of such diseases (when attacked by them), he says, “my diseases have arisen from my practice of Yoga”. Then he will discontinue this practice. This is said to be the first obstacle to Yoga.
59. The second (obstacle) is doubt; the third is carelessness; the fourth, laziness; the fifth, sleep;
60. The sixth, the not leaving of objects (of sense); the seventh, erroneous perception; the eighth, sensual objects; the ninth, want of faith;
61. And the tenth, the failure to attain the truth of Yoga. A wise man should abandon these ten obstacles after great deliberation.
62. The practice of Pranayama should be performed daily with the mind firmly fixed on Truth. Then Chitta is absorbed in Susumna and Prana (therefore) never moves.
63. When the impurities (of Chitta) are thus removed and Prana is absorbed in Susumna, he becomes a (true) Yogin.

64. Apana, which has a downward tendency should be raised up with effort by the contraction (of the anus) and this is spoken of as Mulabandha.
65. Apana thus raised up mixes with Agni and then they go up quickly to the seat of Prana. Then Prana and Apana uniting with one another go to Kundalini, which is coiled up and asleep.
66-67. Kundalini being heated by Agni and stirred up by Vayu, extends her body in the mouth of Susumna, pierces the Brahmagranthi formed of rajas and flashes at once like lightning at the mouth of Susumna.
68-69(a). Then it goes up at once through Vishnugranthi to the heart. Then it goes up through Rudragranthi and above it to the middle of the eyebrows; having pierced this place, it goes up to the Mandala (sphere) of the moon.
69(b)-70(a). It dries up the moisture produced by the moon in the Anahata-Chakra having sixteen petals.
70(b)-71. When the blood is agitated through the speed of Prana, it becomes bile from its contact with the sun, after which it goes to the sphere of the moon where it becomes of the nature of the flow of pure phlegm. How does it (blood) which is very cold become hot when it flows there ?
72. (Since) at the same time the intense white form of moon is speedily heated. Then being agitated, it goes up.
73. Through taking in this, Chitta which was moving amidst sensual objects externally, is restrained there. The novice enjoying this high state attains peace and becomes devoted to Atman.
74. Kundalini assumes the eight forms of Prakriti (matter) and attains Shiva by encircling him and dissolves itself in Shiva.
75. Thus Rajas-Sukla (seminal fluid) which rises up goes to Shiva along with Marut (Vayu); Prana and Apana which are always produced become equal.
76. Pranas flow in all things, great and small, describable, or indescribable, as fire in gold.
77. Then this body which is Adhibhautika (composed of elements) becomes Adhidaivata (relating to a tutelar deity) and is thus purified. Then it attains the stage of Ativahika.
78. Then the body being freed from the inert state becomes stainless and of the nature of Chit. In it, the Ativahika becomes the chief of all, being of the nature of That.
79. Like the conception of the snake in a rope, so the idea of the release from life and Samsara is the delusion of time.
80. Whatever appears is unreal. Whatever is absorbed is unreal. Like the illusory conception of silver in the mother-of-pearl, so is the idea of man and woman.
81. The microcosm and the macrocosm are one and the same; so also the Linga and Sutratman, Svabhava (substance) and form and the self-resplendent light and Chidatma.
82. The Sakti named Kundalini, which is like a thread in the lotus and is resplendent, is biting with the upper end of its hood (namely, mouth) at the root of the lotus the Mulakanda.
83-84. Taking hold of its tail with its mouth, it is in contact with the hole of Brahmarandhra (of Susumna). If a person seated in the Padma posture and having accustomed himself to the contraction of his anus makes his Vayu go upward with the mind intent on Kumbhaka, then Agni comes to Svadhisthana flaming, owing to the blowing of Vayu.
85. From the blowing of Vayu and Agni, the chief (Kundalini) pierces open the Brahmagranthi and then Vishnugranthi.
86. Then it pierces Rudragranthi, after that, (all) the six lotuses (or plexuses). Then Sakti is happy with Shiva in Sahasrara Kamala (1000 lotuses seat or pineal gland). This should be known as the highest Avastha (state) and it alone is the giver of final beatitude.
Thus ends the first chapter.

CHAPTER - II

1. I shall hereafter describe the science called Khechari which is such that one who knows it is freed from old age and death in this world.
2. One who is subject to the pains of death, disease and old age should, O sage, on knowing this science make his mind firm and practise Khechari.
3-4. One should regard that person as his guru on earth who knows Khechari, the destroyer of old age and death, both from knowing the meaning of books and practice, and should perform it with all his heart. The science of Khechari is not easily attainable, as also its practice.
5. Its practice and Melana are not accomplished simultaneously. Those that are bent upon practice alone do not get Melana.
6. Only some get the practice, O Brahmana, after several births, but Melana is not obtained even after a hundred births.
7. Having undergone the practice after several births, some (solitary) Yogin gets the Melana in some future birth as the result of his practice.
8. When a Yogin gets this Melana from the mouth of his Guru, then he obtains the Siddhis mentioned in the several books.
9. When a man gets this Melana through books and the significance, then he attains the state of Shiva freed from all rebirth.
10. Even Gurus may not be able to know this without books. Therefore this science is very difficult to master.
11. An ascetic should wander over the earth so long as he fails to get this science and when this science is obtained, then he has got the Siddhi in his hand (viz., mastered the psychical powers).
12. Therefore one should regard as Achyuta (Vishnu) the person who imparts the Melana, as also him who gives out the science.
13. He should regard as Shiva him who teaches the practice. Having got this science from me, you should not reveal it to others.
14-15. Therefore one who knows this should protect it with all his efforts (viz., should never give it out except to persons who deserve it). O Brahmana, one should go to the place where lives the Guru, who is able to teach the divine Yoga and there learn from him the science Khechari and being then taught well by him, should at first practise it carefully.
16-17. By means of this science, a person will attain the Siddhi of Khechari. Joining with Khechari Sakti (viz., Kundalini Sakti) by means of the (science) of Khechari which contains the Bija (seed of letter) of Khechari, one becomes the lord of Khecharas (Devas) and lives always amongst them. Khechari Bija (seed-letter) is spoken of as Agni encircled with water and as the abode of Khecharas (Devas).
18. Through this Yoga, Siddhi is mastered. The ninth (Bija) letter of Somamsa (Soma or moon part) should also be pronounced in the reverse order.
19. Then a letter composed of three Amsas of the form of moon has been described; and after that, the eight letter should be pronounced in the reverse order;
20. Then consider it as the supreme and its beginning as the fifth and this is said to the Kuta (horns) of the several bhinnas (or parts) of the moon.
21-22(a). This which tends to the accomplishment of all Yogas, should be learnt through the initiation of a Guru. He who recites this twelve times every day, will not get even in sleep that Maya (illusion) which is born in his body and which is the source of all vicious deeds.
22(b)-23. He who recites this five lakhs of times with very great care – to him the science of Khechari will reveal itself. All obstacles vanish and the Devas are pleased.
24. The destruction of Valipalita (viz., wrinkle and greyness of hair) will take place without doubt. Having acquired this great science, one should practise it afterwards.
25-26. If not, O Brahmana, he will suffer without getting any Siddhi in the path of Khechari. If one does not get this nectar like science in this practice, he should get it in the beginning of Melana and recite it always; (else) one who is without it never gets Siddhi.

27. As soon as he gets this science, he should practise it; and then the sage will soon get the Siddhi.
28. Having drawn out the tongue from the root of the palate, a knower of Atman should clear the impurity (of the tongue) for seven days according to the advice of his Guru.
29. He should take a sharp knife which is oiled and cleaned and which resembles the leaf of the plant Snuhi ("Euphorbia Antiquorum") and should cut for the space of a hair (the Fraenum Lingui).
30. Having powdered Saindhava (rock-salt) and Pathya (sea-salt), he should apply it to the place. On the seventh day, he should again cut for the space of a hair.
31. Thus for the space of six months, he should continue it always gradually with great care. In six months, Siro-Bandha (Bandha at the head), which is at the root of the tongue is destroyed.
32. Then the Yogin who knows timely action should encircle with Siro-Vastra (lit. the cloth of the head) the Vak-Ishvari (the deity presiding over speech) and should draw (it) up.
33. Again by daily drawing it up for six months, it comes, O sage, as far as the middle of the eyebrows and obliquely up to the opening of the ears;
34. Having gradually practised, it goes to the root of the chin. Then in three years, it goes up easily to the end of the hair (of the head).
35-36. It goes up obliquely to Sakha and downwards to the well of the throat. In another three years, it occupies Brahmarandhra and stops there without doubt. Crosswise it goes up to the top of the head and downwards to the well of the throat.
37. Gradually it opens the great adamantine door in the head. The rare science (of Khechari) Bija has been explained before.
38. One should perform the six Angas (parts) of this Mantra by pronouncing it in six different intonations. One should do this in order to attain all the Siddhis;
39. And this Karanyasam should be done gradually and not all at a time, since the body of one who does it all at once will soon decay.
40-41(a). Therefore it should be practised, O best of sages, little by little. When the tongue goes to the Brahmarandhra through the outer path, then one should place the tongue after moving the bolt of Brahma which cannot be mastered by the Devas.
41(b)-42. On doing this for three years with the point of finger, he should make the tongue enter within; then it enters Brahmadvara (or hole). On entering the Brahmadvara, one should practise Mathana (churning) well.
43. Some intelligent men attain Siddhi even without Mathana. One who is versed in Khechari Mantra accomplishes it without Mathana.
44-46(a). By doing the Japa and Mathana, one reaps the fruits soon. By connecting a wire made of gold, silver or iron with the nostrils by means of a thread soaked in milk, one should restrain his breath in his heart and seated in a convenient posture with his eyes concentrated between his eyebrows, he should perform Mathana slowly.
46(b)-47. In six months, the state of Mathana becomes natural like sleep in Children. And it is not advisable to do Mathana always. It should be done (once) only in every month.
48. A Yogin should not revolve his tongue in the path. After doing this for twelve years, Siddhi is surely obtained.
49. Then he sees the whole universe in his body as not being different from Atman. This path of the Urdhva-Kundalini (higher Kundalini), O chief of Kings, conquers the macrocosm.
Thus ends the second chapter.

CHAPTER - III

1. Melana-Mantra: Hrim, Bham, Sam, Pam, Pham, Sam, Ksham. The lotus-born (Brahma) said: "O Shankara, (among) new moon (the first day of the lunar fortnight) and full moon, which is spoken of as its (mantra's) sign ?

2. In the first day of lunar fortnight and during new moon and full moon (days), it should be made firm and there is no other way (or time).

3. A man longs for an object through passion and is infatuated with passion for objects. One should always leave these two and seek the Niranjana (stainless).

4-5. He should abandon everything else which he thinks is favourable to himself. Keeping the Manas in the midst of Sakti and Sakti in the midst of Manas, one should look into Manas by means of Manas. Then he leaves even the highest stage. Manas alone is the Bindu, the cause of creation and preservation.

6. It is only through Manas that Bindu is produced, like the curd from milk. The organs of Manas is not that which is situated in the middle of Bandhana.

7-8(a). Bandhana is there where Sakti is between the sun and moon. Having known Susumna and its Bheda (piercing) and making the Vayu go in the middle, one should stand in the seat of Bindu and close the nostrils.

8(b)-9(a). Having known Vayu, the above-mentioned Bindu and the Sattva-Prakriti as well as the six Chakras, one should enter the Sukha-Mandala (viz., the Sahasrara or pineal gland, the sphere of happiness).

9(b)-11. There are six Chakras. Muladhara is in the anus; Svadhisthana is near the genital organ; Manipuraka is in the navel; Anahata is in the heart; Visuddhi is at the root of the neck and Ajna is in the head (between the two eyebrows).

12. Having known these six Mandalas (spheres), one should enter the Sukha-Mandala (pineal gland), drawing up the Vayu and should send it (Vayu) upwards.

13. He who practises thus (the control of) Vayu becomes one with Brahmanda (the macrocosm). He should practise (or master) Vayu, Bindu, Chitta and Chakra.

14-15. Yogins attain the nectar of equality through Samadhi alone. Just as the fire latent in (Sacrificial) wood does not appear without churning, so the lamp of wisdom does not arise without the Abhyasa Yoga (or practice of Yoga). The fire placed in a vessel does not give light outside.

16. When the vessel is broken, its light appears without. One's body is spoken of as the vessel and the seat of 'That' is the fire (or light) within;

17-18(a). And when it (the body) is broken through the words of a Guru, the light of Brahma Jnana becomes resplendent. With the Guru as the helmsman, one crosses the subtle body and the ocean of Samsara through the affinities of practice.

18(b)-19. That Vak (power of speech) which sprouts in Para, gives forth two leaves in Pashyanti; buds forth in Madhyama and blossoms in Vaikhari – that Vak which has before been described, reaches the stage of the absorption of sound, reversing the above order (viz., beginning with Vaikhari, etc.,).

20-21(a). Whoever thinks that He who is the great lord of that Vak, who is the undifferentiated and who is the illuminator of that Vak is Self; whoever thinks over thus, is never affected by words, high or low (or good or bad).

21(b)-23(a). The three (aspects of consciousness), Vishva, Taijasa and Prajna (in man), the three Virat, Hiranyagarbha and Ishvara in the universe, the egg of the universe, the egg of man and the seven worlds – all these in turn are absorbed in Pratyagatman through the absorption of their respective Upadhis (vehicles).

23(b)-24(a). The egg being heated by the fire of Jnana is absorbed with its Karana (cause) into Paramatman (Universal Self). Then it becomes one with Para-Brahman.

24(b)-25. It is then neither steadiness nor depth, neither light nor darkness, neither describable nor distinguishable. Sat (Be-ness) alone remains. One should think of Atman as being within the body like a light in a vessel.

26. Atman is of the dimensions of a thumb, is a light without smoke and without form, is shining within (the body) and is undifferentiated and immutable.

27-28(a). The Vijnana Atman that dwells in this body is deluded by Maya during the states of waking, dreaming and dreamless sleep; but after many births, owing to the effect of good Karma, it wishes to attain its own state.

28(b)-29(a). Who am I ? How has this stain of mundane existence accrued to me ? What becomes in the dreamless sleep of me who am engaged in business in the waking and dreaming states ?
29(b)-30. Just as a bale of cotton is burnt by fire, so the Chidabhasa which is the result of non-wisdom, is burnt by the (wise) thoughts like the above and by its own supreme illumination. The outer burning (of body as done in the world) is no burning at all.
31-32. When the worldly wisdom is destroyed, Pratyagatman that is in the Dahara (Akasa or ether of the heart) obtains Vijnana, diffusing itself everywhere and burns in an instant Jnanamaya and Manomaya (sheaths). After this, He himself shines always within, like a light within a vessel.
33. That Muni who contemplates thus till sleep and till death is to be known as a Jivanmukta. Having done what ought to be done, he is a fortunate person.
34. And having given up (even) the state of a Jivanmukta, he attains Videhamukta (emancipation in a disembodied state), after his body wears off. He attains the state, as if of moving in the air.
35. Then That alone remains which is soundless, touchless, formless and deathless, which is the Rasa (essence), eternal, and odourless, which has neither beginning nor end, which is greater than the great and which is permanent, stainless and decayless.
Thus ends the third chapter.
Hari Om Tat Sat !

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Yogakundalini Upanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Bhasma Jabala Upanishad

Om! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I am that Absolute Brahman only which, after being understood in its true aspect (as one with this Atman), entirely burns into ashes (Bhasma) the ignorance (illusion or Maya) of considering this universe to be existing (real) and separate from one's own Self, through the destructive fire of (Supreme) Knowledge!

Once Bhusunda, a descendant of Jabali went to the Kailas Peak and prostrated before Lord Mahadeva Siva, who is the form of Omkara and who is beyond the trinity of Brahma, Vishnu and Rudra. Bhusunda worshipped Siva with great devotion again and again through fruits, flowers and leaves. Then he questioned Lord Siva: "Lord! Kindly impart to me the essential knowledge of all the Vedas, embodying the process and technique of using the Bhasma (sacred ash), because it is the only means for attaining Liberation. What is the Bhasma made of? Where should it be applied? What are the Mantras to be recited? Who are the persons fitted for this? What are the rules regarding it? Kindly instruct me, born from depressed class."

The kind Lord Paramesvara said: At first the devotee after understanding the influence of the celestials at the prescribed time, should fetch some sacred and pure cow-dung early in the morning, keep it in the leaf of a Palasa-tree and then dry it with the Vedic Mantra 'Tryambakam' etc. (in the sun).

Then he should burn that dry cow-dung, placed in a convenient place, with any fire that is available, according to the rules laid down in the Grihya Sutras of his sect, and then pour Ahutis of seasamum and paddy together with ghee, with the Mantra 'Somaya Svaha'. The number of Ahutis should be 1008, or if possible, 1 ½ times this. The instruments for pouring ghee should be made of leaf; in that case man does not commit any sin.

Then, at the end, the devotee should offer the oblation of Sveshtakruta at the time of Purna-Ahuti, with the Mantra 'Tryambakam' etc. With the same Mantra Bali (an offering) should be placed in the eight directions (of the fire).

That Bhasma should be sprinkled with water by the Gayatri Mantra. Then that sacred ash should be placed in a gold, silver, copper or earthen vessel and sprinkled again with the Rudra Mantras. It should then be kept in a clean and decent place.

Then the devotee should honour the Brahmins with a grand feast. Then only he will become purified. Then he should take the Bhasma from the vessel with the Pancha-Brahma-Mantras, 'Manastoka', 'Sadyo Jatam', etc., and with the idea that 'fire is Bhasma, air is Bhasma, water is Bhasma, earth is Bhasma, ether is Bhasma, gods are Bhasma, Rishis are Bhasma, all this universe and existence are Bhasma; I prostrate to this sacred and purifying Bhasma which destroys all my sins.'

Thus, the devotee should keep a little Bhasma with the clean palm of his left hand saying, 'Vamadevaya' (this is to Vamadeva) sprinkling with the Mantra 'Tryambakam' etc., and cleaning it with the Mantra 'Suddham suddhena' etc. Then he should filter it nicely. Then he should apply it from head to foot, with the five Brahma-Mantras. With the first finger, middle finger and ring finger, he should apply the same to the middle of the head saying 'to the head' and 'O Bhasma! Thou hast come from Agni!'

He should apply bhasma at the top of the head with the mantra 'Murdhanam.' On the forehead with 'Tryambakam etc.', on the neck with 'Nilagrivaya etc., on the right side of the neck with 'Tryayusham etc. and Vama etc.', on the cheeks with 'Kalaya etc.', on the 'eyes with 'Trilochanaya etc.', on the ears with 'Srinavama etc.', on the mouth with 'Prabravama etc.', on the heart (chest) with 'Atmane etc.', on the navel with 'Nabhih etc.', on the right shoulder with 'Bhavaya etc.', on the right elbow with 'Rudraya etc.', on the right wrist with 'Sarvaya etc.', on the back of the right palm with 'Pasupataye etc.', on the left shoulder with 'Ugraya etc.', on the left elbow with 'Agre-vadhaya etc.', on the left wrist with 'Dure-vadhaya etc.', on the back of the left palm with 'Namo Hartre etc.', and over the shoulder-blades with 'Sankaraya etc.'.

The devotee should then prostrate to Siva with the Mantra 'Somaya' etc. He should wash the hands and drink that ash-water with the Mantra 'Apah Punantu' etc. The water should never be spilt down from any cause.

Thus, this practice of Bhasmadharana should be done in the morning, noon and evening. If he does not do this, he will become fallen. This very thing is the prescribed Dharma of all Brahmins. Without having Bhasmadharana in this fashion, he should never take any food, water or anything else. Accidentally if this practice is forgotten, that day, Gayatri should not be repeated. No Yajna should be done on that day; no Tarpana should be offered to gods, Rishis or Pitrus. This is the eternal Dharma that destroys all sins and gives the final state of Moksha.

This is the daily rite of Brahmins, Brahmacharins, Grihasthas, Vanaprasthas and Sannyasins. If this is overlooked even once, he should stand in water upto the neck, repeating Gayatri 108 times, and fast the whole day. If a Sannyasin does not wear Bhasma, even a single day, he should fast during the whole day and do 1000 Pranava Japa, for being purified once again. Otherwise, the Lord will throw these Sannyasins to dogs and wolves.

In case this kind of Bhasma is not available, any other Bhasma that may be at hand should be used with the prescribed Mantras. This kind of practice shall destroy any kind of sin that may be committed by man.

Then again Bhusunda asked Siva: What are the daily rites to be performed by a Brahmin, by neglecting which he will commit a sin? Who is to be then meditated upon? Who is to be remembered? How to meditate? Where to practice this? Please tell me in detail.

The Lord answered all in a nutshell: First of all the devotee should get up early in the morning before sunrise, and after finishing the purificatory actions, should take his bath. He should clean the body with the Rudra Suktas. Then he should wear a clean cloth. After this, he should meditate on the sun-god and apply Bhasma to all the prescribed parts of the body.

He should then wear white Rudraksha, as prescribed. Some prescribe the following way of wearing Rudraksha beads: Over the head should be worn forty rudraksha beads. One or three beads on the chest. Twelve beads over each of the two ears. Thirt-two beads around the neck. Sixteen beads around each of the upper arms. Twelve beads around each of the wrists. Six beads around each of the thumbs. Then the devotee should observe Sandhya with the Kusa grass in his hand. He should do Japa of either Siva-Shadakshara or Siva-Ashtakshara. 'Om Namah Sivaya' and 'Om Namo Mahadevaya' are the two Mantras. This is the highest truth and the greatest instruction. I myself am that Great Lord Siva, God of all gods, the Supreme Controller of all the universes. I am that Impersonal Brahman, I am Omkara, I am the Creator, Preserver and Destroyer of all. Through My terror only, all are working properly. I am this world and the five elements. I am the Highest Truth that exists, the Brahman of the Upanishads. This is the greatest Vidya.

I am the only giver of Moksha. Hence all people come to Me for final help. That is why I absorb into My Being those creatures who leave their Pranas at Banares which is standing at the top of My Trisula (trident). Therefore, everyone should perform penance at Banares only. Banares should not be neglected under any circumstance. Everybody should try to live at Banares as far as possible. No place is better than Banares.

Even at Banares, the most celebrated is the temple of Siva, where in the East, there is the place of Wealth, in the South, the place of Vichara, in the West, the place of Vairagya and in the North, the place of Jnana. There in the middle, I, the Eternal Spirit should be worshipped. That Linga at Banares, is not illumined by the sun, moon or the stars. That self-luminous Linga called 'Visvesvara' has its root in Pathala. That is Myself. I should be worshipped by one who wears the sacred Bhasma and Rudrakshas in the prescribed manner. I shall deliver him from all sins and sorrows.

By performing My Abhisheka, he attains My Sayujya state. Nothing exists other than Myself. I initiate all with the Taraka Mantra. Those who want Mukti should live at Banares. I will take care of them. I am the Lord of Brahma, Vishnu and Rudra. The most corrupt man or woman will attain Moksha, if he or she dies at Banares. Other sinners will be fried in burning pits of live coals after death. Therefore, everybody should try to live at Banares which is My Pranalinga Itself.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Bhasma-Jabalopanishad, as contained in the Atharva-Veda.

Rudraksha Jabala Upanishad

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Hail Om! I praise the Effulgent State of Absolute Peace, belonging to Sri Maharudra, which is to be known through the Rudraksha Jabala Upanishad.
Bhusunda questioned Lord Kalagnirudra: What is the beginning of Rudraksha beads? What is the benefit of wearing them on the body?
Lord Kalagnirudra answered him thus: I closed my eyes for the sake of destroying the Tripura Asuras. From my eyes thus closed, drops of water fell on the earth. These drops of tears turned into Rudrakshas.
By the mere utterance of the name of ‘Rudraksha’, one acquires the benefit of giving ten cows in charity. By seeing and touching it, one attains double that benefit. I am unable to praise it any more.
I closed my eyes one thousand celestial years. Then from my eyelids, drops of water dropped down and attained the state of immobility for blessing the devoted persons.
This Rudraksha destroys the devotees’ sins that are committed both night and day, by wearing it.
By mere vision of the Rudraksha, the benefit will be say, a lac. But by wearing them, it will be a crore. Why, it will be equal to hundred crores.
But it will be a thousand lacs of crores and hundred lacs of crores times powerful when one does Japa with Rudraksha and wears it at all times.
Among Rudrakshas, one as big as Amalaka (myrobalan), is considered to be the best. One as big as the Badari fruit (Indian berry) is considered to be of the middle sort. But that as big as Chana (Bengal gram) is considered to be the worst of all. This is my idea about the size of Rudraksha beads.

The four kinds of people, Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas and Sudras are born as merely a worthless burden on the earth. The real Brahmin is the white Rudraksha. The red is a Kshatriya. The yellow is a Vaisya. And the black is a Sudra.

Therefore, a Brahmin should wear white Rudrakshas, a Kshatriya the red, a Vaisya the yellow and a Sudra the black.

One should use those Rudraksha-beads which are nice, handsome, strong, big, auspicious and thorny. One should avoid those eaten by worms, broken, without thorns, and having sores.

The self-holed Rudraksha is of the best variety. But that which is holed by man's attempt, is considered to be worse. Those best Rudrakshas should be strung in white thread. A worshipper of Siva should wear Rudraksha all over the body. He should wear one bead on the crest, three hundred round the head, thirty-six round the neck, sixteen round each arm, twelve round the chest and five hundred round the waist. He should wear a Yajnopavita consisting of one hundred and eight beads of Rudrakshas. He should wear two, three, five or seven Malas of Rudraksha round the neck.

A Siva-Bhakta should wear Rudrakshas round his crown, ear-ring, chain, round the ear, armlet, at all times, and specially round the stomach, irrespective of the fact whether he is sleeping, drinking, etc.

If the devotee wears three hundred beads, it is the worst, if he wears five hundred it will be medium, but one thousand will be the best of all.

The devotee, when wearing Rudrakshas on the head, should repeat his Ishta Mantra, and when wearing them round the neck, should repeat the Tat-Purusha Mantra and when wearing round the throat, should repeat the Aghora Mantra. The same Mantra (Aghora) should be recited when wearing round the chest also.

He should wear them round the arms with the Aghora Bija Mantra.

Then again Bhusunda asked Lord Kalagnirudra: What are the different forms and effects of Rudraksha beads? Please tell me about the secret of these blessed ones including their various faces, which is the means of getting rid of all evil.

Lord Kalagnirudra said: The bead with one face is of the form of the Supreme Truth. A disciplined one (controlling his senses) mingles himself with the one Eternal Truth, after wearing these Rudrakshas. The bead with two faces is of the form of Ardhanarisvara and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Ardhanarisvara (Siva united with Sakti). The bead with three faces is of the form of the three fires and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Agni. The bead with four faces is of the form of the four-faced Brahma and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Brahma. The bead with five faces is of the form of Panchabrahman (the five-faced Siva) and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Panchabrahman and drives away the sin of homicide. The bead with six faces is of the form of the six-faced Kartikeya or Ganesha and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of wealth and health, clear intellect and wisdom, and purification. The bead with seven faces is of the form of the seven Matras (Mother Goddesses) and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of wealth and health, right perception, and purity of mind. The bead with eight faces is of the form of the eight-fold Nature (five elements, mind, ego, and matter) or the eight Vasus and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of these Devatas and becomes truthful. The bead with nine faces is of the form of the Nava-Saktis and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of the nine Powers. The bead with ten faces is of the form of the ten Yamas means used by Yogins and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of achieving peace of the mind. The bead with eleven faces is of the form of the eleven Rudras and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of increase well-being and wealth. The bead with twelve faces is of the form of Mahavishnu or the twelve Adityas and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Moksha. The bead with thirteen faces is of the form of the Kama (Cupid or the god of Love) and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of Cupid in gratifying all desires. The bead with fourteen faces is of the form of Rudra being generated out of his eyes and the devotee wearing it attains the grace of destruction of all diseases.

One who wears Rudrakshas, should not use intoxicants, meat, garlic, onions, carrots and all such prohibited things. By wearing Rudrakshas during eclipses, Vishusankranti (the end of Mina and beginning of Mesha Masa), new moon, full moon and other such auspicious days, one is freed of all sins.

The base of the Rudraksha bead is Brahma, its navel is Vishnu, its face is Rudra and its hole consists of all gods.

One day Sanatkumara asked Kalagnirudra: "O Lord! Tell me the rules for wearing Rudrakshas". At that time Nidagha, Jadabharata, Dattatreya, Katyayana, Bharadvaja, Kapila, Vasishtha, Pippalada, etc., came to Kalagnirudra. Then Lord Kalagnirudra asked them why they all had come in a group. They all answered that they came to hear the method of wearing Rudrakshas.

Kalagnirudra said: Those that are born out of Rudra's Akshis (eyes) are called Rudrakshas. When these beads are even once touched by hand, one attains the glory of giving in charity two thousand cows at a time. When they are worn in ears, he gets the effect of giving out eleven thousand cows in charity. He also attains the state of the eleven Rudras. When the beads are worn on the head, one has the benefit of giving a crore of cows in charity. Of all these places, I am unable to tell you the benefit when worn in the ears.

Whoever studies this Rudraksha Jabala Upanishad, be he a boy or a youth, becomes great. He becomes the Guru of all and the teacher of all Mantras. Havan and Archana should be done with these Mantras (of the Upanishad).

That Brahmin who recites this Upanishad in the evening, destroys the sins committed during day time; who recites at noon, destroys the sins of six births; who recites in the morning and evening, destroys the sins of many births. He attains the same benefit of doing six thousand lacs of Gayatri Japa.

He becomes purified from all sins of killing a Brahmin, drinking toddy, stealing gold, approaching Guru's wife, having intercourse with her, speaking with corrupted person, etc.

He gets the benefits of all pilgrimages and river-baths. He attains Siva-sayujya. He does not come back (to rebirth).

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Rudraksha Jabalopanishad, included in the Sama-Veda.

Ganapati Upanishad

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Auspiciousness to those who hear ---- thus the Santi.
1. Om Gam. I bow to Ganapati.
2. You clearly are the tattva. You alone are the creator. You alone are the maintainer. You alone are the destroyer. Of all this you certainly are Brahman. You plainly are the essence.
3. Always I speak amrta. The truth I speak.
4. Protect me. Protect the speakers. Protect the hearers. Protect the givers. Protect the holders. Protect the disciple that repeats. Protect that in the east. Protect that in the south. Protect that in the west. Protect that in the north. Protect that above. Protect that below. Everywhere protect! Protect me everywhere!
5. You are speech. You are consciousness. You are bliss. You are Brahman. You are being-consciousness-bliss. You are the non-dual. You are plainly Brahman. You are knowledge. You are intelligence.
6. You create all this world. You maintain all this world. All this world is seen in you. You are earth, water, air, fire, ether. You are beyond the four measures of speech. You are beyond the three gunas. You are beyond the three bodies. You are beyond the three times. You are always situated in the muladhara. You are the being of the three Saktis. You are always meditated on by yogins. You are Brahma, you are Visnu, you are Rudra, you are Agni, you are Vayu, you are the sun, you are the moon, you are Brahma, bhur-bhuvah-svar.

7 Ga is the first syllable, after that the first letter, beyond that m, then the half-moon all together. Joined with m, this is the mantra form.
8 The letter ga is the first form, letter a the middle form, m the last form. Bindu the higher form, nada the joining together, samhita the junction. This is the vidya of Lord Ganesa.
9 Ganaka is the seer, nricad-gayatri the metre, Sri Mahaganapati the devata. Om ganapataye namah.
10 Let us think of the one-toothed, let us meditate on the crooked trunk, may that tusk direct us.
11. One tusk, four arms, carrying noose and goad, with his hands dispelling fear and granting boons, with a mouse as his banner.
12. Red, with a big belly, with ears like winnowing baskets, wearing red, with limbs smeared with red scent, truly worshipped with red flowers.
13. To the devoted a merciful deva, the maker of the world, the prime cause, who at the beginning of creation was greater than nature and man.
14. He who always meditates thus is a yogin above yogins.
15. Hail to the lord of vows, hail to Ganapati, hail to the first lord, hail unto you, to the big-bellied, one-tusked, obstacle-destroyer, the son of Siva, to the boon-giver, hail, hail!
16. He who studies this atharva text moves towards Brahma. He is always blissful. He is not bound by any obstacles. He is liberated from the five greater and the five lesser sins. Evening meditation destroys the unmeritorious actions of the night. At both evening and morning he is liberated from the bad and he attains dharma, artha, kama and moksa.
17. This atharva text should not be given to those not pupils. If from delusion a person so gives, he is a bad person.
18. He who wants something may accomplish it by 1,000 recitations of this. He who sprinkles Ganapati with this becomes eloquent. He who recites this on a fourth day becomes a knower of vidya. This is an artharva saying: ‘‘He who moves towards Brahmavidya is never afraid.’’ He who worships with fried grains becomes famous and becomes intelligent. He who worships with sweet-meat (modaka) gains the desired fruit. He who worships with samit and ghee by him all is attained, all is gained by him. He who makes eight brahmËnas understand this becomes like the sun’s rays. In a solar eclipse, in a great river, or in front of an image having recited (this) he gets accomplished in the mantra. He becomes liberated from great obstacles. He is freed from great misfortunes.
Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Jabala Darsana Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,

God Dattatreya is the reincarnation of the four armed Vishnu and he is the ruler of the world. Sankrithi is a great devotee and a sage and is an expert in yoga and also a disciple of Dattatreya. He approached his teacher (God Dattatreya) with humility and with folded hands, when his teacher was alone and requested him, “Oh God, please tell me about the science of yoga which has eight branches and five different sthanas (places) by knowing which I will attain salvation. Dattatreya told him, “Hey Sankrithi, I shall tell you about Yoga which has eight branches. The eight branches are Yama, Niyama, Aasana, Pranayama, Prathyahara, Dharana, Dhyana and Samadhi.

Yama which is the first is the practice of non-violence, truth, non possession of properties of others, celibacy, mercy, honesty, patience, stability, food discipline and cleanliness. 1

Niyama is the ten aspects of penance, joy, orthodoxy, charity, worship of god, hearing of philosophy, fear for bad actions, clear intellect, chanting and austerities. 2

The nine important Asanas (sitting positions) are Swasthika (Swastika), Gomukha (cows face), Padma (lotus), Veera (valorous), Simha (lion), Badra (safe), Muktha (free), Mayura (peacock) and Sukha (pleasant). Oh sage, that position, whatever it may be but which makes you comfortable and gives you courage to undertake Yoga is called Sukhasana. People who do not have strength to take up other positions can use that. Victory in the seating position is like victory over the three worlds. Once the Asana is fixed, one should practice Pranayama. 3

Either in the top of the mountain or by the shore of the river or under a Bilwa tree in the forest, after choosing a clean place which is acceptable to the mind and after establishing a place to do tapas (Asram), sit in the Asana which is most familiar facing either east or north. Then sit with the body neck and head in a straight line, cover the face and concentrate the vision with best possible attention on the nectar flowing from the fourth state of the moon like dot at the end of the nose. Draw the air inside using the lungs, store it in the stomach, meditate on the flame of fire inside the body and then shift meditation to the root of fire with its sound and dot. Then the intelligent one will exhale and draw the Prana using Pingala (Nadi which is tawny and is on the right side of Sushumna Nadi) and meditate on the Agni Bheeja. Again he has to exhale and inhale again in the middle using the Ida (Nadi which is pleasant and is on the left side of Sushumna). One should have to live in a secret place practicing this exercise six times for 3-4 days or 3-4 weeks at dawn, noon and dusk. This would help him to clean up the Nadis. Slowly symbols will start showing up. Body will become light, the fire in the stomach will burn well and the voice would become clearer. These are the symbols of Siddhi (getting mastery). Till you see this, you have to practice. 4

Now I will tell you about Prathyahara. To use force and divert the sensory organs which normally travel according to their nature is Prathyahara. Those who know Brahma say that seeing whatever we see as the form of Brahman is Prathyahara. Prathyahara also is doing clean or unclean acts as those belonging to Brhaman. Further doing daily religious activities after dedicating them to God and similarly doing the activities which we desire is also Prathyahara. Apart from this inhaling air (oxygen) and stopping it in different places is also Prathyahara. The wise man would sit in Swasthikasana, draw his breath till it fills up from head to toe and hold it in two feet, mooladhara, stomach, middle of the heart, bottom of the neck, jaw, middle of the eyelids, forehead and at the top of the skull. Then he should leave out the belief that the body is oneself and make that thought as nirvikalpa and merge it with Paramatma. The experts in Vedanta say that this is true Prathyahara. There is nothing that cannot be attained by those who practice like this. 5

Now I will tell you about the five types of Dharana (holding steady - a stage in meditation - here we try to hold on what we are mediating upon without wavering). In the sky which is in the middle of the body, Dharana of the sky outside should be made. Similarly in the breath, Dharana of air outside should be made. In the fire in the stomach, Dharana of the fire outside should be made. In the fluid aspects of the body, Dharana of the water outside should be made. In the earthy aspects of the body, Dharana of the earth outside should be made. Sage, also it is necessary to chant the pancha bhootha mantras viz., Ham, Yam, Ram, Vam and Lam. It is said that this very great Dharana destroys all sins. In the body up to the knee is the aspect of the earth, from there till hip it is the aspect of water, up to the heart is the aspect of fire, up to middle of eyelids is the aspect of air and then up to the middle of the skull is the aspect of the sky. In the aspect of earth Brahma has to be placed, in the aspect of water Vishnu should be placed, in the aspect of fire Rudra should be placed, in the aspect of air Iswara should be placed and in the aspect of sky, the Sadashiva should be placed. Hey great sage, I will also tell you another Dharana. In the Jeevatma, that lord Shiva who rules over everything and is the personification of wisdom should be placed. To get rid of all sins, the wise man should suppress the gods like Brahma in the causative self, and place the Avyakta (that which is not clear) which is formless and which is the root cause inside the entire soul with the chanting of pranava. He should control the sensory organs by mind and should merge them with the soul. 6

I will now tell you about Dhyana (meditation) which destroys sorrow. Dhyana should be done of that Maheswara, who is the medicine for problems arising out of birth, who is the discipline and fundamental basis of the world who is of the form of Para Brahma, who has the masculine power upwards, who is of the form of the world, who is Virupaksha, and who is the head of all yogis as “I am He”. Then continue to do Dhyana of him who is beyond the reach of meditation, who is the personification of Sachidananda Brahman and who is soul in person as “I am He” for attaining salvation. In the mind of that great Purusha who practices like this, the science of Vedanta would automatically appear. There is no doubt about it. 7

Now I will tell you about Samadhi (deep meditative state) which destroys the ills of birth and death. Samadhi is that state in which there is knowledge that Jeevatma and Paramatma are one. Atma (soul) is filled all over for ever and does not have motion or stain. Though it is one, due to the effects of illusion, it appears as different objects. Really there is no difference between these so called objects. When one sees all objects within himself and him as a part of all objects, He attains Brahman. When one drowns himself in Samadhi and does not see different objects as different , then he attains the single aim of salvation. When he sees only the true soul and the entire world appears as an illusion to him and he is cured of all sorrow.

Thus advised by Lord Dattatreya the sage Sankrithi fully lost all his fear and attained that blissfull state, deep in himself.

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Jabala Darsanopanishad, included in the Sama-Veda.

Tara Sara Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

CHAPTER - I

1. Hari Om. Brihaspati asked Yajnavalkya: “That which is called Kurukshetra is the place of the sacrifice of the Devas and the spiritual seat of all beings. Therefore where should one go in order that he may cognise Kurukshetra, the place of the sacrifice of the Devas and the spiritual seat of all beings ?” (To which Yajnavalkya replied): “Avimukta is Kurukshetra, the place of the sacrifice of the Devas and of the study of Brahman, because it is there that Rudra initiates one into the Taraka Brahman when Prana (life) goes out. Through this, one becomes immortal and the enjoyer of Moksha. Therefore one should always be in the midst of that place Avimukta and should never leave, O Reverend Sir, Avimukta.” Thus said Yajnavalkya.

2. Then Bharadvaja asked Yajnavalkya: “What is Taraka ? What is that which causes one to cross (this mundane existence)”. To which Yajnavalkya replied: “Om Namo Narayanaya is the Taraka. It should be worshipped as Chidatma. Om is a single syllable and of the nature of Atman. Namah is of two syllables and is of the nature of Prakriti (matter). Narayanaya is of five syllables and is of the nature of Parabrahman. He who knows this becomes immortal. Through ‘Om’, is Brahma produced; through ‘Na’ is Vishnu produced; through ‘Ma’ is Rudra produced; through ‘Na’ is Ishvara produced; through ‘Ra’ is the Anda-Virat (or Virat of the universe) produced; through ‘Ya’ is Purusha produced; through ‘Na’ is Bhagavan (Lord) produced; and through ‘Ya’ is Paramatman produced. This Ashtakshara (eight syllables) of Narayana is the supreme and the highest Purusha. Thus is the Rig-Veda with the first foot (or half).

CHAPTER - II

That which is Om is the indestructible, the supreme and Brahman. That alone should be worshipped. It is this that is of the eight subtle syllables. And this becomes eight, being of eight forms. 'A' is the first letter; 'U' is the second; 'M' is the third; Bindu is the fourth; Nada is the fifth; Kala is the sixth; Kalatita (that beyond Kala) is the seventh; and that which is beyond these is the eighth. It is called Taraka, because it enables one to cross this mundane existence. Know that Taraka alone is Brahman and it alone should be worshipped". The (following) verses may be quoted here:

1. "From the letter 'A' came Brahma named Jambavan (the bear). From the letter 'U' came Upendra, named Hari.
2. From the letter 'M' came Shiva, known as Hanuman. Bindu is named Ishvara and is Satrughna, the Lord of the discuss itself.
3. Nada should be known as the great Lord named Bharata and the sound of the conch itself. From Kala came the Purusha himself as Lakshmana and the bearer of the earth.
4. Kalatita is known as the goddess Sita Herself. That which is beyond is the Paramatman named Sri Rama and is the highest Purusha.

All this is the explanation of the letter Om, which is the past, the present and future and which is other than these (viz.,) Tattva, Mantra, Varna (colour), Devata (deity), Chhandas (metre), Rik, Kala, Sakti and Srishti (creation). He who knows this becomes immortal. (Thus is) Yajur-Veda with the second foot".

CHAPTER - III

Then Bharadvaja asked Yajnavalkya: "Through what Mantra is Paramatman pleased and shows his own Atman (to persons) ? Please tell this". Yajnavalkya replied:

1. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord described by (the letter) 'A' and is Jambavan (the bear) and Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
2. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord described by (the letter) 'U' and is Upendra (or) Hari and Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
3. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord described by (the letter) 'M' and is of the form of Shiva (or) Hanuman and Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
4. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana, the Lord of Satrughna of the form of Bindu and the Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
5. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord, and is Bharata of the form of Nada and the Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
6. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord, and is Lakshmana of the form of Kala and the Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
7. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord, and is Kalatita, the Goddess Sita, of the form of Chit and the Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !
8. Om. He who is Sri-Paramatman, Narayana and the Lord that is beyond that (Kalatita), is the supreme Purusha and is the ancient Purushottama, the eternal, the immaculate, the enlightened, the emancipated, the true, the highest bliss, the endless, the secondless and the all-full – that Brahman is myself. I am Rama and the Bhuh, Bhuvah and Suvah; Salutation to Him !

He who has mastered this eightfold Mantra is purified by Agni; he is purified by Vayu; he is purified by the sun; he is purified by Shiva; he is known by all the Devas. He attains the fruit of reciting Itihasas, Puranas, Rudra (Mantras), a hundred thousand times. He who repeatedly remembers (or recites) the Ashtakshara (the eight-syllabled Mantra) of Narayana gains the fruit of the recitation of Gayatri a hundred thousand times or of Pranava (Om) a myriad of times. He purifies (his ancestors) ten (degrees) above and (his descendants) ten (degrees) below. He attains the state of Narayana. He who knows this (attains) the state of Narayana).

Like the eye (which sees without any obstacle) the things spread (in the sky), the wise ever see this supreme seat of Vishnu. Brahmanas who are spiritually awake praise in diverse ways and illuminate the supreme abode of Vishnu. Thus is the Upanishad. (Thus is) the Sama-Veda with the third foot. Hari Om Tat Sat !

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Tarasara Upanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Maha Vakya Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

God Brahma said:
I would explain this Upanishad based on inside experience. The personal knowledge "that this Sun is Brahman" is got by chanting Ajabha Gayatri viz., "Hamsa Soham." The ever joyous Paramatma would set in if, after controlling Prana and Apana by Pranayama, and attaining it (pranayama) by constant and long practice of Pooraka and Rechaka (macro, micro as well as together) and making the mind concentrate on the same Brahman in three stages. It would shine like one thousand suns and would be complete like the shoreless sea. That experience is neither Samadhi nor Yoga Sidhi and nor mixing of the mind. That is merging with Brahman as Brahman is always single.

The sages who experience this tell as follows: I know that Purusha with the shining light who is beyond darkness, who makes shapes, who names them, who provides for them and who is the brave Purushotama. The one who finds out that Purusha, who was announced as Para Brahman by Brahma in the primitive times and who was found out by Indra in all the four directions, attains the deathless state in this birth itself. There is no other method for salvation.

I am that sun who is the ethereal light. I am that Siva who is that sun of Knowledge. I am the very clean light of Atma. I am all the light that we know. Om.

Whoever reads this Upanishad of Atharva-Veda gets the same holy effect as reading the complete Vedas. He would definitely attain the place of Maha Vishnu.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !

May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !

Pancha Brahma Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Sage Pippalada asked Lord Ishwara, “Oh, God, Which appeared first?”

For which, the Lord Maheswara replied:

The Para Brahma took shape in stages of Sathyojatha, Aghora, Vamadeva, Thathpurusha and Ishana. 1

Sathyojatha is the aspect of earth and is the Sun, Goddess Lakshmi, Brahma, the letter Om, Rig Veda, Garhapathyagni (Household fire), mantras, Saptha Swaras (seven notes) and yellow colour. It gives all that is wished for. 2

Aghora is the aspect of water and is moon, Goddess Parvathy, Yajur Veda, blue colour of the cloud, Dakshinagni (the fire of the south) and fifty letters. It drives away all sins, destroys all that is evil and grants riches. 3

Vamadeva gives great knowledge and destroys all sins. It is the aspect of fire, is lights of crores of suns, Sama Veda, eight type of songs, courageous tone, Ahwaneeyagni, power of knowledge, power to destroy and slightly blackish white colour. It gives full consciousness, rules over all the three worlds, spread over all the three worlds and grants all sort of luck and results for the action performed. 4

Thathpurusha is with eight letters (Aa, Ka, Cha, Ta, Tha, Pa, Ya, Sa) and is in the eight petal lotus and is normally surrounded by air. It has five fires, protects effects of mantras, personification of the fifty consonants, has the form of Atharva Veda, is the chief of several crores of Ganas, has the shape which is extremely big, red coloured, gives whatever is asked for, medicine for worry and diseases and the root of Srishti (creation), Sthithi (upkeep) and Laya(merging). It is the basis of all strengths. It is the Thureeya which is beyond the three common states and is the thing called Brahman. It is worshipped by Brahma, Shiva and Vishnu. It is the philosophy from which all others originate. 5

You should understand that Ishana is the witness for intelligence and is the activator of the brain. It is the aspect of sky and cannot be seen. It is decorated by the sound of "Om". It has the shape of all devas. It is peaceful. It is beyond peace. It is beyond sound. It is Aa and occupies the headship of vowels. It is the form of Pancha Brahma which is everywhere and activates the five actions of creation, upkeep, destruction, disappearance and blessing. It hides the Pancha Brahmas within itself and exists as itself and shines beyond the Pancha Brahmas by its light. It shines in the beginning, middle and end without any causative reason. All those devas who are all under stupor by the illusion of Maheswara would not understand properly that Mahadeva who is the teacher of the universe, is the cause of all causes. His shape does not appear before the eye. This world is shining because of that Parathpara Purusha in whom the world exists. It merges in him. That Ishana aspect is the Para Brahman which is the upper boundary of peace. The knowledge that the Para Brhaman is oneself and the rise of Sathyo Jatam (birth of truth) is Para Brahman. Whichever is seen or heard is the soul of Para Brahman. 6

The existence in five shapes is called Brahma Karya (activity). After understanding Brahma Karya, Ishana is appreciated. After putting the fact all that is originating from Para Brahman in ones soul, the wise man experiences and understands that "It is me" and becomes Brahman as well as deathless. There is no doubt that the one who understands this Brahman becomes freed (emancipated).

One should chant the Panchakshara Mantra which is from Na to Ya (Namasivaya) and which is of the shape of five letters and is Lord Shiva's body. After understanding the philosophy of the soul of Pancha Brahma, One should understand that every form is the form of those five. One who studies this knowledge of the soul of the Pancha Brahma would shine himself as Pancha Brahma. This Upanishad tells that Lord Shiva, who grants salvation to one, from this day- to-day life of the world, exists as witness without differentiation in the heart of all beings and is called Hrudayam (That which exists within).

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Pancha-Brahmopanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Pranagnihotra Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Now, therefore, we shall set forth ‘the hymn of food’ that is beyond all empirical knowledge, the essence of all Upanishads, dealing with the sacrifice in the body, by virtue of which the embodied man becomes free from transmigratory life without Agnihotra and the knowledge of Sankhya.
2. According to proper procedure, setting (the cooked) rice on the ground one intones the three verses beginning with ‘Ya osadhaya …’ and the two beginning with ‘annapate ..’.
3. The many plants of hundred shapes and forms that Soma rules asking, urged on by Brihaspati, ye deliver us from calamities.
4. The fruitful plants and fruitless, that have flowers and the flowerless, urged on by Brihaspati, ye deliver us from calamities.
5. Let me not bind for you the plants that live and endow (others with) life, that are free from malignancy; may they put to fight the evil spirits from one who offers them (sacrifice).
6. Lord of food ! Give us food that is clean and rich in energy; help the giver of food over (the hazards of life). Endow us, bipeds and quadrupeds, with might.
7. May the food (we eat) be fire; (though) it is adverse to the Rudras and the evil spirits and may it promote generations of off-spring. Let the mighty (Lord) purge it of all seeds of fear and make it auspicious. Hail to the mighty Lord.
8. Seeing all you move within the hidden (places). You are the sacrifice; You are Brahma, Rudra, Vishnu. You are the sacred syllable Vasat, light, taste, the immortal Brahman, the earth, the mid-region and the firmament. OM Salutation.

9. May the waters purify the earth; may the purified earth purify me. May (the waters) purify the master of the Veda; may the hallowed Vedic essence purify me. Whatever is left over as unfit to be consumed or whatever deed of mine be sinful – all these may the waters purify; also the gifts (accepted from) the unrighteous. Hail !
10. You are ambrosia; an ambrosial spread (base). You are ambrosia in regard to the vital breath; fit for the sacred offering, the last blessing. OM, salutation to Prana. OM, salutation to Apana. OM, salutation to Vyana. OM, salutation to Udana. OM, salutation to Samana. OM, salutation to Brahman. OM, may myself be in Brahman for the winning of immortality.
11. The offering to Prana is made with the little finger and the thumb. With the ring finger and the thumb is made the offering to Apana. With the middle finger and the thumb is made that to Vyana, with all fingers is the offering made to Udana and with the forefinger and the thumb is made the offering to Samana.
12. Silently one offering is made with one Ric; two in the Ahavaniya; one in the Dakshina fire; one in the Garhapatya and one in the fire for all expiatory rites.
13. Then, 'You are the lid for immortality' – for winning immortality. Sipping one must take again and touch again.
14. Taking water in the right palm and holding it over against the heart one should intone: Prana is fire; is the supreme Self surrounded by the five vital breaths. Fearlessness to all living beings ! Fear never dwells in me
15. You (Prana) are Vishva and Vaishvanara; by you is the multiform world sustained as it manifests itself. Where you are, the immortal Brahma, are all offerings (made).
16. This great and novel Spirit (is) established at the ends of the big toes. I pour water round him at the end (of the ceremonial eating) for winning immortality.
17. Let this external self meditate on specific activities – thus one makes offerings in the fire. Let (the performer) be a son to all. The ritual offerings are consecrated in the fire.
18. I shall perform sacrifice in my body. There are the four fires, no mean ones, corresponding to the four parts of OM with the half syllable.
19. There is no solar fire, shaped like the solar disc, sheathed in a thousand rays, abiding in the crown as the solar seer. The fire of vision mentioned (above) with its four forms, becoming the Ahavaniya is stationed in the mouth. The bodily fire consumes the oblations that destroy old age. Becoming Dakshinagni, shaped like a half moon, it is stationed in the heart. Then, there is the gastric fire that, becoming Garhapatya is stationed at the navel consuming what is eaten, drunk, licked and sucked.
20. Underneath are the three horizontal states of mind – the moon, Lord and the agent of generation.
21. In this bodily sacrifice, unadorned by the girdle round the sacrificial post, who is the sacrificer ? Who is (his) wife ? Who are the officiating priests ? Who are the attendants ? Which are the sacrificial vessels ? What are the oblations ? Which is the altar ? Which is the interior of the altar ? Which is the wooden container (for the soma juice) ? Which is the chariot ? Which is the sacrificial animal ? Who is the officiating priest ? Who is the invoking priest ? Who is the assistant of the Chief priest ? Who is the assistant of the Adhvaryu ? Who is the first chanter ? Who is the assistant of the Hotir ? Who sings the Sama songs aloud ? Which is the libation to (Agni) ? Who is the assistant of the Brahma priest ? What are the Darbha grass ? Which is the ladle ? Which is the container of the ghee ? Which are the two ghee offerings ? Which are the two parts of the ghee ? What are the preliminary offerings ? What are the final sacrifices ? Which is the Ida libation (in between the two) ? What is recitation ? What is the Samyorvaka formula ? Which are the four Ajya oblations ? Which is the sacrificial post ? Which is the cord ? Which are the Ishtis (oblations of butter, fruits, etc.,) ? What is the sacrificial fee ? What is the ritual bath after the sacrifice ?
22. In the bodily sacrifice, unadorned by the cord round the sacrificial post, the sacrificer is the self; (his) wife is the intellect. The great officiating priests are the Vedas. The ego is the Adhvaryu. The mind-stuff is the invoking priest. Prana is the assistant of the chief priest; Apana is the assistant of the Adhvaryu. Vyana is the first chanter. Udana is the loud Sama singer. Samana is the assistant of Hotir. The body is the altar. The nose is the interior of the altar. The crest is the wooden container. The foot is the chariot. The right hand is the ladle. The left hand is the container of the ghee. The ears are the two ghee offerings. The eyes are the two parts of the ghee. The neck is the libation. The Tanmatras are the assistant of the Brahma Priest. The great elements are the attendants. Gunas are the supplementary offerings. The tongue is the final sacrifices. Teeth and lips are the middle libation. The palate is the hymn-recitation. Memory is the Samyorvaka formula. Compassion, forbearance, non-violence are the four Ajya oblations (to Soma, etc.,). Om is the sacrificial post. Desire is the cord. Mind is the chariot. Lust is the sacrificial animal. The hair is the Darbha grass. The sense organs are the sacrificial vessels. The organs of action are the oblations. Non-violence is the Ishtis. Renunciation is the sacrificial fee. The post-sacrificial bath (follows) from death. In this body are stationed all the divinities.

23. (Either) one dies in Benares (or) the Brahmana who reads this (Upanishad) achieves liberation in one life: This is the secret doctrine.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Pranagnihotropanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Gopala-Tapaniya Upanishad

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Chapter One

1. Om namah. I offer my respectful obeisances to Sri Krishna, whose form is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, who is the rescuer from distress, who is understood by Vedanta, who is the supreme spiritual master, and who is the witness in everyone's heart.
2. Om. Some sages said to the demigod Brahma: "Who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead? Whom does death fear? By knowing whom does everything else become known? Who created this world.
3. Brahma replied to them: "Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. Death fears Govinda. By understanding Gopijanavallabha everything becomes known. By pronouncing the word "svaha" the Personality of Godhead created the world.
4. They then said: "Who is Krishna? Who is Govinda? Who is Gopijanavallabha? What is Svaha?"
5. To them Brahma said: "Krishna means He who delivers from sin, Govinda means He who is famous on the earth, in the Vedas, and among the surabhi cows, Gopijanavallabha means He who enchants the gopis, and Svaha means the potency of the Supreme. All these names refer to the Supreme Personality of Godhead.
6. One who meditates on this Supreme Personality of Godhead, glorifies Him, and worships Him, becomes liberated. He becomes liberated.
7. They said: What is His form? What is His glorification? How does one worship Him? Please describe this to us

8-9. Brahma said: He appears like a cowherd boy. His complexion is like a monsoon cloud. He stays under a desire-tree. The following verses describe Him.
10. Meditating with all his heart on Lord Krishna, whose eyes are handsome lotus flowers, whose complexion is a monsoon cloud, whose garments are lightning, who has two arms, who is rich in transcendental knowledge, who wears a garland of forest flowers, who is the supreme controller, who is surrounded by gopas, gopis, and surabhi cows, who rests under a sura-druma tree, who is decorated with splendid ornaments, who stands in the middle of a red lotus flower, and who is served by breezes that have touched the Yamuna's waves, a person becomes free from repeated birth and death.
11. This mantra should be repeatedly chanted: "klim krishnaya govindaya gopijanavallabhaya svaha".
12. By chanting these five names one attains the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose potencies are manifested as the heavenly planets, the earth, sun, moon, and fire.
13. A person who even once chants the mantra "Klim krsnaya govindaya gopijanavallabha svaha" quickly attains the association of Lord Krishna. He does not attain any other result.
14. Devotional service to Lord Krishna is performed when the heart no longer desires any material benefit to be obtained in this life or the next. This is freedom from the bonds of karma.
15. Many brahmanas worship Krishna. Many worship eternal Govinda. Gopijanavallabha maintains the worlds. Powerful Svaha moves the universe.
16. Although originally one, air becomes the five life-airs in the bodies of all living entities. In the same way, for the benefit of the world Lord Krishna appears as these five words.
17. They said: Please describe the worship of Govinda, the Supersoul, who maintains everything.
18. Brahma said: The Lord's altar should be a golden lotus with eight petals. Within that lotus should be placed two triangles and the mantra klim krsnaya namah, the Kama-gayatri (klim krsnaya govindaya gopijanavallabhaya svaha), and the ananga-gayatri (kamadevaya sarva-jana-priyaya sarva-jana-sammohanaya jvala jvala prajvala prajvala sarva-janasya hrdayam me vasam kuru kuru svaha) should be written there. then anga should be offered with the sula-matra (astraya phat). Then one should worship the Lord's expansions, beginning with Rukmini, the devotees headed by Indra, the devotees headed by King Vasudeva, the devotees headed by Arjuna, and the devotees headed by Indranidhi.
19. He who at sunrise, noon and sunset, makes various offerings to the Deity, obtains everything. He obtains everything.
20. In this matter there are the following verses: Lord Krishna is the worshipable, all-pervading supreme controller, and although He is one, He manifests in many forms. They who are intelligent worship Him as He stands on His altar. They, and not others, attain eternal happiness.
21. The brahmanas, who worship, as He stands on His altar, the one greatest among the eternals and greatest among conscious persons, the one who fulfils the desires of the many, they, and not others, attain perfection.
22. To they who always diligently worship Lord Visnu's transcendental form, the Lord, in His original form as a cowherd boy, shows His lotus feet.
23. It was Krishna who in the beginning instructed Brahma in Vedic knowledge and who disseminated Vedic knowledge in the past. They who desire liberation surrender to Him, the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who grants transcendental knowledge to His devotees.
24. To they who chant the five-word mantra with om and govinda (om krsnaya govindaya gopijanavallabha svaha) the Lord reveals His own form. Therefore, to attain transcendental peace, they who desire liberation should regularly chant this mantra.
25. From this five-word mantra have come all other govinda-mantras in human society, including the ten-syllable govinda-mantra chanted by Indra's followers and by they who desire opulences.
26. They asked: Please tell us the nature of this mantra.
27-28. Brahma said: I continually glorified the Lord and meditated upon Him for millions of years, and at last I was able to understand the transcendental form of the Lord as Sri Krishna, in the dress of a cowherd boy. With devotion in my heart I bowed down before Him. He gave me the eighteen-syllable mantra to be used for the activity of creation, and then He disappeared.

29. When I desired to create the universe He again appeared before me, showing me in these syllables the universe that was to be.
30. From the letter k, I created water, from the letter l, earth, from the letter i, fire, from the letter m, the moon, and from the entire word klim, the sun. From the word krsnaya, I created ether, from govindaya, air, from gopijanavallabha, knowledge and the surabhi cows, and from svaha, men, women, and everything else. Everything else.
31. By worshipping Him, Shiva became free from illusion, and by chanting this mantra in a solitary place, he attained the Lord.
32. The demigods gaze at Visnu's abode, which is like a splendid sun in the sky.
33. Therefore one should regularly chant this mantra. One should regularly chant this mantra.
34. Some have said that from the first word of this mantra earth was created, from the second word water, from the third fire, from the fourth air, and from the fifth ether. To attain liberation one should chant this five-word Vaishnava mantra, which reveals Lord Krishna.
35. About this are the following verses: One should chant this mantra, of which from the first word the element earth came, from the second word water, from the third fire, from the fourth air, and from the fifth ether.
36. By chanting this mantra Shiva entered Lord Visnu's eternal spiritual abode.
37. That spiritual world, completely pure, uncontaminated, free from suffering, free from greed and all other vices, and identical with this five-word mantra, is manifested from Lord Vasudeva. It is not separate from Him.
38. With eloquent prayers I and the Maruts please Lord Govinda, whose form is eternal and full of knowledge and bliss, who stays under a desire tree in Vrndavana, and who is this five-word mantra.
39. Om namah. To Lord Govinda, who is the form of the universe, the creator. maintainer, and destroyer of the universe, the master of the universe, and the universe itself. I offer my respectful obeisances.
40. Obeisances to Lord Govinda, whose form is full of knowledge, whose form is full of supreme bliss, who is all-attractive, and who is the master of the gopis.
41. Obeisances to Him, His eyes lotus flowers. Obeisances to Him, garlanded with lotuses. Obeisances to Him, His navel a lotus. Obeisances to Him, the husband of the goddesses of fortune.
42. Obeisances to Lord Govinda, handsome with a peacock-feather crown, identical with Balarama, His intelligence sharp, and He the swan in the Manasa lake of the goddess of fortune's thoughts.
43. Obeisances to Him, the death of Kamsa and his allies, the killer of Kesi and Canura, the object of worship for Siva, and the chariot-driver of Arjuna.
44. Obeisances to Him, the cowherd boy fond of playing the flute, the crusher of Kaliya, the person who walks on the Yamuna's shore and whose earrings gracefully swing to and fro.
45. Obeisances to Sri Krishna, the protector of the surrendered souls. Obeisances to Him, the expert dancer garlanded with the gopi's lotus glances.
46. Obeisances to Him, the death of sin, the lifter of Govardhana Hill, the end of Putana's life, the thief of Trnavarta's life.
47. Obeisances to Sri Krishna, decorated with a golden necklace, charming, pure, the enemy of impurity, one without a second, the greatest.
48. Be kind, O blissful one. Be kind, O Supreme Lord. O Lord, please rescue me, bitten by the snake of physical and mental pain.
49. O Krishna, O husband of Rukmini, O enchanter of the gopis, O master of the universe, please rescue me, drowning in the ocean of repeated birth and death.
50. O Kesava, O Narayana, O Govinda, O Janardana, O source of all transcendental bliss, O Lord who rescues the devotees from distress, O Madhava, please rescue me.

51. Brahma said: As I worship Him, so should you. Chanting this five-word mantra, and meditating on Lord Krishna, you will transcend the world of birth and death.
52. One who chants this five-word mantra easily attains His transcendental abode.
53. Although fixed in His abode, the Personality of Godhead is swifter than the mind and can overcome all others running. Even the powerful demigods cannot approach Him.
54. Therefore, Krishna is the Supreme Personality of Godhead. One should meditate upon Him, glorify Him, serve Him and worship Him. Om tat sat.

Chapter Two

1-2. Once, after they had passed the entire night with Him, the passionate girls of Vraja spoke to the cowherd boy Krishna, who is the Supreme Personality of Godhead, and He also spoke to them.
3. The gopis said: To what brahmana should charity be given?
4. Krishna said: Durvasa.
5. The gopis said: How will we cross the Yamuna's waters and approach Him, from whom great blessings will come?
6. Krishna said: Say the words Krishna, the brahmacari, and the Yamuna will give you a path.
7. By remembering Me a shallow person becomes deep. By remembering Me an impure person becomes pure. By remembering Me an impious person becomes pious. By remembering Me one full of material desires becomes desireless. By remembering Me a fool becomes learned.
8. After hearing these words, they meditated on Durvasa, and with these words crossed the Yamuna. They went to the very sacred asrama and bowed down before Durvasa Muni, the best of sages. They gave to the brahmana delicious foods made with milk and ghee.
9. Pleased, he bathed, ate, blessed them, and gave them permission to go.
10. They said: How will we cross the Yamuna?
11. He said: Meditate on me as a sage that eats only durva grass, and the Yamuna will give you a path.
12. Gandharvi (Srimati Radharani), the best among them, reflected for a moment.
13. She said: How is Krishna a brahmacari? How is this sage a person that eats only durva grass?
14. Accepting Her as their leader, the other girls became silent.
15. Durvasa Muni replied: Sound is contained within the element of ether, although sound and ether are different. Sound is contained within ether. This ether does not know. I am spirit. How can I be a materialistic enjoyer.
16. Touch is contained within the element of air, although touch and air are different. Touch is contained within air. This air does not know. I am spirit. How can I be a materialistic enjoyer?
17. Form is contained within the element of fire, although form and fire are different. Form is contained within fire. This fire does not know. I am spirit. How can I be a materialistic enjoyer?
18. Taste is contained within the element of water, although taste and waste are different. Taste is contained within water. This water does not know. I am spirit. How can I be a materialistic enjoyer?
19. Aroma is contained within the element of earth, although aroma and earth are different. Aroma is contained within earth. This earth does not know. I am spirit. How can I be a materialistic enjoyer?
20. It is the mind that remains among the senses and accepts them.
21. When spirit is everything how does one think? Where does one go? I am spirit, how can I be a materialistic enjoyer?
22. Your beloved Krishna is the original creator of the two kinds of bodies.
23. On the tree of the body are two birds. One is an expansion of the Supreme Personality of Godhead. He is a witness. The other is an enjoyer. They are an enjoyer and a non-enjoyer. The first enjoys, and the second is Krishna.
24. In Him we do not find material so-called knowledge and ignorance. This ignorance and real knowledge are different. How can Krishna, who is full of real knowledge, become a materialistic enjoyer?
25-26. He who lusts after pleasure is lusty. He who does not lust after pleasures is not lusty.

27. Krishna, who is free from birth and death, who is unchanging, who cannot be cut, who stays by the Yamuna, who stays among the surabhi cows, who protects the surabhi cows, who stays among the cowherd boys, who stays in all the Vedas, who is glorified by all the Vedas, who has entered all living entities, and who controls all living entities, is your husband.
28. Gandharvi (Radha) said: Why has the Supreme Personality of Godhead taken birth among us as a cowherd boy? O sage, how do you know this about Krishna? What is His mantra? What is His abode? Why has He taken birth in Devaki's womb? Who is His elder brother Balarama? How is He worshipped? Why has the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is far above the world of matter, descended to this Earth?
29. He said: In the beginning only Lord Narayana existed. In Him the material worlds are woven as thread on a loom. From His lotus heart the demigod Brahma was born.
30. When Brahma performed severe austerities, Lord Narayana granted him a boon.
31. Brahma chose a question.
32. Lord Narayana granted his request.
33-34. Brahma said: Among Your many incarnations, which is the best, the one that makes humans and demigods happy, the one that, remembering Him, they become liberated from repeated birth and death? Why is this incarnation the best?
35. Lord Narayana said:
36. As on the summit of Mount Meru are seven cities that fulfil all desires, so on the Earth are seven cities that fulfil desires and grant liberation. Among them the city of Gopala Puri is directly the spiritual world.
37. In this city the desires of the demigods and all other creatures are all fulfilled and everyone attains liberation.
38. Protected by My cakra, this city if Mathura, or Gopala Puri, stands in this world as a lotus stands in a lake.
39. Gopala Puri contains these forests: 1. the great forest of Brhadvana, 2. Madhuvana, the former residence of the Madhu demon, 3. Talavana, full of palm trees, 4. delightful Kamyavana, 5. great Bahulavana, 6. Kumudavana, full of lotus flowers and water lilies, 7. Khadiravana, full of Khadira trees, 8. Bhadravana, the favourite spot of Lord Balarama, 9. Bhandiravana, the great forest of Banyan trees, 10. Srivana, the abode of the goddess of fortune, 11. Lohavana, the former residence of the demon Loha, and 12. Vrndavana, ruled by the goddess Vrnda-devi.
40. In these forests the demigods, human beings, Gandharvas, Nagas, and Kinnaras sing and dance.
41. The twelve Adityas, eleven Rudras, eight Vasus, seven sages, Brahma, Narada, five Vinayakas, Viresvara, Rudresvara, Ambikesvara, Ganesvara, Nilakanthesvara, Visvesvara, Gopalesvara, Bhadresvara, and 24 other lingas reside there.
42. These forests are divided into two groups: 1. Krishnavana, or Krishna's forests, and 2.Bhadravana, or Balarama's forests. Among these twelve forests some are sacred and others are most sacred.
43. There the demigods stay. There the perfect beings attained perfection.
44. In this place are a Deity of Rama, a Deity of Pradyumna, a Deity of Aniruddha, and a Deity of Krishna.
45. In this way there are twelve Deities in the forests of Mathura.
46. The Rudras worship the first Deity, Brahma worships the second, Brahma's sons worship the third, The Maruts worship the fourth, the Vinayakas worship the fifth, the Vasus worship the sixth, the sages worship the seventh, the Gandharvas worship the eighth, the Apsaras worship the ninth, the tenth Deity is now invisible, the eleventh Deity has gone to His own planet, and the twelfth Deity is now on the Earth.
47. They who worship this Deity surpass death and attain liberation. They cross beyond the three-fold miseries of birth, old-age and death.
48. There are these verses: Lord Krishna, accompanied by His three potencies, and by Balarama, Aniruddha, Pradyumna, and Rukmini, stays in delightful Mathura Puri, which is worshipped by Brahma and the other demigods and protected by the conch, cakra, club, and sarnga bow. These four names are identical with the name Om.

49. One should think: I am spiritual, beyond material passion. One should think: I am Lord Gopaka's. In this way one attains liberation. He realizes his spiritual nature. He becomes a knower of spirit.
50. Because since the beginning of creation He lovingly protects (alati) the conditioned souls (gopa), He is known as Gopala. Om tat sat. I am a spirit. I am a part-and-parcel of Krishna. My spiritual form is eternally full of bliss. Om.
51. The Supreme Personality of Godhead is therefore known as Gopala.
52. With all one's heart one should think: I am Gopala's.
53. Lord Gopala is unmanifest, limitless, and eternal.
54. Lord Narayana continued: O Brahma, decorated with a forest-flower garland, and holding a conch, disk, mace and lotus, I will reside eternally in Mathura.
55. O Brahma, he who with all his heart meditates on Me, whose form is the resting place of all forms, whose form is supremely powerful and splendid, whose form is wonderful, and who has no material form, goes to MY abode. Of this there is no doubt.
56. O Brahma, a resident of this earth planet who remains in the district of Mathura and worships Me as I appear in the form of the Deity, becomes very dear to Me.
57. You should always worship Me as Krishna in Mathura.
58. Four kinds of men worship Me.
59. Following the devotional process prescribed for the age, intelligent devotees in this world worship Lord Gopala, who is accompanied by His elder brother Balarama and queen Rukmini.
60. I am unborn, eternal Gopala. I am eternal Pradyumna. I am Rama. I am Aniruddha. He who is intelligent worships Me.
61. Free from all impure desires, the residents of Krishnavana and Bhadravana worship Me, following the regulations of bhakti I Myself have spoken.
62. Even they who formerly rejected the principles of religion and were swallowed up by the age of Kali, may become devoted to Me, and also reside in Mathura.
63. Anyone who becomes My sincere devotee becomes very dear to Me. As dear as You and Your sons are, as dear as Shiva and hid associates, as dear as the goddess of fortune, Laksmi.
64. Brahma said: How has the one Supreme Personality of Godhead become four Deities? How has the single sacred syllable om become many?
65. The Lord said to him: Before the material world was manifest, only the Supreme Personality of Godhead, who is one without a second, existed. From Him came the impersonal Brahman. From that came the syllable om. From om came the mahat-tattva. From the mahat-tattva came false-ego. From false-ego came the five tanmatras. From them came the elements. Om is covered by these things.
66. I am the sacred syllable. I am om. I am ageless, deathless, nectarean, the fearless Supreme Great. I am liberated. I am unchanging.
67. The eternal Supreme Personality of Godhead manifested Himself as the all-pervading universal form. In the same way the Lord, who is one without a second, by His transcendental potency expanded Himself into four.
68. The sacred syllable om consists of three letters: a, u and m. Balarama, the son of Rohini, is the letter a. Splendid Pradyumna is the letter u.
69. Intelligent Aniruddha is letter m. Lord Krishna, in whom the entire universe rests, is the ardha-matra letter (m), which completes the syllable om.
70. Rukmini is Lord Krishna's wife. She is the creator of the worlds and the root of material nature.
71. The Vedic literatures explain that the goddess of fortune appeared among the women of Vraja. Learned transcendentalists say that the Lord's potency is the syllable om.
72. Therefore, all-pervading Lord Gopala is the syllable om.

73. Learned transcendentalists declare that the syllable om is not different from the sacred syllable klim.
74. He whom meditates on Me as I appear in Mathura attains liberation.
75-78. In his mind one should meditate on Me standing on the blossomed eight-petaled lotus of the heart, My two feet marked with conchshell, flag and umbrella, MY chest marked with srivatsa and splendid with the kautabha gem, My four arms holding the conch, cakra, mace, and sarnga bow, My arms decorated with armlets. MY neck splendid with a flower garland, My head circled by a splendid crown, My ears decorated with glistening shark-shaped earrings, MY form splendid and handsome, holding a flute and buffalo-horn bugle, and granting fearlessness to the devotees.
79. When the entire universe is churned (mathyate) by the churning-rod of spiritual knowledge, the butter produced is the Supreme Personality of Godhead in Mathura. That is why it is called Mathura.
80. In my heart I meditate on the material world with its eight dik-palas (protectors of the directions) as a blossomed lotus flower growing in the ocean of repeated birth and death.
81. The sun and moon are the splendour of My body. Golden Mount Meru is My splendid flag. Brahmaloka as My umbrella. The seven lower planetary systems are My feet.
82. I am marked with srivatsa and svarupa. Therefore the learned sages call me Srivatsa-lanchana (marked with srivatsa).
83. Aware of My supremacy, the sages declare that the splendour of the sun, moon, fire, and eloquent speech has come from My glittering Kaustubha jewel.
84. The four arms of My universal form are goodness, passion, ignorance, and false-ego. The five material elements are the conchshell I carry in the hand that is the mode of passion.
85. Childishness is said to be the cakra, the original illusory potency the Sarnga bow, and the universe the lotus flower in the hand of the universal form.
86. The origin of ignorance is known as the club I always carry in My hand.
87. Religion, economic development, and sense-gratification are the splendid bracelets that eternally decorate the wrists of My universal form.
88. The neck, said to be the qualityless Brahman, is garlanded by the first unborn. O Brahma, your mind-born sons have elaborately described this garland.
89. The sages say that My eternal form is the crown.
90. The two things above the changing material world are My two glittering earrings.
91.He who meditates in this way is eternally dear to me. He attains liberation. He becomes liberated. I give Myself to him.
92. O Brahma, I have said all that will be about My two forms: one made of the modes of nature, and the other beyond the modes of nature.
93. Brahma said: What are the ornaments worn by the Deities You have described? How do the Maruts, Rudras, Brahma, sons of Brahma, Vinayakas, twelve Adityas, Vasus, Apsaras, and Gandharvas worship them? Who is the Deity that has gone to His own abode? Who is the Deity now invisible? Who is the Deity the humans worship?
94. Lord Narayana said to him: these twelve unmanifested transcendental Deities are present on all planets, among all demigods and all human beings.
95. As a Rudra among the Rudras, as a Brahma among the followers of Brahma, as a demigod among the demigods, as a human being among the humans, as the destroyer of obstacles (Ganesa) among the Vinayakas, as Surya Narayana among the Adityas, as a Gandharva among the Gandharvas, as an Apsara among the Apsaras, and as a Vasu among the Vasus, My form, which fulfils desires, is present even when it is invisible. Whether visible or invisible in this world, My form is always stays in My own abode.
96. My form is also present as the Deity of ignorance, the Deity of passion, and the Deity of Goodness.
97. My humanlike form, which is eternal and full of transcendental knowledge, is present in devotional service.

98. Om. Obeisances to the Supersoul, who is present in the life-breath. Om tat sat. Bhu Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him, the Supersoul, who is present in the life-breath.
99. Obeisances to Sri Krishna, who is Govinda and Gopijanavallabha, Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
100. Om. Obeisances to the Supersoul, who is present in the apana air. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him, present in the apana air.
101. Om. Obeisances to Krishna, who is Vasudeva, Sankarsana, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
102. Om. Obeisances to the Supersoul, who is present in the sama air. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him, present in the same air.
103. Om. Obeisances to Sri Krishna, who is Sri Rama. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
104. Om. Obeisances to the Supersoul, who is present in the udana air. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him, present in the udana air.
105. Om. Obeisances to Krishna, the son of Devaki. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him
106. Om. Obeisances to the Supersoul, who is present in the vyana air. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him, present in the vyana air.
107. Om. Obeisances to the Supreme Personality of Godhead, whose original form is that of a cowherd boy. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
108. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supersoul, present in the primordial material energy. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
109. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supersoul, present in the senses. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
110. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supersoul, present in the material elements. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
111. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supreme Person. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
112. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supreme Brahman. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
113. Om. Lord Gopala is the Supersoul in the heart of all beings. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
114. Om. Surpassing wakefulness, sleep, and deep sleep, Lord Gopala is beyond the transcendence of the impersonalists. Om tat sat. Bhur Bhuvah and Svah. Obeisances, obeisances to Him.
115. The one Supreme Personality of Godhead is hidden within everything. He is all-pervading. He is in everyone's heart. He witnesses everyone's activities. He lives in everyone's heart. He is the witness. He is consciousness. His is transcendence. He is beyond the modes of nature.
116. Obeisances to Rudra. Obeisances to Aditya. Obeisances to Vinayaka. Obeisances to Surya. Obeisances to Vidya-devi. Obeisances to Indra. Obeisances to Agni. Obeisances to Yama. Obeisances to Nirrti. Obeisances to Varuna. Obeisances to Vayu. Obeisances to Kuvera. Obeisances to Isana. Obeisances to Brahma. Obeisances to all the demigods.
117. After giving these most pious prayers to Brahma, who was rapt in meditation on the Lord's transcendental form, and after giving him the ability to create the universe, Lord Narayana disappeared.

118. As these instructions were heard from Brahma, Brahma's sons, and Narada, so I have spoken them. O Gandharvi (Radha), now You may go to Your own home.
Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,

Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

When the sages living in the forest visited Sri Ramachandra who was the incarnation of the ever joyful God and who was extremely pretty, they became surprised and forgetting themselves said, “We want to embrace you, Oh Lord.” The God told them, “When I reincarnate as Lord Krishna, you will be born as Gopis and then you can embrace me.”[Their wish was fulfilled in Krishnavatara.] 1

During the time of incarnation of the Lord as Krishna, Gokula became the forest heaven. Those who had done penance earlier became trees in that forest. Characters like miserliness and anger became Asuras. The Kali period which was coming was postponed till the reincarnation period was over. That Hari who was very pretty reincarnated himself as a Gopa Boy. His playful nature (play with the world) was an unknowable secret. Because of that the world was enchanted. Upanishads and portions of Vedas came in the form of 16108 maidens. The "mercy" was born as mother Rohini and the “earth mother” was born as Sathya Bhama. “Humility” was born as Krishna’s friend Sudhama. “Control of senses” was born as Sage Udhawa and “Truth” was born as Sage Akroora. The broken curd pots became to Krishna the ocean of milk so that he can play with it. This reincarnation was meant to destroy his enemies and to protect good people. The sword in the hand of Krishna was the God of destruction, the Maheswara himself. Sage Kasyapa was born as the mortar in Yasodha's house and The God mother Adithi became the rope which tied Krishna to the mortar. Kali who destroys all enemies was the mace. The bow called Saranga was the illusion of the God. The harvest season of Sarad became the meals in his house. The lotus he held playfully was the seed for the world. Though the world was not different from all these, it appeared as if it was different. Similarly God himself did not have any differences. And the Vaikunta of those people who live in heaven was brought down to the world. The people who have understood this truly would get the result of their good deeds. They would get themselves released from the ties of the body and attain salvation.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Yajnavalkya Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. Now King Janaka of the Videhas respectfully approached the sage Yajnavalkya and said: ‘Revered Sir, expound to me renunciation’. Yajnavalkya said: Having completed the stage of a celibate student one may become a house-holder. From the stage of the house-holder he may become a forest-dweller (Vanaprastha) and then renounce. Or else he may become a mendicant monk from the stage of a celibate student or a house-holder or a forest-dweller. (There is also the provision that) a person may renounce worldly life that very day on which distaste for it dawns on him, whether he is not observing vows (before the stage of renunciation) or observes them, whether he has undergone the prescribed ablution on completing the disciplined studentship or not, whether he is one who has discontinued maintaining ritual fire at the death of his wife (Utsannagni) or one who does not maintain the ritual fire (anagnika).
2. Some (law givers) prescribe the sacrifice called Prajapatya (of which god Brahma is the presiding deity, prior to a twice-born embracing renunciation). But (though thus prescribed) he may not do so. He shall only perform the sacrifice Agneyi (whose presiding deity is Agni, the god of fire). For Agni is the vital breath (Prana). Thereby he helps (strengthens) the vital breath. (Then) he shall perform the Traidhataviya sacrifice (whose presiding deity is the god Indra). By this sacrifice the three vital fluids (become strong like fire), namely the Sattva (semen), Rajas (blood) and Tamas (the dark one). (Having performed the sacrifice in the prescribed manner he shall smell the holy fire, reciting the following mantra): ‘Oh Fire, this (vital breath) is your source; as you are born at the proper time (of the year) you put on effulgence. Knowing him (the Atman, your ultimate source) may you merge (with the Prana, your source). May you increase our wealth (of transcendent knowledge)'. So reciting the mantra he shall smell the fire. This is the source of fire, this vital air. '(May you) go unto fire (your source). Svaha'. Thus alone the mantra says.

3. Having procured the holy fire (from the house of a well-versed Vedic scholar) in the village he shall be directed to smell the fire as described previously. If he does not get the ritual fire he may offer oblations in the waters. For water is (presided over by) all the gods. Reciting 'I offer the oblation to all the gods, Svaha', he should tender the oblations and picking up (a small portion of) the offered oblation which is mixed with ghee, he shall eat it, as this is beneficial. (Before eating the offered oblation he shall recite) the mantra of liberation (namely Om) which he shall realize as (the essence of) the three Vedas. He shall adore Brahman (Existence, Knowledge and Bliss) as that (connoted by Om). Cutting off the tuft of hair and sacred thread he shall recite thrice 'I have renounced'. (The royal sage Janaka accepted this elucidation by saying) 'Indeed, so it is, revered Yajnavalkya'.

4. (Then prompted by King Janaka) the sage Atri asked Yajnavalkya: How is one without the sacred thread (by wearing which alone he can perform rituals) a Brahmana ? Yajnavalkya replied: This alone is his sacred thread (the conviction), 'That (Self-effulgent) Atman (I am)'. He shall then ceremoniously sip water (thrice with the mantra, 'Reach the sea, Svaha', having previously discarded his tuft and sacred thread). This is the method (to be adopted by those who renounce the world).

5. Then (in the case of those entitled to renunciation) the mendicant monk wearing (ochre) coloured garment, with shaven head, accepting nothing (except food for bare sustenance), pure, injuring none (in thought, word and deed), (austerely) living on alms, becomes fit for realizing Brahman. This is the path of the mendicant monks. (In the case of the Kshatriyas and others not entitled to renunciation, they may seek liberation) by the path of the brave (by courting death in the battle-field), or fast (unto death as a discipline), or enter into water (to rise no more), or enter fire or undertake the great journey (in which they collapse by exhaustion). (For those entitled to renunciation) this way has been prescribed by the god Brahma; the ascetic who has renounced the world (Sannyasin) following this path realizes Brahman. Thus (it is stated in the Vedanta). 'Thus indeed it is, revered Sir, Yajnavalkya', (appreciated the royal sage Janaka).

6. There are the well known sages called Paramahamsas (as in the days of yore, the sages) Samvartaka, Aruni, Svetaketu, Durvasas, Ribhu, Nidagha, Dattatreya, Suka, Vamadeva, Harita and others, wearing no distinguishing marks, with conduct beyond the ken (of worldly people) and who behaved as though bereft of their senses though (perfectly) sane.

7. Averse to others' wives and (desire to stay in) towns and discarding all these, namely, the threefold staff (bamboo), the water vessel, (the earthen plate) used for a meal, the ceremonial purification with water, the tuft and the sacred thread, internally as well as externally, in the waters reciting 'Bhuh, Svaha', (the Paramahamsa) shall seek the Atman.

8. Possessing a form as one new-born (i.e. unclad) unaffected by pairs (of opposites, such as heat and cold, pleasure and pain); accepting nothing (except alms, for bare sustenance); well established in the path of the truth of Brahman; of pure mind; receiving alms into the mouth (lit. into the vessel of the belly) at the prescribed time in order to sustain life, becoming equanimous at gain and loss (of alms), drinking water from the vessel of hand or from a water vessel, begging alms but to store in the belly; devoid of any other vessel; the watering place serving as water vessel; sheltering, equanimous at gain and loss of it, in an abode which is free from disturbance and is solitary (such as) an unoccupied house, a temple, a clump of (tall) grass (or hay stack), an ant-hill, the shade of a tree a potter's hut, a hut where ritual fire is kept, the sandy bank of a river, a mountain thicket, a cave, a hollow in a tree, the vicinity of a water fall or a piece of clean ground, without residing in a fixed abode; making no efforts (for gainful activity) and deeply intent on the uprooting of good and bad actions – such a sage who finally gives up his body in the state of renunciation is indeed a Paramahamsa. Thus (it has been declared).

9. The mendicant monk who is unclad (lit. clothed by the points of the compass), salutes none, has no desire for wife or son and is above aim and non-aim becomes the supreme God. Here there are the verses:

10. To one who has become an ascetic earlier and who is equal to him in characteristics, obeisance ought to be paid (by an ascetic) and never to any one else.
11. Even ascetics are seen who are careless, whose minds are in outward phenomenal things, are talebearers, eager to quarrel and whose views are condemned by the Veda.
12. If an ascetic remains in identity with the highest self-effulgent Brahman which is beyond name, etc., then to whom shall he, the knower of the Atman, pay obeisance ? Then the activity (of bowing) ought not to be done.
13. (If an ascetic is convinced that) the supreme God has entered into beings as the individual Self, then he may fully prostrate on the ground before dog, outcaste, cow or donkey.
14. What possibly is charming in a woman who is a doll made of flesh, in a cage of limbs which is moved by machinery and who is a conglomerate of tendons bones and joints ?
15. Are the eyes (of a woman) charming when we look at them after dissection into skin, flesh, blood and tears ? Why then do you get infatuated in vain ?
16. Similarly, Oh sage, is seen of the pearl necklace which shines bright (adoring women) in the onrush of the Ganga water down the shining slopes of the Meru mountain.
17. In cemeteries (situated) in remote places the same breast of a woman is eaten in due course by dogs as if it were a small morsel of food.
18. Having (attractive) tresses and putting on collyrium, women, difficult to touch but pleasing to the eyes are (verily) the flames of the fire of sin and they burn men as though they were straw.
19. Women pleasing and cruel, are the fuel for the hell-fires, that inflame even at a distance and though juicy (loveable) are devoid of moisture (flavour).
20. Silly women are the nets spread by the hunter called Cupid to entangle the bodies of men in the form of birds.
21. Woman is the bait stuck in the fish-hook at the string of evil propensity to catch men in the form of fish that are in the pond of worldly life and that are active in the mud of the mind.
22. Enough of women to me, forever, who are the strong caskets (to preserve) all gems of evil and are the chains of misery.
23. He who has a woman with him has desire for enjoyment; where is the scope for enjoyment to one who is without woman ? Discarding woman is discarding worldly life; one shall be happy after abandoning worldly life.
24. A son unborn worries the (would be) parents for long; when obtained (in the womb) he gives trouble due to miscarriage or the pangs of child-birth.
25. When the boy is born there is the worry of evil planes, illness, etc., and then his propensity to evil ways. When invested with the sacred thread he does not become learned and if he becomes wise he refuses marriage.
26. In youth he takes to adultery, etc., and has (the curse of) poverty when he has a family. There is no end of worry due to a son and if he is rich he (suddenly) may die.
27. The (good) ascetic has no fickleness of hands and feet; he is not unsteady in his eyes and he is not loose with his speech; conquering his senses he becomes one with Brahman.
28. When a person of discrimination sees equality and oneness between an enemy, a prisoner and his own body, where is (the scope for) anger, as towards the limbs of one’s own body ?
29. If you have any anger against a wrong doer, how is it you do not have anger against anger, as it forcibly blocks (the path to) duty, wealth, love and liberation ?
30. My salutation to the anger against anger, which well sets ablaze its substratum and which gives one dispassion and awakens one to one’s faults.
31. Where the people are always asleep the man of self-control is wide awake; where they are vigilant, Oh wise one, the prince among the Yogins, is in deep sleep. Be convinced that there is consciousness here, that (all) this is consciousness alone and is pervaded by consciousness, that you are consciousness and I am consciousness, and all these worlds are of consciousness.

32. Ascetics should accept this, the highest position of being a Paramahamsa. Oh best of sages, there is nothing higher than this. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Yajnavalkyopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

Varaha Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

CHAPTER - I

The great sage Ribhu performed penance for twelve Deva (divine) years. At the end of the time, the Lord appeared before him in the form of a boar. He said: “Rise, rise and choose your boon”. The sage got up and having prostrated himself before him said: “O Lord, I will not, in my dream, wish of thee those things that are desired by the worldly. All the Vedas, Shastras, Itihasas and all the hosts of other sciences, as well as Brahma and all the other Devas, speak of emancipation as resulting from a knowledge of thy nature. So impart to me that science of Brahman which treats of thy nature.”

Then the boar-shaped Bhagavan (Lord) said:

1. Some disputants hold that there are twenty-four Tattvas (principles) and some thirty-six, whilst others maintain that there are ninety-six.

2. I shall relate them in their order. Listen with an attentive mind. The organs of sense are five, viz., ear, skin, eye and others.

3. The organs of action are five, viz., mouth, hand, leg and others. Pranas (vital airs) are five; sound and other (viz., rudimentary principles) are five.

4. Manas, Buddhi, Chitta and Ahankara are four; thus those that know Brahman know these to be the twenty-four Tattvas.

5. Besides these, the wise hold the quintuplicated elements to be five, viz., earth, water, fire, Vayu and Akasa;

6. The bodies to be three, viz., the gross, the subtle and the Karana or causal; the states of consciousness to be three, viz., the waking, the dreaming and the dreamless sleeping.

7-8. The Munis know the total collection of Tattvas to be thirty-six (coupled with Jiva). With these Tattvas, there are six changes, viz., existence, birth, growth, transformation, decay and destruction.

9. Hunger, thirst, grief, delusion, old age and death are said to be the six infirmities.
10. Skin, blood, flesh, fat, marrow and bones are said to be the six sheaths. Passion, anger, avarice, delusion, pride and malice are the six kinds of foes.
11. Vishva, Taijasa and Prajna are the three aspects of the Jiva. Sattva, Rajas and Tamas are the three Gunas (qualities).
12. Prarabdha, Sanchita and Agamin are the three Karmas. Talking, lifting, walking, excreting and enjoying are the five actions (of the organs of action);
13. And there are also thought, certainty, egoism, compassion, memory (functions of Manas, etc.,), complacency, sympathy and indifference;
14. Dik (the quarters), Vayu, Sun, Varuna, Ashvini Devas, Agni, Indra, Upendra and Mrityu (death); and then the moon, the four-faced Brahma, Rudra, Kshetrajna and Ishvara.
15-16. Thus these are the ninety-six Tattvas. Those that worship, with devotion, me of the form of boar, who am other than the aggregate of these Tattvas and am without decay are released from Ajnana and its effects and become Jivanmuktas.
17. Those that know these ninety-six Tattvas will attain salvation in whatever order of life they may be, whether they have matted hair or are of shaven head or have (only) their tuft of hair on. There is no doubt of this."
Thus ends the first Chapter of Varaha Upanishad.

CHAPTER - II

1. The great Ribhu (again) addressed the Lord of Lakshmi of the form of boar thus: "O Lord, please initiate me into the supreme Brahma-Vidya (or science)."
2-3. Then the Lord who removes the miseries of his devotees being thus questioned, answered thus: "Through (the right observance of) the duties of one's own caste and orders of life, through religious austerities and through the pleasing of the Guru (by serving him rightly), arise to persons the four, Vairagya, etc. They are the discrimination of the eternal from the non-eternal; indifference to the enjoyments of this and the other worlds;
4-5(a). The acquisition of the six virtues, Sama, etc., and the longing after liberation. These should be practised. Having subdued the sensual organs and having given up the conception of 'mine' in all objects, you should place your consciousness of 'I' in (or identify yourself with) me, who am the witness Chaitanya (consciousness).
5(b)-7(a). To be born as a human being is difficult – more difficult it is to be born as a male being – and more so is it to be born as a Brahmana. Even then, if the fool does not cognise through the hearing, etc., of Vedanta, the true nature of the Sachchidananda (of Brahman) that is all-pervading and that is beyond all caste and orders of life, when will he obtain Moksha?
7(b)-8. I alone am happiness. There is none other. If there is said to be another, then it is not happiness. There is no such things as love, except on my account. The love that is on account of me is not natural to me. As I am the seat of supreme love, that 'I am not' is not.
9. He who is sought after by all, saying "I should become such", is myself, the all-pervading. How can non-light affect Atman, the self-shining which is no other than the light whence originates the words 'I am not light'.
10-12(a). My firm conviction is whoever knows for certain that (Atman) which is self-shining and has itself no basis (to rest upon), is one of Vijnana. The universe, Jiva, Ishvara, Maya and others do not really exist, except my full Atman.
12(b)-13(a). I have not their characteristics, Karma which has Dharana and other attributes and is of the form of darkness and Ajnana is not fit to touch (or affect) me, who am Atman, the self-resplendent.
13(b)-14(a). That man who sees (his) Atman which is all-witness and is beyond all caste and orders of life as of the nature of Brahman, becomes himself Brahman.
14(b)-15(a). Whoever sees, through the evidence of Vedanta, this visible universe as the Supreme Seat which is of the form of light, attains Moksha at once.

15(b)-16(a). When that knowledge which dispels the idea that this body (alone) is Atman, arises firmly in one's mind as was before the knowledge that this body (alone) is Atman, then that person, even though he does not desire Moksha, gets it.
16(b)-17(a). Therefore how will a person be bound by Karma, who always enjoys the bliss of Brahman which has the characteristics of Sachchidananda and which is other than Ajnana ?
17(b)-18. Persons with spiritual eyes see Brahman, that is the witness of the three states that has the characteristics of be-ness, wisdom and bliss, that is the underlying meaning of the words 'Thou' (Tvam) and 'I' (Aham) and that is untouched by all the stains.
19. As a blind man does not see the sun that is shining, so an ignorant person does not see (Brahman). Prajnana alone is Brahman. It has truth and Prajnana as its characteristics.
20. By thus cognising Brahman well, a person becomes immortal. One who knows his own Atman as Brahman, that is bliss and without duality and Gunas (qualities) and that is truth and absolute consciousness is not afraid of anything.
21. That which is consciousness alone which is all-pervading, which is eternal, which is all-full, which is of the form of bliss and which is indestructible, is the only true Brahman.
22-23(a). It is the settled determination of Brahma-Jnanis that there is naught else but that. As the world appears dark to the blind and bright to those having good eyes, so this world full of manifold miseries to the ignorant is full of happiness to the wise.
23(b)-24(a). In me, of the form of boar, who am infinite and the Bliss of absolute Consciousness, if there is the conception of non-dualism, where then is bondage ? And who is the one to be emancipated ?
24(b)-25(a). The real nature of all embodied objects is ever the absolute Consciousness. Like the pot seen by the eyes, the body and its aggregates are not (viz., do not really exist).
25(b)-26. Knowing, as Atman, all the locomotive and fixed worlds that appear as other than Atman, meditate upon them as 'It I am'. Such a person then enjoys his real nature. There is no other to be enjoyed than one-Self.
27. If there is anything that is, then Brahman alone has that attribute. One who is perfect in Brahma-Jnana, though he always sees this established universe, does not see it other than his Atman.
28-30. By cognising clearly my form, one is not trammelled by Karma. He is an undaunted person who by his own experience cognises as his own real nature all (the universe and Brahman) that is without the body and the organs of sense – that is the all-witness – that is the one noumenal Vijnana, that is the blissful Atman (as contrasted with Jivatma or the lower self) and that is the self-resplendent. He is one that should be known as 'I' (myself). O Ribhu, may you become He.
31. After this, there will be never any experience of the world. Thereafter there will always be the experience of the wisdom of one's own true nature. One who has this known fully Atman has neither emancipation nor bondage.
32. Whoever meditates, even for one Muhurta (48 minutes) through the cognition of one's own real form, upon Him who is dancing as the all-witness, is released from all bondage.
33. Prostrations – prostrations to me who am in all the elements, who am the Chidatma (viz., Atman of the nature of wisdom) that is eternal and free and who am the Pratyagatman.
34-35. O Devata, you are I. I am you. Prostrations on account of myself and yourself who are infinite and who are Chidatma, myself being the supreme Isha (Lord) and yourself being Shiva (of a beneficent nature). What should I do ? Where should I go ? What should I reject ?
36. (Nothing, because) the universe is filled by me as with the waters on the universal deluge. Whoever gives up (fondness) love of the external, love of the internal and love of the body and thus gives up all associations, is merged in me. There is no doubt about it.
37. That Paramahamsa (ascetic) who, though living in the world, keeps aloof from human congregation as from serpent, who regards a beautiful woman as a (living) corpse and the endless sensual objects as poison and who has abandoned all passion and is indifferent towards all objects is no other than Vasudeva, (viz.,) myself.

38. This is Satya (Truth). This is nothing but truth. It is truth alone that is now said. I am Brahman, the truth. There is naught else but I.

39. (The word) ‘Upavasa’ (lit., dwelling near) signifies the dwelling near (or union) of Jivatma and Paramatman and not (the religious observance as accepted by the worldly of) emaciating the body through fasts.

40. To the ignorant, what is the use of the mere drying up of the body ? By beating about the hole of a snake, can we be said to have killed the big snake within.

41. A man is said to attain Paroksha (indirect) wisdom when he knows (theoretically) that there is Brahman; but he is said to attain Sakshatkara (direct cognition) when he knows (or realises) that he is himself Brahman.

42. When a Yogin knows his Atman to be the Absolute, then he becomes a Jivanmukta.

43. To Mahatmas, to be always in the state ‘I am Brahman’ conduces to their salvation. There are two words for bondage and Moksha. They are ‘mine’ and ‘not mine’.

44. Man is bound by ‘mine’, but he is released by ‘not mine’. He should abandon all the thoughts relating to externals and so also with references to internals. O Ribhu, having given up all thoughts, you should rest content (in your Atman) ever.”

45. The whole of the universe is caused through Sankalpa alone. It is only through Sankalpa that the universe manifests. Having abandoned the universe, which is of the form of Sankalpa and having fixed your mind upon the Nirvikalpa (one which is changeless), meditate upon my abode in your heart.

46. O most intelligent being, pass your time in meditating upon me, glorifying me in songs, talking about me to one another and thus devoting yourself entirely to me as the Supreme.

47. Whatever is Chit (consciousness) in the universe is only Chinmatra. This universe is Chinmaya only. You are Chit. I am Chit; contemplate upon the worlds also as Chit.

48-49(a). Make the desires nil. Always be without any stain. How then can the bright lamp of Atmic Vijnana arising through the Vedas be affected by the Karma arising from the ignorance of the actor and the agent ?

49(b)-50(a). Having given up not-Atman and being in the world unaffected by it, delight only in the Chinmatra within, ever intent on the One.

50(b)-51(a). As the Akasa of the pot and that of the house are both located in the all-pervading Akasa, so the Jivas and Ishvara are only evolved out of me, the Chidakasa (the one Akasa of universal consciousness).

51(b)-52(a). So that which did not exist before the evolution of Atmas (Jiva) (and Ishvara) and that which is rejected at the end (viz., universal deluge) is called Maya by Brahma-Jnanis through their discrimination.

52(b)-53(a). Should Maya and its effects (the universe) be annihilated, there is no state of Ishvara, there is no state of Jiva. Therefore like the Akasa without its vehicle, I am the immaculate and Chit.

53(b)-54. The creation, sentient as well as non-sentient from Ikshana (thinking) to Pravesha (entry) of those having the forms of Jivas and Ishvara is due to the creation (or illusion) of Ishvara; while the Samsara (worldly existence) from the waking state to salvation is due to the creation of Jiva.

55. So the Karmas ordained in the sacrifice (called) Trinachaka (so called after Nachiketas of Katha Upanishad) to Yoga are dependent upon the illusion of Ishvara; while (the systems from) Lokayata (atheistical system) to Sankhya rest on the illusion of Jiva.

56. Therefore aspirants after salvation should never make their heads enter into the field of controversy regarding Jiva and Ishvara. But with an undisturbed mind, Tattvas of Brahman should be investigated.

57. Those who do not cognise the Tattva of the secondless Brahman are all deluded persons only. Whence (then) is salvation to them ? Whence then is happiness (to them) in this universe ?

58. What if they have the thoughts of the superiority and inferiority (of Ishvara and Jiva) ? Will sovereignty and mendicancy (experienced by a person) in the dreaming state affect him in his waking state ?

59. When Buddhi is absorbed in Ajnana, then it is termed, by the wise, sleep. Whence then is sleep to me who have not Ajnana and its effects ?
60. When Buddhi is in full bloom, then it is said to be the Jagrat (waking state). As I have no changes, etc., there is no waking state to me.
61. The moving about of Buddhi in the subtle Nadis constitutes the dreaming state. In me without the act of moving about, there is no dreaming.
62. Then at the time of Sushupti when all things are absorbed, enveloped by Tamas, he then enjoys the highest bliss of his own nature in an invisible state.
63. If he sees everything as Chit without any difference, he alone is an actual Vijnani. He alone is Shiva. He alone is Hari. He alone is Brahma.
64. This mundane existence which is an ocean of sorrow, is nothing but a long-lived dream, or an illusion of the mind or a long-lived reign of the mind. From rising from sleep till going to bed, the one Brahman alone should be contemplated upon.
65. By causing to be absorbed this universe which is but a superimposition, the Chitta partakes of my nature. Having annihilated all the six powerful enemies, through their destruction become the non-dual One like the scent-elephant.
66. Whether the body perishes now or lasts the age of moon and stars, what matters it to me having Chit alone as my body ? What matters it to the Akasa in the pot, whether it (the pot) is destroyed now or exists for a long time.
67. While the Slough of a serpent lies cast off lifeless in its hole, it (the serpent) does not evince any affection towards it.
68. Likewise the wise do not identify themselves with their gross and subtle bodies. If the delusive knowledge (that the universe is real) with its cause should be destroyed by the fire of Atma-Jnana, the wise man becomes bodiless, through the idea ‘It (Brahman) is not this; It is not this’.
69. Shastras, the knowledge of reality (of the universe) perishes. Through direct perception of truth, one’s fitness for action (in this universe) ceases. With the cessation of Prarabdha (the portion of the past Karma which is being enjoyed in this life), the destruction of the manifestation (of the universe) takes place. Maya is thus destroyed in a three-fold manner.
70. If within himself no identification (of Jiva) with Brahman takes place, the state (of the separateness) of Jiva does not perish. If the non-dual one is truly discerned, then all affinities (for objects) cease.
71. With the cessation of Prarabdha (arising from the cessation of affinities), there is that of the body. Therefore it is certain that Maya perishes thus entirely. If it is said that all the universe is, that Brahman alone is that is of the nature of Sat.
72. If it is said that the universe shines, then it is Brahman alone that shines. (The mirage of) all the water in an oasis is really no other than the oasis itself. Through inquiry of one’s Self, the three worlds (above, below and middle) are only of the nature of Chit.
73. In Brahman, which is one and alone, the essence of whose nature is absolute consciousness and which is remote from the differences of Jiva, Ishvara and Guru, there is no Ajnana. Such being the case, where then is the occasion for the universe there ? I am that Brahman which is all full.
74. While the full moon of wisdom is robbed of its lustre by the Rahu (one of the two nodes of the moon) of delusion, all actions such as the rites of bathing, alms-giving and sacrifice performed during the time of eclipse are all fruitless.
75. As salt dissolved in water becomes one, so if Atman and Manas become identified, it is termed Samadhi.
76. Without the grace of a good (perfect) guru, the abandonment of sensual objects is very difficult of attainment; so also the perception of (divine) truth and the attainment of one’s true state.
77. Then the state of being in one’s own self shines of its own accord in a Yogin in whom Jnana-Sakti has dawned and who has abandoned all Karmas.

78. The (property of) fluctuation is natural to mercury and mind. If either mercury is bound (or consolidated) or mind is bound (or controlled), what then on this earth cannot be accomplished ?

79. He who obtains Murchchha cures all diseases. The dead are brought to life again. He who has bound (his mind or mercury) is able to move in the air. Therefore mercury and mind confer upon one the state of Brahman.

80. The master of Indriyas (the organs) is Manas (mind). The master of Manas is Prana. The master of Prana is Laya (absorption Yoga). Therefore Laya-Yoga should be practised.

81. To the Yogins, Laya(-Yoga) is said to be without actions and changes. This Laya (absorption) of mind which is above speech and in which one has to abandon all Sankalpas and to give up completely all actions, should be known through one's own (experience).

82. As an actress, though subject (or dancing in harmony) to music, cymbals and other musical instruments of time, has her mind intent upon he protection of the pot on her head, so the Yogin, though intent for the time being upon the hosts of objects, never leaves off the mind contemplating on Brahman.

83. The person who desires all the wealth of Yoga should, after having given up all thoughts, practise with a subdued mind concentration on Nada (spiritual sound) alone."

Thus ends the second Chapter of Varaha Upanishad.

CHAPTER - III

1. "The One Principle cannot at any time become of manifold forms. As I am the partless, there is none else but myself.

2. Whatever is seen and whatever is heard is no other than Brahman. I am that Para-Brahman, which is the eternal, the immaculate, the free, the one, the undivided bliss, the non-dual, the truth, the wisdom and the endless.

3. I am of the nature of bliss; I am of undivided wisdom; I am the supreme of the supreme; I am the resplendent absolute Consciousness. As the clouds do not touch the Akasa, so the miseries attendant on mundane existence do not affect me.

4. Know all to be happiness through the annihilation of sorrow and all to be of the nature of Sat (be-ness) through the annihilation of Asat (not-be-ness). It is only the nature of Chit (Consciousness) that is associated with this visible universe. Therefore my form is partless.

5. To an exalted Yogin, there is neither birth nor death, nor going (to other spheres), nor returning (to earth); there is no stain or purity or knowledge but (the universe) shines to him as absolute Consciousness.

6. Practise always silence 'I am (viz., that you yourself are) Para-Brahman' which is truth and absolute Consciousness, which is undivided and non-dual, which is invisible, which is stainless, which is pure, which is second-less and which is beneficent.

7. It (Brahman) is not subject to birth and death, happiness and misery. It is not subject to caste, law, family and Gotra (clan). Practise silence – I am Chit, which is the Vivarta-Upadana (viz., the illusory cause) of the universe.

8. Always practise silence – I am (viz., you are) the Brahman, that is the full, the secondless, the undivided consciousness which has neither the relationship nor the differences existing in the universe and which partakes of the essence of the non-dual and the supreme Sat and Chit.

9. That which always is and that which preserves the same nature during the three periods of time, unaffected by anything, is my eternal form of Sat.

10. Even the state of happiness which is eternal without Upadhis (vehicles) and which is superior to all the happiness derivable from Sushupti is of my bliss only.

11. As by the rays of the sun, thick gloom is soon destroyed, so darkness, the cause of rebirth is destroyed by Hari (Vishnu) Viz., the sun's lustre.

12. Through the contemplation and worship of my (Hari's) feet, every person is delivered from his ignorance. The means of destroying deaths and births is only through the contemplation of my feet.
13. As a lover of wealth praises a wealthy man, so if with earnestness a person praises the Cause of the universe, who will not be delivered from bondage ?
14. As in the presence of the sun the world of its-own accord begins to perform its actions, so in my presence all the worlds are animated to action.
15. As to the mother-of pearl, the illusory conception of silver is falsely attributed, so to me is falsely attributed through Maya this universe which is composed of Mahat, etc.
16. I am not with those differences that are (observable) in the body of low caste men, the body of cow, etc., the fixed one's, the bodies of Brahmanas and others.
17. As to a person, even after being relieved from the misconception of the directions, the (same misconception of) direction continues (as before), just so is to me the universe though destroyed by Vijnana. Therefore the universe is not.
18. I am neither the body nor the organs of sense and action, nor Pranas, Nor Manas, nor Buddhi, nor Ahankara, nor Chitta, nor Maya, nor the universe including Akasa and others.
19. Neither am I the actor, the enjoyer, nor he who causes the enjoyment. I am Brahman that is Chit, Sat and Ananda alone and that is Janardana (Vishnu).
20. As, through the fluctuation of water, the sun (reflected therein) is moved, so Atman arises in this mundane existence through its mere connection with Ahankara.
21. This mundane existence has Chitta as its root. This (Chitta) should be cleansed by repeated effort. How is it you have your confidence in the greatness of Chitta ?
22. Alas, where is all the wealth of the kings ! Where are the Brahmanas ? Where are all the worlds ? All old ones are gone. Many fresh evolutions have occurred.
23. Many Crores of Brahmas have passed away. Many kings have flitted away like particles of dust. Even to a Jnani, the love of the body may arise through the Asura (demoniacal) nature. If the Asura nature should arise in a wise man, his knowledge of truth becomes fruitless.
24. Should Rajas and others generated in us be burnt by the fire of discriminative (divine) wisdom, how can they germinate again ?
25. Just as a very intelligent person delights in the shortcomings of another, so if one finds out his own faults (and corrects them) who will not be relieved from bondage ?
26. O Lord of Munis, only he who has not Atma-Jnana and who is not an emancipated person, longs after Siddhis. He attains such Siddhis through medicine, (or wealth), Mantras, religious works, time and skill.
27. In the eyes of an Atma-Jnani, these Siddhis are of no importance. One who has become an Atma-Jnani, one who has his sight solely on Atman, and one who is content with Atman (the higher Self) through (his) Atman (or the lower self), never follows (the dictates of) Avidya.
28. Whatever exists in this world, he knows to be of the nature of Avidya. How then will an Atma-Jnani who has relinquished Avidya be immersed in (or affected by) it.
29. Though medicine, Mantras, religious work, time and skill (or mystical expressions) lead to the development of Siddhis, yet they cannot in any way help one to attain the seat of Paramatman.
30. How then can one who is an Atma-Jnani and who is without his mind be said to long after Siddhis, while all the actions of his desires are controlled ?"
Thus ends the third Chapter of Varaha Upanishad.

CHAPTER - IV

On another occasion Nidagha asked Lord Ribhu to enlighten him as to the characteristics of Jivanmukti. To which Ribhu replied in the affirmative and said the following: "In the seven Bhumikas (or stages of development of wisdom) there are four kinds of Jivanmuktas. Of these the first stage is Subhechcha (good desire); the second is Vicharana (inquiry); the third is Tanumanasi (or pertaining to the thinned mind); the fourth is Sattvapatti (the attainment of Sattva); the fifth is Asamsakti (non-attachment); the sixth is the Padartha-Bhavana (analysis of objects) and the seventh is the Turya (fourth or final stage). The Bhumika which is of the form of Pranava (Om) is formed of (or is divided into) Akara – 'A', Ukara – 'U', Makara - 'M' and Ardha-Matra. Akara and others are of four kinds on account of the difference of Sthula (gross) Sukshma (subtle), Bija (seed or causal) and Sakshi (witness). Their Avasthas are four: waking, dreaming, dreamless sleeping and Turya (fourth). He who is in (or the entity that identifies itself with) the waking state in the gross Amsa (essence or part) of Akara is named Vishva; in the subtle essence, he is termed Taijasa; in the Bija essence, he is termed Prajna; and in the Sakshi essence, he is termed Turya.

He who is in the dreaming state (or the entity which identifies itself with the dreaming state) in the gross essence of Ukara is Vishva; in the subtle essence, he is termed Taijasa; in the Bija essence, is termed Prajna; and in the Sakshi essence, he is termed Turya.

He who is in the Sushupti state in the gross essence of Makara is termed Vishva; in the subtle essence, Taijasa; in the Bija essence, he is termed Prajna; and in the Sakshi essence, he is termed Turya.

He who is in Turya State in the gross essence of Ardha-Matra is termed Turya-Vishva. In the subtle, he is termed Taijasa; in the Bija essence, he is termed Prajna; and in the Sakshi essence, he is termed Turya-Turya.

The Turya essence of Akara is (or embraces) the first, second and third (Bhumikas or stages of the seven). The Turya essence of Ukara embraces the fourth Bhumika. The Turya essence of Makara embraces the fifth Bhumika. The Turya essence of Ardha-Matra is the sixth stage. Beyond this, is the seventh stage.

One who functions in the (first) three Bhumikas is called Mumukshu; one who functions in the fourth Bhumika is called a Brahmavit; one who functions in the fifth Bhumika is called a Brahmavidvara; one who functions in the sixth Bhumika is called a Brahmavidvariya; and one in the seventh Bhumika is called a Brahmavidvarishtha. With reference to this, there are Slokas. They are:

1. Subhechcha is said to be the first Jnana-Bhumi (or stage of wisdom); Vicharana, the second; Tanumanasi, the third;

2. Sattvapatti, the fourth; then come Asamsakti as the fifth, Padartha-Bhavana as the sixth and Turya as the seventh.

3. The desire that arise in one through sheer Vairagya (after resolving) 'Shall I be ignorant ? I will be seen by the Shastras and the wise' (or 'I will study the books and be with the wise') – is termed by the wise as Subhechcha.

4. The association with the wise and Shastras and the following of the right path preceding the practice of indifference is termed Vicharana.

5. That stage wherein the hankering after sensual objects is thinned through the first and second stages is said to be Tanumanasi.

6. That stage wherein having become indifferent to all sensual objects through the exercise in the (above) three stages, the purified Chitta rests on Atman which is of the nature of Sat is called Sattvapatti.

7. The light (or manifestation) of Sattva-Guna that is firmly rooted (in one) without any desire for the fruits of actions through the practice in the above four stages is termed Asamsakti.

8-9. That stage wherein through the practice in the (above) five stages one, having found delight in Atman, has no conception of the internals or externals (though before him) and engages in actions only when impelled to do so by others is termed Padartha-Bhavana, the sixth stage.

10. The stage wherein after exceedingly long practice in the (above) six stages one is (immovably) fixed in the contemplation of Atman alone without the difference (of the universe) is the seventh stage called Turya.

11. The three stages beginning with Subhechcha are said to be attained with (or amidst) differences and non-differences. (Because) the universe one sees in the waking state he thinks to be really existent.

12. When the mind is firmly fixed on the non-dual One and the conception of duality is put down, then he sees this universe as a dream through his union with the fourth stage.
13. As the autumnal cloud being dispersed vanishes, so this universe perishes. O Nidagha, be convinced that such a person has only Sattva remaining.
14. Then having ascended the fifth stage called Sushuptipada (dreamless sleeping seat), he remains simply in the non-dual state, being freed from all the various differences.
15-16(a). Having always introvision though ever participating in external actions, those that are engaged in the practice of this (sixth stage) are seen like one sleeping when fatigued (viz., being freed from all affinities).
16(b). (Lastly) the seventh stage which is the ancient and which is called Gudhasupti is generally attained.
17. Then one remains in that secondless state without fear and with his consciousness almost annihilated where there is neither Sat nor Asat, neither self nor not-self.
18. Like an empty pot in the Akasa, there is void both within and without; like a filled vessel in the midst of an ocean, he is full both within and without.
19. Do not become either the knower or the known. May you become the Reality which remains after all thoughts are given up.
20. Having discarded (all the distinctions of) the seer, the sight and the seen with their affinities, meditate solely upon Atman which shines as the supreme Light.
21. He is said to be a Jivanmukta (emancipated person) in whom, though participating in the material concerns of the world, the universe is not seen to exist like the invisible Akasa.
22. He is said to be a Jivanmukta, the light of whose mind never sets or rises in misery or happiness and who does not seek to change what happens to him (viz., either to diminish his misery or increase his happiness).
23. He is said to be a Jivanmukta who though in his Sushupti is awake and to whom the waking state is unknown and whose wisdom is free from the affinities (of objects).
24. He is said to be a Jivanmukta whose heart is pure like Akasa, though acting (as it) in consonance to love, hatred, fear and others.
25. He is said to be a Jivanmukta who has not the conception of his being the actor and whose Buddhi is not attached to material objects, whether he performs actions or not.
26. He is said to be a Jivanmukta, of whom people are not afraid, who is not afraid of people and who has given up joy, anger and fear.
27. He is said to be a Jivanmukta, who though participating in all the illusory objects, is cool amidst them and is a full Atman, (being) as if they belonged to others.
28. O Muni, he is said to be a Jivanmukta, who having eradicated all the desires of his Chitta, is (fully) content with me who am the Atman of all.
29. He is said to be a Jivanmukta, who rests with an unshaken mind in that all pure abode which is Chinmatra and free from all the modifications of Chitta.
30. He is said to be a Jivanmukta in whose Chitta do not dawn (the distinctions of) the universe, I, he, thou and others that are visible and unreal.
31. Through the path of the Guru and Shastras, enter soon sat – the Brahman that is immutable, great, full and without objects – and be firmly seated there.
32. Shiva alone is Guru; Shiva alone is Vedas; Shiva alone is Lord; Shiva alone is I; Shiva alone is all. There is none other than Shiva.
33. The undaunted Brahmana having known Him (Shiva) should attain wisdom. One need not utter many words as they but injure the organ of speech.
34. (The Rishi) Suka is a Mukta (emancipated person). (The Rishi) Vamadeva is a Mukta. There are no others (who have attained emancipation) than through these (viz., the two paths of these two Rishis). Those brave men who follow the path of Suka in this world become Sadyo-Muktas (viz., emancipated) immediately after (the body wear away);

35. While those who always follow the path of Vamadeva (i.e., Vedanta) in this world are subject again and again to rebirths and attain Krama (gradual) emancipation, through Yoga, Sankhya and Karmas associated with Sattva (Guna).
36. Thus there are two paths laid down by the Lord of Devas (viz.,) the Suka and Vamadeva paths. The Suka path is called the bird's path; while the Vamadeva path is called the ant's path.
37-38. Those persons that have cognised the true nature of their Atman through the mandatory and prohibitory injunctions (of the Vedas), the inquiry into (the true meaning of) Maha-Vakyas (the sacred sentences of the Vedas), the Samadhi of Sankhya Yoga or Asamprajnata Samadhi and that have thereby purified themselves, attain the supreme seat through the Suka path.
39-40. Having, through Hatha-Yoga practice with the pain caused by Yama, postures, etc., become liable to the ever recurring obstacles caused by Anima and other (Siddhis) and having not obtained good results, one is born again in a great family and practises Yoga through his previous (Karmic) affinities.
41. Then through the practice of Yoga during many lives, he attains salvation (viz.,) the supreme seat of Vishnu through the Vamadeva path.
42. Thus there are two paths that lead to the attainment of Brahman and that are beneficent. The one confers instantaneous salvation and the other confers gradual salvation. To one that sees (all) as the one (Brahman), where is delusion ? Where is sorrow ?
43. Those that are under the eyes of those whose Buddhi is solely occupied with the truth (of Brahman) that is the end of all experience are released from all heinous sins.
44. All beings inhabiting heaven and earth that fall under the vision of Brahmavits are at once emancipated from the sins committed during many Crores of births."
Thus ends the fourth Chapter of Varaha Upanishad.

CHAPTER - V

Then Nidagha asked Lord Ribhu to enlighten him as to the rules (to be observed) in the practice of Yoga. Accordingly He (the Lord) said thus:
1. "The body is composed of the five elements. It is filled with five Mandalas (spheres). That which is hard is Prithvi (earth), one of them; that which is liquid is Apas;
2. That which is bright is Tejas (fire); motion is the property of Vayu; that which pervades everywhere is Akasa. All these should be known by an aspirant after Yoga.
3. Through the blowing of Vayu-Mandala in this body, (there are caused) 21,600 breaths every day and night.
4. If there is a diminution in the Prithvi-Mandala, there arise folds in the body; if there is diminution in the essence of Apas, there arises gradually greyness of hair;
5. If there is diminution in the essence of Tejas, there is loss of hunger and lustre; if there is diminution in the essence of Vayu, there is incessant tremor;
6. If there is diminution in the essence of Akasa, one dies. The Jivita (viz., Prana) which possesses these elements having no place to rest (in the body) owing to the diminution of the elements, rises up like birds flying up in the air.
7. It is for this reason that is called Udyana (lit., flying up). With reference to this, there is said to be a Bandha (binding, also meaning a posture called Udyana-Bandha, by which this flight can be arrested). This Udyana-Bandha is to (or does away with) death, as a lion to an elephant.
8. Its experience is in the body, as also the Bandha. Its binding (in the body) is hurtful. If there is agitation of Agni (fire) within the belly, then there will be caused much of pain.
9. Therefore this (Udyana-Bandha) should not be practised by one who is hungry or who has urgency to make water or void excrement. He should take many times in small quantities proper and moderate food.

10. He should practise Mantra-Yoga. Laya-Yoga and Hatha-Yoga, through mild, middling and transcendental methods (or periods) respectively. Laya, Mantra and Hatha-Yogas have each (the same) eight subservients.
11-12(a). They are Yama, Niyama, Asana, Pranayama, Pratyahara, Dharana, Dhyana and Samadhi.
12(b)-13(a). (Of these), Yama is of ten kinds. They are non-injury, truth, non-coveting, continence, compassion, straightforwardness, patience, courage, moderate eating and purity (bodily and mental).
13(b)-14. Niyama is of ten kinds. They are Tapas (religious austerities), contentment, belief in the existence of God or Vedas, charity, worship of Ishvara (or God), listening to the expositions of religious doctrines, modesty, a (good) intellect, Japa (muttering of prayers) and Vrata (religious observances).
15-16. They are eleven postures beginning with Chakra. Chakra, Padma, Kurma, Mayura, Kukkuta, Vira, Svastika, Bhadra, Simha, Mukta and Gomukha are the postures enumerated by the knowers of Yoga.
17. Placing the left ankle on the right thigh and the right ankle on the left thigh and keeping the body erect (while sitting) is the posture "Chakra".
18. Pranayama should be practised again and again in the following order, viz., inspiration, restraint of breath and expiration. The Pranayama is done through the Nadis (nerves). Hence it is called the Nadis themselves.
19. The body of every sentient being is ninety-six digits long. In the middle of the body, two digits above the anus and two digits below the sexual organ, is the centre of the body (called Muladhara or sacral plexus).
20-21. Nine digits above the genitals, there is Kanda of Nadis which revolves oval-shaped, four digits high and four digits broad. It is surrounded by fat, flesh, bone and blood.
22. In it, is situate a Nadi-Chakra (wheel of nerves) having twelve spokes. Kundali by which this body is supported is there.
23. It is covering by its face the Brahmarandhra (viz., Brahma's hole) of Susumna. (By the side) of Susumna dwell the Nadis Alambusa and Kuhuh.
24. In the next two (spokes) are Varuna and Yasasvini. On the spoke south of Susumna is, in regular course, Pingala.
25. On the next two spokes, are Pusha and Payasvini. On the spoke west of Susumna is the Nadi called Sarasvati.
26. On the next two spokes are Sankhini and Gandhari. To the north of Susumna dwells Ida;
27-28. In the next is Hastijihva; in the next is Visvodara. In these spokes of the wheel, the twelve Nadis carry the twelve Vayus from left to right (to the different parts of the body). The Nadis are like (i.e. woven like the warp and woof of) cloth. They are said to have different colours.
29-30. The central portion of the cloth (here the collection of the Nadis) is called the Nabhi Chakra (navel plexus). Jvalanti, Nadarupini, Pararandhra and Susumna are called the (basic) supports of Nada (spiritual sound). These four Nadis are of ruby colour. The central portion of Brahmarandhra is again and again covered by Kundali.
31-33(a). Thus ten Vayus move in these Nadis. A wise man who has understood the course of Nadis and Vayus should, after keeping his neck and body erect with his mouth closed, contemplate immovably upon Turyaka (Atman) at the tip of his nose, in the centre of his heart and in the middle of Bindu and should see with a tranquil mind through the (mental) eyes, the nectar flowing from there.
33(b)-34. Having closed the anus and drawn up the Vayu and caused it to rise through (the repetition of) Pranava (Om), he should complete with Sri Bija. He should contemplate upon his Atman as Sri (or Parasakti) and as being bathed by nectar.
35. This is Kalavanchana (lit., time illusion). It is said to be the most important of all. Whatever is thought of by the mind is accomplished by the mind itself.
36. (Then) Agni (fire) will flame in Jala (water) and in the flame (of Agni) will arise the branches and blossoms. Then the words uttered and the actions done regarding the universe, are not in vain.

37. By checking the Bindu in the path, by making the fire flame up in the water and by causing the water to dry up, the body is made firm.
38. Having contracted simultaneously the anus and Yoni (the womb) united together, he should draw up Apana and unite with it Samana.
39. He should contemplate upon his Atman as Shiva and then as being bathed by nectar. In the central part of each spoke, the Yogin should commence to concentrate Bala (will or strength).
40. He should try to go up by the union of Prana and Apana. This most important Yoga brightens up in the body the path of Siddhis.
41. As dam across the water serves as an obstacle to the floods, so it should ever be known by the Yogins that the Chhaya of the body is to (Jiva).
42. This Bandha is said of all Nadis. Through the grace of this Bandha, the Devata (goddess) becomes visible.
43. This Bandha of four feet serves as a check to the three paths. This brightens up the path through which the Siddhas obtained (their Siddhis).
44. If with Prana is made to rise up soon Udana, this Bandha checking all Nadis goes up.
45. This is called Samputa-Yoga or Mula-Bandha. Through the Practising of this Yoga, the three Bandhas are mastered.
46. By practising day and night intermittingly or at any convenient time, the Vayu will come under his control.
47. With the control of Vayu, Agni (the gastric fire) in the body will increase daily. With the increase of Agni, food, etc., will be easily digested.
48. Should food be properly digested, there is increase of Rasa (essence of food). With the daily increase of Rasa, there is the increase of Dhatus (spiritual substances).
49. With the increase of Dhatus, there is the increase of wisdom in the body. Thus all the sins collected together during many Crores of births are burnt up.
50. In the centre of the anus and the genitals, there is the triangular Muladhara. It illumines the seat of Shiva of the form of Bindu.
51. There is located the Parasakti named Kundalini. From that seat, Vayu arises. From that seat, Agni becomes increased.
52. From that seat, Bindu originates and Nada becomes increased. From that seat, Hamsa is born. From that seat, Manas is born.
53. The six Chakras beginning with Muladhara are said to be the seat of Sakti (Goddess). From the neck to the top of the head is said to be the seat of Sambhu (Shiva).
54. To the Nadis, the body is the support (or vehicle); to Prana, the Nadis are the support; to Jiva, Prana is the dwelling place; to Hamsa, Jiva is the support;
55. To Sakti, Hamsa is the seat and the locomotive and fixed universe. Being without distraction and of a calm mind, one should practise Pranayama.
56. Even a person who is well-skilled in the practice of the three Bandhas should try always to cognise with a true heart that Principle which should be known and is the cause of all objects and their attributes.
57. Both expiration and inspiration should (be stopped and made to) rest in restraint of breath (alone). He should depend solely on Brahman which is the highest aim of all visibles.
58. (The giving out of) all external objects is said to be Rechaka (expiration). The (taking in of the) spiritual knowledge of the Shastras is said to be Puraka (inspiration) and (the keeping to oneself of) such knowledge is said to be Kumbhaka (or restraint of breath).
59. He is an emancipated person who practises thus such a Chitta. There is no doubt about it. Through Kumbhaka, it (the mind) should be always taken up and through Kumbhaka alone it should be filled up within.
60. It is only through Kumbhaka that Kumbhaka should be firmly mastered. Within it is Parama-Shiva.

That (Vayu) which is non-motionless should be shaken again through Kantha-Mudra (throat-posture).
61-62. Having checked the course of Vayu, having become perfect in the practice of expiration and restraint of breath and having planted evenly on the ground the two hands and the two feet, one should pierce the four seats through Vayu through the three Yogas. He should shake Mahameru with the (aid of) Prakotis (forces) at the mouth of Vayu.
63. The two Putas (cavities) being drawn, Vayu throbs quickly. The union of moon, sun and Agni should be known on account of nectar.
64. Through the motion of Meru, the Devatas who stay in the centre of Meru move. At first in his Brahma-Granthi, there is produced soon a hole (or passage).
65. Then having pierced Brahma-Granthi, he pierces Vishnu-Granthi; then he pierces Rudra-Granthi.
66-67(a). Then to the Yogin comes Vedha (piercing) through his liberation from the impurities of delusion, through the religious ceremonies (performed) in various births, through the grace of Gurus and Devatas and through the practice of Yoga.
67(b)-68. In the Mandala (sphere or region) of Susumna (situated between Ida and Pingala), Vayu should be made to rise up through the feature known as Mudra-Bandha. The short pronunciation (of Pranava) frees (one) from sins; its long pronunciation confers (on one) Moksha.
69-70. So also its pronunciation in Apyayana or Pluta Svara (tone). He is a knower of Veda, who through the above-mentioned three ways of pronunciation knows the end of Pranava which is beyond the power of speech, like the never ceasing flow of oil or the long-drawn bell-sound.The short Svara goes to Bindu. The long Svara goes to Brahmarandhra; the Pluta to Dvadasanta (twelfth centre). The Mantras should be uttered on account of getting Mantra Siddhis.
71-72(a). This Pranava (OM) will remove all obstacles. It will remove all sins. Of this, are four Bhumikas (states) predicated, viz., Arambha, Ghata, Parichaya and Nishpatti.
72(b)-73(a). Arambha is that state in which one having abandoned external Karmas performed by the three organs (mind, speech and body), is always engaged in mental Karma only.
73(b)-74(a). It is said by the wise that the Ghata state is that in which Vayu having forced an opening on the western side and being full, is firmly fixed there.
74(b). Parichaya state is that in which Vayu is firmly fixed to Akasa, neither associated with Jiva nor not, while the body is immovable.
75. It is said that Nishpatti state is that in which there take place creation and dissolution through Atman or that state in which a Yogin having become a Jivanmukta performs Yoga without effort. Whoever recites this Upanishad becomes immaculate like Agni. Like Vayu, he becomes pure. He becomes freed from the sin of drinking alcohol. He becomes freed from the sins of the theft of gold. He becomes a Jivanmukta. This is what is said by the Rig-Veda. Like the eye pervading the Akasa (seeing without effort everything above), a wise man sees (always) the supreme seat of Vishnu. The Brahmanas who have always their spiritual eyes wide open praise and illuminate in diverse ways the spiritual seat of Vishnu. OM, thus is the Upanishad."
Thus ends the fifth Chapter of Varaha Upanishad.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Varaha Upanishad belonging to the Krishna-Yajur-Veda.

Satyayaniya Upanishad

Translated by Prof. A. A. Ramanathan
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. The mind alone is the cause of bondage and liberation of the people; (the mind) attached to the objects of the senses leads them to bondage; freed from the objects it leads them to liberation. (Thus) it has been declared.
2. If that attachment of the mind of a person to the objects of the senses is directed towards Brahman, who shall not be liberated from bondage ?
3. The mind (chitta) alone is worldly life; hence it should be purified with effort. As the mind is, so he becomes. This is the eternal secret.
4. One who knows not the Veda realizes not that omnipresent One (Brahman); one who knows not Brahman reaches not that supreme abode. He who realizes that the omnipresent god (Vishnu), the omniscient one, the prop of all (Vasudeva) (is himself), that sage, seer of reality, attains the state of wisdom while living (vipratvam).
5. Then (observing in the four disciplines) those Brahmanas well-versed in the Veda and untouched by desires, who ponder over the eternal supreme Brahman (realize Brahman). (A person desiring liberation) who is quiescent, self-subdued, has renounced all sensory pleasures, is forbearing, well versed in the scripture, is known as equanimous, has discarded the primary desires (for wealth, wife and progeny) and is free from the debts (to the manes, etc.,), coming to realize the Atman, shall live, observing silence, in some stage of life or other as the Kutichaka (or Paramahamsa).
6. Then entering into the final stage of life (i.e. Sannyasa) he may possess five (small) things (matras) as is proper.

7. He should possess as long as he lives (the five things, namely) a three-fold staff (of bamboo), sacred thread, garment consisting of a loin-cloth, sling and holy ring of sacred grass.
8. These fire are the things pertaining to an ascetic (of the Kutichaka order); (to all ascetics the inward possessions are five, namely, the 'a', 'u', 'm', the bindu and the nada constituting Om.) This matra (namely the five constituents) is heard in the Pranava (Brahman). Till the final exit (of the vital breath) the ascetic shall not abandon (the twofold five matras); even at death (the five external matras) shall be buried with him.
9. The sign of Vishnu (i.e. means leading to liberation) is said to be twofold, the external and the internal. If one of them is discarded (the ascetic) is without doubt fallen.
10. The threefold staff is an emblem (leading to) Vishnu; it is a means of attaining liberation by learned Brahmanas as ascetics. It is the extinction of all worldly characteristics – thus runs the Vedic teaching.
11-12. Then indeed, Oh Brahmana, there are four kinds of ascetics, namely Kutichaka, Bahudaka, Hamsa and Paramahamsa. All these bear the signs of Vishnu (i.e. they strive for liberation), wear tuft and sacred thread, are pure in mind, consider their own Self as Brahman, are intent on worship (of God) in the form of pure consciousness, practise muttering of prayers and the principal and secondary disciplines (Yama and Niyama), are of good conduct and (thus) become exalted. This is declared in a Vedic verse: The Kutichaka, Bahudaka, Hamsa and Paramahamsa ascetics are different in their way of life; all these possess the signs of Vishnu, the external and internal, which are always visible and invisible (respectively). Practising the five devotional acts (yajnas), having penetration into the Vedanta, observing the rites (appropriate to the station in life), resorting to the spiritual lore, abandoning the tree (of worldly life) but having recourse to its root-cause (namely Brahman), renouncing its flowers (of rituals) but enjoying its (true) essence, sporting in Vishnu (i.e. leading the life spiritual), delighting in Vishnu, freed (from external worship), identifying themselves with Vishnu, they realize the omnipresent Vishnu.
13. Worship during the three junctures of the day (Sandhyas) bathing according to capacity, presenting libations of water to the manes, cleansing (i.e. purifying oneself with water), waiting upon (the deities with prayers) – these five devotional acts (the Kutichaka) shall perform till death.
14. With ten Pranavas and seven mystic words (vyahritis) the four-footed Gayatri along with its 'head' is the prayer to be recited during the three Sandhyas.
15. The practice of yoga consists of the constant single-minded devoted service of Vishnu, the Guru; non-injuring by word, thought and deed is the devotional act of penance (tapoyajna).
16. It is declared that the devotional act of studying the scripture (Svadhyaya-yajna) consists of reciting the various Upanishads. The attentive reciting of Om offers the (concept of the individual) Self in the fire of the (non-dual) Brahman.
17. The devotional act of possessing spiritual wisdom (Jnana-yajna) is to be known as the very best of all yajnas. (The Paramahamsas) have Jnana (true knowledge) for the (emblematic) staff, Jnana for the tuft and Jnana for the sacred thread.
18. He whose tuft consists of Jnana and the sacred thread too of that (Jnana) has all the characteristics of a Brahmana – thus is the injunction of the Veda.
19. Then indeed, Oh Brahmana, these mendicant monks are as they appear (i.e. unclad, as when they were born). They should desire to remain as a tree, having gone beyond passion, anger, greed, delusion, false pride, pride, envy, 'mine-ness' and egotism; and having discarded honour and dishonour, blame and praise; and when cut down (like a tree) they shall not complain. Thus these wise men become immortal here (in this world) itself. This has been said in the Vedic verse: Having taken leave of his kinsmen and son with good will and not seeing them again, enduring the pairs (of opposites, heat and cold, etc.,) and quiescent he shall turn eastward or northward and proceed on foot.
20-22. (Equipped with) a (water) vessel and staff, seeing four cubits of ground alone before him, wearing sacred thread and tuft or remaining shaven-headed, having a family (of his body alone), and receiving from people alms unbegged or begged for bare sustenance' having a vessel made of clay, wood, gourd or strung leaves as originally provided, and clothed with a garment of hemp, silk, grass, a patched one, (deer-)skin or a leafy one strung or unstrung; shaving his head alone at the junction of the seasons without removing hair below and in the arm pits and never the tuft; he shall reside in a fixed place for four months (of the rainy season) during which the inward soul, the omnipresent Purusha (Vishnu) is asleep (in the milky ocean).

23. When (God, Vishnu) has risen (from sleep), the ascetic may reside in one place to carry out his work (such as study, meditation or Samadhi) for the other eight months or he may go about (as a mendicant monk). (During the journey) he may stay (for short periods) in a temple, a hut where the ritual fire is kept, the shade of a tree, or a cave, without attachment and unnoticed by the people. He shall be quiescent like fire when fuel is exhausted and he shall not give or cause trouble to any one anywhere. (On seeing one equal to or inferior to him he shall not shrink nor consider any one existing as different from himself).

24. If a person has realized that he is the Atman non-different from the universal Self, what can he wish for, and to fulfil which desire need he torture his body (by various kinds of austerities) ?

25. A wise-man knowing this (truth) and thus a knower of Brahman shall have this consciousness. He shall not worry himself with many words; for it is only torturing language.

26. Having discerned the knowledge of Brahman he should wish to remain with dispassion (lit. with the innocence of the child); a sage has realized the Atman when he has the lore of Brahman and dispassion.

27. When all desires which cling to the heart have been shed, then the man becomes immortal and he enjoys the (bliss of) Brahman here (itself).

28. Then indeed, Oh Brahman, he who abandons this asceticism which is the highest spiritual life, becomes a child-murderer, a murderer of a Brahmana, a killer of an embryo, a great sinner. He, who abandons this steady life pertaining to Vishnu (i.e. the external and internal discipline in spiritual life), becomes a thief, a seducer of his preceptor's wife, treacherous to a friend, ungrateful; he is denied all (auspicious) worlds. This has been declared in the Vedic verse – A thief, a drinker of spirituous liquor, a seducer of his preceptor's wife and one treacherous to his friend get purified by expiation; (but) one who abandons the sign of Vishnu, external or internal, which he was possessing, will never be purified in spite of all his self-exertions.

29. Abandoning the sign of Vishnu-worship, external or internal, he who resorts to his stage of life or no (prescribed) stage at all, or returns (to his former way of living prior to renunciation) – to that great fool (and to people of his kind) there is no liberation seen even in tens of millions of eons.

30. Abandoning all other stages of life a wise man should live for long in the stage of life leading to liberation. There is no liberation possible to one who has fallen from the stage leading to final beatitude.

31. Having embraced asceticism, if one does not remain observing its laws, he is to be known as 'fallen from grace' (arudhachyuta) – such is the Vedic injunction.

32. Then indeed, Oh Brahmana, when (a wise man) has embraced this age old spiritual life pertaining to Vishnu and remains without transgressing it, he becomes self-controlled, worthy of being remembered as auspicious, a (true) knower of the world, a knower of the Vedanta, a knower of Brahman, omniscient, self-luminous; he becomes the supreme God Brahman, he redeems from (the misery of) worldly life his ancestors, relations by marriage, (other) kinsmen, associates and friends.

33. When a wise man renounces the world, those belonging to his family become blessed in this world, a hundred generations before him and three hundred generations after him.

34. The scripture says that a very pious mendicant monk redeems thirty generations of his family after him, thirty generations before him and thirty generations after those that follow (the first thirty).

35. The Vedic teaching is that the ancestors of (a wise man) are redeemed if he were to say that he has renounced even while his final breath remains in his throat (i.e. just before death).

36. Hence, Oh Brahmana, wise men have said that this age old lore of the Self, the discipline pertaining to Vishnu, shall not be expounded till one has oneself realized (the goal) and (that) not to one who has not studied the Veda, has not the conviction of the Self, has not freed himself from attachment, has not become pure, has not approached (to receive this of his own accord), and who has not made earnest efforts (to know them). This has been said in a Vedic verse (as well):

Once (Brahma-)Vidya approached (the god) Brahma and said: ‘Guard me, I am your treasure. Do not reveal me to one who is envious, crooked or crafty. Thus shall I be of potent strength’.
37. This discipline of the Atman pertaining to Vishnu (i.e. this lore to realize Brahman) shall be revealed to a person after a careful test as to whether he is of pure conduct, attentive, intelligent, observes celibacy and has approached (the Guru of his own accord for receiving instruction).
38. With those ascetics who have been taught (the scripture) by a Guru and who do not honour him in word, thought and deed, the Guru does not dine; similarly (good ascetics) do not eat the food (from houses where the ill-mannered receive alms). Such is the (injunction of the) scripture.
39. The Guru is the supreme righteousness (Dharma); the Guru alone is the sole means (of liberation). He who honours not his Guru who gives (initiation into) the single syllable (Om which is Brahman) has all his scriptural learning, penance and spiritual wisdom oozed out as water from an unbaked clay vessel.
40. He who has supreme faith in God and the same faith in his Guru is a knower of Brahman, who reaches supreme beatitude. Such is the teaching of the Veda. Thus (ends) the Upanishad.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

First Chapter

Hari Om. Narada approached Lord Brahma and requested him, "Oh, God please teach me that knowledge of Brahman by which all sins can be destroyed quickly and the wisdom of Brahman is realized and one is blessed with all the wealth." Lord Brahma told as follows:

The one who masters the mantras for which Lord Hayagreeva is the master would know Sruthi (heard knowledge), Smrithi (memorized knowledge), Ithihasas (history) and Puranas (epics) and would be blessed with all types of wealth. Those Mantras are as follows: 1.1

Hey, Lord Hayagreeva, who is the form of the holy mind, who saves everybody and who is the King of Knowledge, Salutations to you, Swaha, Swaha. 1.2

Hey , Lord Hayagreeva, who has the form of Rig, Yajur and Sama Vedas, who brought these Vedas to earth, who has the shape of the singing of Pranava, and who has a horse head, Salutations to you, Swaha, Swaha. 1.3

Hey Lord Hayagreeva, who is being sung by the song of Pranava, who is the God for all those Gods of words, who is the personification of all Vedas, and who is beyond thought, teach us everything . Salutations to you, Swaha, Swaha. 1.4

For the 29 lettered mantra of Hayagreeva, Brahma, Athri ,Surya and Bhargava are the sages, Gayathri, Trushtup and Anushtup are the meters, God is Hayagreeva himself, root is the sound "Lhowm (hsowm), Strength (Shakthi) is Hoham, Keelaga (the nail) is Lhoom (Shoom), Viniyoga is Bhoga, Moksha and the symbolic rite with hands is the letters Aa, Uu and Ma.

The prayer is:
I meditate on that Hayagreeva,
Who has the glitter of the full moon,
Who holds the conch, wheel, the great stamp and the book in his hands.

The 29 lettered Hayagreeva mantra is:
Om Sreem, lhowm (Hsowm), Om Namo Bhagawathe, Hayagreevaya, Vishnave, Mahyam, Medham, Pragnam, Prayascha Swaha! 1.5

The 28 lettered Hayagreeva mantra is:
Om, Sreem, Im, Im, Im , Kleem, Kleem, Sow, Sow, Hreem, Om Namo Bhagawathe, Mahyam, Medham Pragnam, Prayascha Swaha! 1.6

Second Chapter

I will now tell you that 'Hayagreeva knowledge' of Brahman which is of one letter. That is the root letter Lhoum (hsoum). Among all the roots, this Hayagreeva single letter root is the king of mantras. 2.1

Chanting of the mantra "Lhoum (hsoum) Amrutham Kuru Swaha!", gives one the mastery over words, wealth and the eight occult powers. 2.2

The mantra "Lhoum (hsoum) Sakala Samrajya Sidhim Kuru Kuru Swaha" tells us the secret of the great Vedic sayings like "Pragnanam Anandam Brahma (Brahmam is the realized happiness)", "Tat Tvam Asi (You are it)", "Ayam Atma Brahma (My soul is Brahma)" and "Aham Brahmasmi (I am Brahmam)". The same letter "Lhoum" and "hsoum" are the same vowels though different and give worldly pleasures and salvation respectively. 2.3

After the chanting of Hayagreeva Mantra, it is normal to chant the Vedic mantras starting with

1.Yad Vak Vadanthi…. 2. Gowrimimaya… 3 Oshtapidhana and 4. Sa Sarpareeramathim…… 2.4-2.7

One who reads this 'Hayagreeva knowledge' of Brahmam on the Ekadasi day, would become a great man because of the blessings of Hayagreeva. He would get salvation. Upanishad says, "the knowledge of Brahmam which is taught with the mantra ending with 'Om Namo Brahmane' would never leave his heart".

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;

May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being!
Om! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Hayagrivopanishad, as contained in the Atharva-Veda.

Dattatreya Upanishad

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Once Brahma the creator asked Lord Narayana about the efficacy of the Taraka-Mantra to which the latter replied:
"Always think of Me and My glory, and be in commune with Me in the attitude 'I am Datta, the great Lord.' Such ones who meditate thus do not swirl in the recurring course of worldly existence."

Accordingly, after meditating on Lord Vishnu (Dattatreya), Brahma said: "Yes. The Brahman that is the infinite and peerless alone remains as the residuum after negation of everything else."

The one-, six-, eight-, twelve-, and sixteen-syllable mantras of Dattaatreya:
The Taraka monosyllable is 'Daam'. He is the Hamsa established in all beings. 'Daam' in the lengthened form is the Paramatman. The six syllable one is 'OM, Shreem, Hreem, Kleem, Glaum, Draam.

The eight-syllable one is 'Dram' or 'Draam' and then adding to it the syllables 'Da, tta, tre, ya, ya, Na, mah." The portion 'Dattatreya' is of the character of knowledge, existence, and bliss, and that of Namah is of full- blown bliss.

The twelve-syllable formula is 'Om, Aam, Hreem, Krom, Ehi Dattatreya svaha.' The sixteen-syllable formula is Om, Aim, Krom, Kleem, Klaum, Hram, Hreem, Hraum, Sauh (nine) and the five syllables constituting Dattatreyaya, and the twin syllable Svaha. The whole formula is 'Om, Aim, Krom, Kleem, Klaum, Hram, Hreem Hraum, Sauh Dattatreyaya Svaha.'

The Anushtubh-mantra of Dattaatreya

All the portions of the mantra are said to be in the vocative forms right through as 'Dattatreya Hare Krishna Unmatananda-dayaka, Digambara, Mune, Bala, Pishacha, Jnana Sagara.'

The Moola-Mantra of Dattaatreya.

This is then given as:
'Om Namo Bhagavate Dattatreyaya, Smarana-Matra-Samtushtaya!

OM salutations unto Lord Dattatreya who is propitiated by remembrance (devotion),

Maha-Bhaya-Nirvanaya, Maha-Jnana-Pradaya, Chidanandatmane - That is the dispeller of great fears, who bestows the highest character of sentience and bliss.

Balonmatta-Pishacha-Veshaya - Who is in the guise of a child, a mad-man, a devil.

Thus:
Maha Yogine Avadhutaya, Anasuyananda-Vardhanayatri-Putraya - A great yogin, is the enhancer of the bliss of Anasuya (His mother), is the son of the sage Atri.

Sarva-Kama-Phala-Pradaya, Bhava-Bandha-Mochanaya - Who bestows the fruits of all the desires of the devotee's heart, the redeemer of the bonds of worldly existence.

Sarva Mantra Sarva Yantra Sarva Tantra Sarva Pallava Svaruupaya Iti Om Namah Shivaya Om!

Unto Thee of the real form of incantations, all mystic symbols and powers, etc. Om salutations!

Om salutations unto Lord Dattatreya who is propitiated by remembrance (devotion), that is the dispeller of great fears, who bestows the highest character of sentience and bliss and who is in the guise of a child, a mad- man, a devil, a great yogin, is the enhancer of the bliss of Anasuya (His mother), is the son of the sage Atri, who bestows the fruits of all the desires of the devotee's heart, the redeemer of the bonds of worldly existence. Do thou nourish my body, counteract the malignant influences of the planets, cure the ailments, drive off anguish, melt away all penury, fill the mind with joy...unto Thee of the real form of incantations, all mystic symbols and powers, etc. Om Salutations!

He who knows all about this Vidya and practices this becomes holy, and he attains the fruits of having muttered the Gayatri, the Maha Rudra, and the Pranava innumerable times, and he is absolved of all his sins.

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !

Garuda Upanishad

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Om! That (world) is a complete whole. This (world) too is a complete whole. From the complete whole only, the (other) complete whole rose. Even after removing the complete whole from the (other) complete whole, still the complete whole remains unaltered and undisturbed.
Om Shanti! Shanti! Shanti!
I will preach the Brahman – science. Brahman taught it to Narada, Narada to Brhatsena, Brhatsena to Indra, Indra to Bharadvaja, Bharadvaja to his puils who desired to preserve their life.
(He taught them the science) which achieves this, which achieves good, removes poison, destroys poison, overcomes poison and annihilates poison:
"Struck is the poison, annihilated is the poison, destroyed is the poison; it is struck by Intra's thunder-bolt, Svaha! May it originate from snakes, from vipers, from scorpions, from cankers, from salamanders, from amphibious animals or from rats".
"May you be Anantaka's messenger, or be Anantaka himself! May you be Vasuki's messenger, or be Vasuki himself! May you be Taksaka's messenger, or be Taksaka himself! May you be Karkotaka's messenger, or be Karkotaka himself! May you be Samkhapulika's messenger, or be Samkhapulika himself! May you be Padmaka's messenger, or be Padmaka himself! May you be Maha Padmaka's messenger, or be Maha Padmaka himself! May you be Elapatraka's messenger, or be Elapatraka himself! May you be Mahailapatraka's messenger, or be Mahailapatraka himself! May you be Kalika's messenger, or be Kalika himself! May you be Kulika's messenger, or be Kulika himself! May you be Kambalasvatara's messenger, or be Kambalasvatara himself!"

For twelve years snakes do not bite him who hears this great science on the new moon night. The snakes do not bite him as long as he lives who, having recited this great science on the new moon night, wears it (as an amulet).

He who teaches it to eight Brahmanas he releases (from the effects of snake bite) by merely touching with grass, with a piece of wood, with ashes. One who teaches it to a hundred Brahmanas, he releases by a mere glance. One who teaches it to a thousand Brahmanas, he releases by the mere thought – he releases it by the mere thought.

Thus spake the exalted Brahman – the exalted Brahman. This is the essence of the Garuda Upanishad.

Om! That (world) is a complete whole. This (world) too is a complete whole. From the complete whole only, the (other) complete whole rose. Even after removing the complete whole from the (other) complete whole, still the complete whole remains unaltered and undisturbed.

Om Shanti! Shanti! Shanti!

Om ! O Devas, may we hear with our ears what is auspicious;
May we see with our eyes what is auspicious, O ye worthy of worship !
May we enjoy the term of life allotted by the Devas,
Praising them with our body and limbs steady !
May the glorious Indra bless us !
May the all-knowing Sun bless us !
May Garuda, the thunderbolt for evil, bless us !
May Brihaspati grant us well-being !
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Kali Santarana Upanishad

Translated by K. Narayanasvami Aiyar

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Hari Om ! At the end of Dvapara-Yuga, Narada went to Brahma and addressed him thus: "O Lord, how shall I, roaming over the earth, be able to across Kali ?" To which Brahma thus replied: "Well asked. Hearken to that which all Shrutis (the Vedas) keep secret and hidden, through which one may cross the Samsara (mundane existence) of Kali. He shakes off (the evil effects of) Kali through the mere uttering of the name of the Lord Narayana, who is the primeval Purusha". Again Narada asked Brahma: "What is the name ?" To which Hiranyagarbha (Brahma) replied thus:
1. Hare Rama Hare Rama Rama Rama Hare Hare
Hare Krishna Hare Krishna Krishna Krishna Hare Hare
2. These sixteen names (words) are destructive of the evil effects of Kali. No better means than this is to be seen in all the Vedas.
These (sixteen names) destroy the Avarana (or the centripetal force which produces the sense of individuality) of Jiva surrounded by the sixteen Kalas (rays). Then like the sphere of the sun which shines fully after the clouds (screening it) disperse, Parabrahman (alone) shines."
Narada asked: ‘O Lord, what are the rules to be observed with reference to it ?" To which Brahma replied that there were no rules for it. Whoever in a pure or an impure state, utters these always, attains the same world of, or proximity with, or the same form of, or absorption into Brahma.
Whoever utters three and a half Crores (or thirty-five millions) times this Mantra composed of sixteen names (or words) crosses the sin of the murder of a Brahmana. He becomes purified from the sin of the theft of gold. He becomes purified from the sin of cohabitation with a woman of low caste. He is purified from the sins of wrong done to Pitris, Devas and men. Having given up all Dharmas, he becomes freed at once from all sins. He is at once released from all bondage. That he is at once released from all bondage is the Upanishad.

Hari Om Tat Sat !

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Jabali Upanishad

Translated by P. R. Ramachander
Published by celextel.org

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

The Sage Pippalada approached Sage Jabali and asked him, “Oh God like sage, please teach me the secret of the absolute philosophy. What is Thathwa (principle)? Who is Jeeva (being)? What is Pasu? Who is Ishwara? And what is the method for salvation?” Thus asked sage Jabali explained to him everything as follows:

Jeeva (being) is nothing but God (the Lord of all beings - Pasupathi) himself who is acting the role of egoism. That Jeeva (being) is the Pasu. Pasupathi is he who knows everything, who does the five jobs like creation, and who is the Lord of all beings. Pasu (in common parlance) are those animals which eat grass, which do not have viveka (knowledge to differentiate), which are driven by others, which are made to work in jobs like agriculture and which undergo lot of sufferings. Similar to the owner of such animals is the God Pasupathi who rules over all beings.

To the question, “What trick is there to acquire such knowledge?“. Jabali replied, “By wearing of the holy ash". He further told, “After taking the holy ash in hand by reciting the five Brahma mantras starting with ‘Sathyojatham’, and chanting “Agnirithi Basma (Hoy ash is fire)”, mix it with water by chanting, “Manasthoke” and then wear the holy ash in head, forehead and shoulders in sets of three lines chanting the three mantras “trayayusham”. Further wear these by chanting the three mantras starting with “Trayayusham” and the mantra “Tryambakam” is called Sambhava penance. Those with knowledge of Veda say that this has been told in all Vedas. For avoiding rebirth, the people with eternal wisdom, should adopt this.

Among the three lines, the first one is Garhapathya (the domestic fire), the letter Aa, the quality of Rajas, earth, Jeevathma (soul of beings), the power of creation, Rigveda, time of dawn and its God is Lord Brahma. The second line is Dakshinagni (Fire of the south), the letter Uu, the quality of Sathva, atmosphere, the soul inside the body, the power of desire, Yajurveda, the time of noon, and its God is Lord Vishnu. The third line is the Ahavaneeya agni (the fire of the Sun), the letter Ma, the quality of Thamas, the place of Gods, the Paramatma, the power of knowledge, Samaveda, the time of dusk and its God is Shiva. That individual, who wears holy ash, whether he is a Brahmachari or Sanyasi, gets rid of great as well as minor sins. He becomes fit to worship all gods; he becomes one who has taken bath in all holy waters and the one who has chanted all the Rudra mantras. He does not have rebirth. This Upanishad tells that, it is sworn that he will not have rebirth.

Om ! Let my limbs and speech, Prana, eyes, ears, vitality
And all the senses grow in strength.
All existence is the Brahman of the Upanishads.
May I never deny Brahman, nor Brahman deny me.
Let there be no denial at all:
Let there be no denial at least from me.
May the virtues that are proclaimed in the Upanishads be in me,
Who am devoted to the Atman; may they reside in me.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Saubhagya Lakshmi Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Speech is rooted in my thought (mind) and my thought is rooted in my speech.
Be manifest, patent, to me; be ye two, for me, the lynch-pins of the Veda.
Let not Vedic lore desert me.
With this mastered lore, I join day with night.
I shall speak what is right; I shall speak what is true.
Let that protect me; let that protect the speaker.
Let that protect me.
Let that protect the speaker, protect the speaker !
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

I-1: Then the Gods said to the Lord: Lord ! Expound for us the science of the Goddess of Prosperity.
I-2: The Lord, the primeval Narayana, replied: Be it so. With intent minds, all of you Gods, listen ! With the aid of the fifteen verses beginning with the verse 'hiranyavarnam' (of the hue of gold), etc., meditate on the four-armed Sri (the Goddess of Prosperity), whose form is that of the Fourth, who is beyond the Fourth, who is supreme over all, who is present in all consecrated seats, and who is encircled by the divinities of the seats, major and minor.
I-3: Now, the seers of the hymn on Sri consisting of fifteen verses are Ananda, Kardama, Chiklita and Indirasuta. Of the first verse, the seer is Sri. Of the (next) fourteen verses, the seers are Ananda etc. Of the first three verses, 'hiranyavarnam', etc., the metre is Anustubh. Of the verse 'kamso'smi', the metre is brihati, of the two others Tristubh (is the metre); of the next eight the metre is Anustubh. Of the remainder, the metre is Prastarapankti. The divinity is the Fire which is Sri. The seed is 'hiranyavarnam'. The power is 'kamso'smi'. The consecration of the limbs is (effected) with the words hiranmaya chandra rajatasraja hiranyasraja hiranya hiranyavarna, beginning with Om, ending with Namah (i.e. salutation), and having the nouns declined in the dative case. Next (follows) the consecration of the limbs with the triads of faces. With the verses of the Srisukta themselves consecrate, in order, the head, the eyes, the ears, the nose, the face, the neck, the two arms, the heart, the navel, the privies, the thighs, the knees and the shanks.

I-4: Seated in the spotless lotus
Coloured as its pollen heaps
Bearing in her lotus palms
Lotus pair and symbolled promise
Of fear dispelled and boons bestowed;
With jewelled crown and ornaments diverse
Wondrously adorned – Let Sri,
Mother of the world entire,
Promote our fortunes ever.

I-5: Her seat: With the goal kept in view, set down in the pericarp the seed-syllable' of Sri; and in the eight-petalled, twelve-petalled, and sixteen-petalled lotuses, the half verses of the Srisukta (hymn on Sri); outside it (the sixteen-petalled lotus), (set down) the verse 'yah sucih', etc., together with the alphabet (from a to la); (and outside, and all around) set down the 'seed-syllable' of Sri. Also, draw the ten limbs of the diagram. Then invoke the Goddess Sri.

I-6: With the limbs (e.g. 'SRAN salutation to the heart'), the first encasing (is accomplished); with Padma, etc., the second encasing; with the mantras of the Lords of the world, the third; with those of their weapons, the fourth encasing. With the hymn of Sri, invocations, etc., (must be made). Sixteen thousand utterances (of the hymn must be made).

I-7: Of the monosyllabic incantation of Rama, the Goddess of Prosperity, the seer, metre and deity are Bhrigu, Nicird-Gayatri and Sri. The power of the seed is SAM. The six limbs are SRIM, etc.

I-8: Abiding in the lotus, lotus-eyed,
Her home Sri Padmanabha's breast;
Her hands of lotus pair uphold,
And surety of gifts and fear dissolved.
Shining like to burnished gold
Bathed in waters held in jars
By trunks of elephant pair agleam
Like white and spotless clouds;
Her crown with clustered gems bedecked
In silk exceeding pure enrobed
With sweet unguents anointed
May Sri our welfare still promote.

I-9: Her seat: The seat of Rama (the Goddess of Prosperity] consists of eight petals, three circles, divisions comprising twelve houses, and four sides. In the pericarp (are inscribed) the seed of Sri, keeping the goal in view. Worship the nine powers with the words 'prosperity', 'elevation', 'glory', 'creation', 'honour', 'humility', 'individuality', 'upliftment', and 'welfare' in the dative case, each having Om in the beginning and Namah (salutation) in the end.

I-10: The first encasing is done with the limbs; the second with Vasudeva, etc.; the third with Balaki, etc.; the fourth with Indra, etc. The utterance (of the incantation has to be repeated) twelve lakhs of times.

I-11: Sri Lakshmi, the giver of boons, the spouse of Vishnu, the donor of wealth, of golden form, is decked with a garland of gold, and a chaplet of silver. She has the sheen of gold, is in a fortress of gold, and dwells in the lotus. She holds a lotus in her hand and loves the lotus. The pearl adorns her. She is the moon-goddess and the sun-goddess, is fond of bilva leaves and is mighty. She is enjoyment, release, prosperity, increase, true increase, the ploughing (and the) development. She is the giver of wealth and the mistress of wealth. She is faith, rich in enjoyments, the giver of enjoyments, the upholder, the ordainer – these and similar terms in the dative case, with Om in the beginning and Namah in the end, are the mantras. The seat has eight limbs with the monosyllable inscribed on it. A lakh (in number) are the utterances (of the incantations). The proposition is (made with) a tenth (of the lakh). The oblation is (made with) a hundredth part. The gratification of the twice-born is (won with) a thousandth part.

I-12: Adeptship in the science of Sri is reserved for those who are free from desires; never for those who cherish desires.

II-1: Then the gods said to Him: Expound the principle indicated by the fourth (i.e. the final) Maya. 'Be it so', said He:
Yoga through yoga must be known;
From yoga, yoga does increase;
Who through yoga is ever alert,
That Yogin long delights therein.
II-2: Awake from sleep, eating but little
When food consumed is digested aright,
At ease be seated in a spot secluded,
Untroubled by pests, ever free of desire –
Such is effort. Else restrain the breath
And stray not from the path of practice.
II-3: Filling the mouth with breath, and in Fire's seat
Drawing the down-breath, there arresting,
With fingers six of hands, from thumbs commencing
Stopping the ears, eyes and nostrils, too,
Yogins behold along this way
The inner light; their minds wrapt in the course
Of varied musings on the sacred Om.
II-4: Ears, mouth, eyes and nostrils must, perforce,
Be by yoga stopped;
Clear and flawless then is heard the note
In cleansed Susumna's channel.
II-5: In Anahata, then,
Resonant with strange notes, a sound is heard.
Sacred becomes the yogin's body; thus
With splendour filled and odour heavenly
He is ill no longer;
II-6: His heart is filled;
When heart-space resounds, a Yogin he Becomes; snapping the second knot, flows
At once the breath to middle region.
II-7: Poised in lotus seat and others, too,
Firm established must the Yogin be.
The knot of Vishnu, then rent asunder
Delight wells up supreme.
II-8: Beyond Anahata, 'the unstruck note',
Rises the drum's resounding sound;
With energy, piercing Rudra's knot
The maddala's note is heard.
II-9: The vital breath moves on to Largest Space,
The sure abode of all perfections; thence,
Ignoring mind's delight, the breath pervades
All yogic seats.
II-10: Yoga achieved, the all-pervading sound

Tinkles and hence is ‘the tinkler’ styled.
Then, integrated, the mind is adored
Of sages like Sanaka and the rest.
II-11: Identifying the finite with the infinite,
The fragments with the Whole, one meditates
On the vast Source; thus fulfilment found
One immortal becomes.
II-12: Through unity with Self, prevent contact
With others; so too, through Self’s being Oppose ought else’s self; thus, becoming
Truth supreme, of all dualities free,
Supreme is one for ever.
II-13: Renounce the sense of I; yea,
Of this world, of appearance so unlike.
Never again is sorrow for the sage,
Rooted in Truth transcendent.
II-14: Like salt in water melted and fused,
So self and mind in oneness are blended.
That concentration is styled.
II-15: Breath dwindles and mind dissolves
And Bliss homogeneous is found.
This is concentration.
II-16: Fusion of lower and higher selves
Free from all imaginings,
Is styled concentration.
II-17: Rid of the light of wakefulness,
And of the mind that dreams;
Rid of sleep that knows none other,
Free of all that causes pain;
Total void without reflections –
Such is concentration.
II-18: Through ceaseless concentrated sight
When thought of body there is nought;
Then unstirring Self is realized –
This, concentration is called.
II-19: Whithersoever the mind wanders
There, just there, is the prime abode;
There, just there, is supreme Brahman
That abides alike everywhere.

III-1: Next, the gods said to Him: Teach us how to discern the nine wheels. ‘Be it similarly’, said He: At the base is the wheel of Brahman shaped like a threefold circle of waves. In that root is a power. One should meditate on it in the form of fire. Just there is the seat in the form of desires; it yields the objects of all desires. Such is the basic wheel.

III-2: The second is the wheel of Svadhisthana; it has six petals. In the centre of it is a west-faced phallus. One should meditate on it as resembling a sprout of coral. Right there is the ‘seat of the girdle’, yielding the power to attract the world.

III-3: The third is the wheel of the navel, a wide whirlpool with a form crooked like a serpent’s. Meditate in its centre on the ‘serpent power’, effulgent like a crore of rising suns and resembling lightning. It has the power of competence and yields all perfections. It is the wheel (called) Manipuraka.

III-4: The wheel of the heart has eight petals and it faces below. In its centre, on the phallus of light, one should meditate. The symbol (of the divine Power), here, is the swan. She is beloved of all and enchants all the worlds.
III-5: The wheel of the throat (extends over) the breadth of four fingers. There on the left is Ida, the moon-nerve; on the right is Pingala, the sun-nerve. In its centre, on Susumna of fair colour, one should meditate. Who knows thus becomes the donor of the perfection of Anahata ('the unstruck note').
III-6: The wheel of the palate: There flows the immortal elixir; the image of the tiny bell is in the orifice whence is suspended 'the royal tooth' (the uvula) the tenth opening. One should meditate on the void there. The dissolution of the mind-stuff takes place.
III-7: The seventh, the wheel of the brow, is of the measure of the thumb. There, on the eye of knowledge, shaped like a tongue of flame, one should meditate. That is the root of the skull, the wheel of Ajna, the giver of power over words.
III-8: The Brahman-orifice is the wheel of nirvana. There should one meditate on the opening shaped like a thread of smoke, thinner than a needle. There is the seat of meshes, the yielder of release. Therefore, it is the wheel of supreme Brahman.
III-9: The ninth is the wheel of space. There is the lotus with sixteen petals, facing upwards. Its pericarp in the middle is shaped like the ''riple peaks''(the centre of the eyebrows). In its centre one should meditate on the upgoing power, the supreme void. There indeed is the seat of the 'full mount', the instrument of fulfilment of all desires.
III-10: Whoso constantly studies this Upanishad is purified by fire and by air; he comes in possession of all wealth, grains, good sons, wife, horses, lands, elephants, animals, she-buffaloes, female attendants, yoga, and knowledge. No more does he return. Such is the mystic doctrine.

Sarasvati-Rahasya Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

1. The sages, verily, with due reverence, asked the holy Asvalayana: How is that knowledge won which illumines the content of the word Tat ? Tell us that, Holy Sir, by meditation on which you know the Truth.
2. Best of Sages ! I won supreme perfection by exalting Sarasvati with the reciting of the ten verses on Her, as also the Ric stanzas with the 'seed-syllables'.
3. The sages said: How, by what meditation, Sage of Dedicated Life, is the truth of Sarasvati won ? What pleases the great and sacred goddess Sarasvati ? Speak.
4. Asvalayana then spoke: Of this great mantra of the ten verse on Sarasvati, I, Asvalayana, am the seer. The eight-syllabled Anustubh is the metre; the holy Vagisvari, the divinity; 'yadvak' is the seed; 'devim vacham' the power; 'pra no devi' the lynch-pin; the application (of the mantra) is for pleasing Her; the consecration of limbs is by (invoking) faith, intelligence, wisdom, memory, the goddess of speech and Mahasarasvati.
5. To win plenitude of speech, in my heart I salute the goddess Sarasvati, who shines like snow, pearls, camphor and the moon; who confers auspicious blessing; is decked with garlands of golden Champaka blossoms; and charms the mind by her figure with the lofty, rounded bosom.
6. Of this mantra (pra no devi), Bharadvaja is the seer; Gayatri, the metre; Sri Sarasvati, the divinity; OM, the seed, power and lynch-pin; its application is for gaining whatever is desired; consecration is with the mantra.
7. Her nature the essence of Vedanta's sense,

She the Supreme Sovereign,
Manifest as name and form –
May Sarasvati guard me !
8. OM !
May the goddess Sarasvati,
Dispenser of nourishment,
Guardian of thoughts,
Protect us ever !

9. Of this mantra (a no divah), Atri is the seer; Tristubh, the metre; Sarasvati, the divinity; HRIM, the seed, power and lynch-pin; its application is for gaining whatever is desired; its application is for gaining whatever is desired; consecration of limbs is with the mantra.

10. The only one extolled in Vedas four
And their ancillaries; the non-dual Potency of Brahman – May She, divine
Sarasvati, protect me !
11. HRIM
From heaven, from the giant clouds,
Let holy Sarasvati come
To our sacrifice; listening
Kindly to the call, may the Queen
Of Waters gladly hear our sweet words !

By sages looking inwardly;
Pervasive, one, form of awareness,
May Sarasvati protect me !

Speech is confined to four groups of words.
These, intelligent Brahmans know.
Hidden in the cave, the three do not stir --
The fourth group men speak forth.
24. Of this mantra (yadvak), the seer is Bhargava; Tristubh, the metre; Sarasvati, the divinity; KLIM, the seed, power and lynch-pin; consecration is with the mantra.
25. Being conceived in eightfold form
Of names, general and the like,
She as the integral is manifest –

The Queen of gods dwells silently;
Power milks four energy-streams;
Whither has fled Her supreme form ?
27. Of this mantra (devim vacham), the seer is Bhargava; Tristubh, the metre; Sarasvati, the divinity; SAUH, the seed, power and lynch-pin; consecration is with the mantra.

Though seeing, one does nor behold
Speech; though hearing one does not hear;
To one She does reveal Herself,
As does a well-robed wife in love
Unto her lord.

33. Of this mantra (ambitame), Gritsamada is the seer; Anustubh, the metre; Sarasvati, the divinity; AIM, the seed, power and lynch-pin; consecration is with the mantra.

Of whom the form is the One Brahman,
May that Sarasvati protect me !
35. AIM
Dearest mother ! Best of rivers !
Greatest goddess ! Sarasvati !
Unbelauded are we, almost –
Mother ! Make for us great name !
36. Female swan amidst the cluster
Of the faces of the four-faced god –
May the all-white Sarasvati
Sport for ever in my mind !
37. Bowing to Thee, Sarada !
Dweller in Kashmir's city,
The I petition for ever –
Grant me the gift of right knowledge !
38. Holding in Thy hands the string
Of beads, the goad, the noose, the book,
Wearing the necklace of pearls,
Reside Thou ever in my speech !
39. Thy neck is as the conch; thy lip
Deep red; decked with all ornaments
Art thou, goddess Sarasvati !
Great One ! reside on my tongue-tip !
40. Faith, grasp, intelligence Thou art,
Goddess of Speech, spouse of Brahma;
Thy home, the tongue-tip of devout
Souls; Thou the giver of virtues,
Such as restraint of mind's movements.
41. Obeisance to Thee, O Bhavani !
Whose tresses deck the crescent moon.
Thou art the stream of nectar that
Extinguishes samsara's heat.
42. Whoso the gift of faultless poesy,
And enjoyment and Freedom seeks,
With these ten verses, worshipping ever,
Bestows rich praise on Sarasvati,
43. To him who thus unfailingly
Worships and lauds Sarasvati,
Who has both faith and devotion,
Conviction comes in six brief months.
44. From him streams forth Sarasvati
Spontaneous, lovely-lettered,
In sounds of poetry and prose
Of import true and unmeasured.
45. A text unheard the poet grasps;

Sarasvati’s being he shares.
46. Sarasvati thus spake:
Through Me even Brahma won
Self-knowledge eternal;
Ever being Truth, Knowledge, Bliss,
Mine is perpetual Brahmanhood,
Without let or hindrance.
47. Thence through equilibrium
Of qualities, Sattva, Rajas, Tamas, become
I Prakriti; in Me
Chit’s semblance shines,
As reflection in mirror fair.
48. Once more, Prakriti shines
Threefoldwise, through that
Reflection of the Chit;
And as determined by
Prakriti, am I Purusha too verily.
49. The Unborn, in Maya
In which pure Sattva reigns,
Is reflected; Maya,
Prakriti is, that has
Sattva dominant.
50. That Maya is adjunct,
Wholly subordinate
To all-knowing Ishwara;
For, His alone oneness,
Over Maya lordship, and
Omniscience are, in truth.
51. Being of Sattva made,
In essence collective,
Of worlds the spectator,
He is God who holds power
To make, unmake or otherwise
Make the universe; He
Has virtues like all-knowingness.
52. Maya has forces two; one projection,
The other, concealment: the first projects
The world – all that is subtle and all gross.
53. The second veils, within, the gulf
Between the Seer and seen; without,
The gulf between creation and Brahman.
Maya causes endless cosmic flux.
54. Nescience appears in Witness-light,
To subtle body conjoined,
Spirit and mind co-dwelling there
Become jiva phenomenal.
55. His Jivahood,
Through ascription shines forth, also,

In Witness-light; together with
The fall of what conceals, and so,
The shining forth of distinction,
That (Jivahood) disappears, too.
56. So also, through subservience
Of Brahman to the Power which
Veils Its difference from cosmos,
Brahman shines forth in mutations.
57. Here, too, the difference that holds
Between Brahman and the cosmos
Shows not, once Maya’s power which
Conceals falls low; their difference
Is in creation; in Brahman never.
58. Five factors are there here; being,
Shining, loving, form, and name, too;
The first three to Brahman pertain;
Two others constitute the world.
59. Leave aside the last two factors,
Be intent on the former three;
Either in the heart, or without,
Practise always concentration.
60-63. Twofold is concentration
In the human heart: with or without Aspects; that with aspects is, then,
Twofold, conforming to ‘word’
And ‘object’; desire and its train
Are objects of the mind; of them,
As spectator, meditate on Consciousness: that concentration
Conforms to objects. ‘I without Taints am; being, knowing, loving
I am; self-shining, devoid of
Duality’: to ‘word’ conforms.
Thus concentration with aspects.
Abandoning ‘objects’ and ‘words’
For joy of deep Self-experience,
One wins concentration without
Aspects: a flame in windless spot.
64. Like to concentration
In the heart, outside too, in some Object twofold concentration
Takes place with discrimination
Of name and form from pure Being.
65. The third, as said above, takes place
When taste of bliss to silence leads;
Time may, without a break, be spent
In these six concentrations well.
66. With conceit in body gone,
And Supreme Self realized,

Wherever the mind may roam
There rests immortality.
The knot of heart is cut asunder
And all doubts are slain;
67. All modes of action dwindle away
When the Supreme Self is seen.
68. A finite soul, the supreme God –
These notions are to Me imputed.
They are not real – who knows this,
In truth, is free – doubt is there none.

This is the secret wisdom.

Om ! May He protect us both together; may He nourish us both together;
May we work conjointly with great energy,
May our study be vigorous and effective;
May we not mutually dispute (or may we not hate any).
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Bahvricha Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! Speech is rooted in my thought (mind) and my thought is rooted in my speech.
Be manifest, patent, to me; be ye two, for me, the lynch-pins of the Veda.
Let not Vedic lore desert me.
With this mastered lore, I join day with night.
I shall speak what is right; I shall speak what is true.
Let that protect me; let that protect the speaker.
Let that protect me.
Let that protect the speaker, protect the speaker !
Om ! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

1. Om. The Goddess was indeed one in the beginning. Alone she emitted the world-egg. (She) is known as Love's Part (IM). (She) is known as the half-syllabic instant after OM.
2. Of Her was Brahma born; was Vishnu born; was Rudra born. All wind-gods were born, celestial minstrels, nymphs, semi-human beings playing on instruments, were born (of Her), all around. What is enjoyed was born; everything was born (of Her). Everything of Power was born (of Her). The egg-born, the sweat-born, the seed-born, the womb-born, whatever breathes here, the stationary as well as the moving, and man were born (of Her).
3. She, here, is the Power supreme. She, here, is the science of Sambhu, (known) either as the science beginning with ka, or as the science beginning with ha, or as the science beginning with sa. This is the secret Om grounded in the word Om.
4. Pervading the three cities, the three bodies, illuminating within and without, She, the Consciousness within, becomes the Maha-Tripura-Sundari, being associated with space, time and objects.
5. She alone is Atman. Other than Her is untruth, non-self. Hence is She Brahman-Consciousness, free from (even) a tinge of being and non-being. She is the Science of Consciousness, non-dual Brahman Consciousness, a wave of Being-Consciousness-Bliss. The Beauty of the three-great-cities, penetrating without and within, is resplendent, non-dual, self-subsisting. What is, is pure Being; what shines is pure Consciousness; what is dear is Bliss. So here is the Maha-Tripura-Sundari who assumes all forms. You and I and all the world and all divinities and all besides are the Maha-Tripura-Sundari. The sole Truth is the thing named ‘the Beautiful’. It is the non-dual, integral, supreme Brahman.

6. The fivefold form relinquished
And effects like space transcended,
Remains the one, the great being,
The supreme Ground, the only Truth.
7. It is declared either that ‘Brahman is Consciousness’ or that ‘I am Brahman’. In dialogue it is said: ‘Thou art That’; or ‘This Atman is Brahman’; or ‘I am Brahman’; or ‘Brahman alone am I’.
8. She who is contemplated as ‘That which I am’ or ‘I am He’ or ‘What He is that I am’, is the Sodasi, the Science of Sri, the fifteen-syllabled (science), the sacred Maha-Tripura-Sundari, the Virgin, the Mother, Bagala, the Matangi, the auspicious one who chooses her own Partner, the Mistress of the world, Chamunda, Chanda, the Power of the Boar, She who veils, the royal Matangi, dark like a parrot, light dark, mounted on a horse; opposed to Angiras; smoke-bannered; Power of Savitur, Sarasvati, Gayatri, part of Brahmic bliss.
9. The songs of praise dwell in the highest sphere
Where dwell all gods;
With Ric what will he do who knows not this ?
They who know this well, they dwell all right;
This is the secret science.

Om ! Speech is rooted in my thought (mind) and my thought is rooted in my speech.
Be manifest, patent, to me; be ye two, for me, the lynch-pins of the Veda.
Let not Vedic lore desert me.
With this mastered lore, I join day with night.
I shall speak what is right; I shall speak what is true.
Let that protect me; let that protect the speaker.
Let that protect me.
Let that protect the speaker, protect the speaker !
Om! Peace ! Peace ! Peace !

Muktika Upanishad

Translated by Dr. A. G. Krishna Warrier
Published by The Theosophical Publishing House, Chennai

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

I-i-1-6. In the beautiful city of Ayodhya, in the centre of a pavilion set with gems, together with Sita, Bharata, Lakshmana and Satrughna, was Rama seated, glorified day and night by sages like Sanaka, Vasistha and Suka as well as other devotees, unchanging witness of thousands of modifications of the intellect, delighted in contemplating his own form. At the end of this Samadhi, Hanuman asked with devotion, ‘O Rama, you are the supreme being, of the nature of Sat, Chid and Ananda. I desire to know your nature truly for liberation. Please tell me how I can be released from bondage without strain.
I-i-7-14. Rama: Well asked. I shall tell you. I am well established in Vedanta.
Hanuman: What is Vedanta and where is it ?
Rama: The Vedas in all their great extent are my breath, Vedanta is well grounded in them, like oil in sesamum.
Hanuman: How many are the Vedas and how many branches do they have ? Of these what are the Upanishads ?
Rama: Vedas are four, Rig-Veda etc., many branches and Upanishads exist in them. Rig-Veda has 21 branches and Yajus has 109. Sama has 1000 and Atharva has 50. Each branch has one Upanishad. Even by reading one verse of them with devotion, one gets the status of union with me, hard to get even by sages.
I-i-15-17. Hanuman: Rama, sages speak differently: some say there is only one kind of liberation. Others say it can be got by worshipping your name and by the Taraka mantra at Kashi. Others speak of Sankhya-Yoga and Bhakti-Yoga, the enquiry into Vedanta-Vakyas etc.

I-i-18-23. Rama: Liberation is of four kinds: Salokya etc. But the only real type is Kaivalya. Anybody even though leading a wicked life, attains Salokya, not other worlds, by worshipping my name. Dying in the sacred Brahmanala in Kashi, he will get the Taraka-mantra and also liberation, without rebirth. On dying anywhere (else) in Kashi, Maheshvara will utter the Taraka-mantra in his right ear. He gets Sarupya with me as his sins are washed away.
The same is called Salokya and Sarupya. Persevering in good conduct, with mind fixed upon me, loving me as the Self of all, the twice-born gets nearer to me – This is called the three forms of liberation. Salokya, Sarupya and Samipya.
I-i-24-25. Meditating on my eternal form as prescribed by the Teacher, one will surely achieve identity with me like the insects changing into the bee. This alone is the liberation of identity (Sayujya) yielding the bliss of Brahman.
All these four kinds of Mukti will be got by worshipping Me.
I-i-26-29. But by what means is the Kaivalya kind of Moksha got ? The Mandukya is enough; if knowledge is not got from it, then study the Ten Upanishads. Getting knowledge very soon, you will reach my abode. If certainty is not got even then, study the 32 Upanishads and stop. If desiring Moksha without the body, read the 108 Upanishads. Hear their order.

I-i-40-43. These destroy three kinds of Bhavana (regarding) body, senses and mind respectively as identified with Atman. The best of Brahmanas will become Jivanmuktas if they study upto the destruction of Prarabdha, these 108 Upanishads from a Guru along with the Shanti-pada. Then, in course of time they will get Vedeha-mukti, surely.

I-i-44-52. These 108 are the essence of all Upanishads and can cut away all sins by merely hearing once. These cause release whether read with or without knowledge. One may give away a kingdom, wealth etc., to one who asks, but not these 108 to just anyone – to an unbeliever (nastika), ungrateful, of bad conduct, one against devotion to me, deluded by wrong scripture or lacking devotion to the Guru.

But they shall be taught to one devoted to service, devotee, of good conduct, birth and wisdom. He should be well tested. A Rik verse on this: the goddess of knowledge came to a Brahmana and said ‘Protect me, I am your treasure, do not teach me to one who is jealous, dishonest and deceitful – then I shall powerful, but give it to one who is learned, careful, wise and celibate, after examining him’.

I-ii-1. Then Maruti asked Sri Ramachandra thus: Please relate to me separately the Shanti-mantras of the different Vedas, Rig etc.

Sri Rama then said: "My speech rests on my mind … " [Vanme-Manasi….]. This is the Shanti-mantra of the following ten Upanishads forming part of the Rig-Veda:

1. Aitareya

2. Kaushitakibrahmana

I-ii-6. Men who are seekers after Liberation and well-equipped with the four requisite means ! Approach properly, with gifts in the hands, a good teacher who is dedicated, belonging to a good family, well-versed in the Vedas, interested in the scriptures, of good quality, straightforward, interested in the welfare of all creatures, compassionate and learn in the prescribed manner the one hundred and eight Upanishads; study them through listening, reflection and deep absorption continuously; the accumulated Karmas will be dissolved, the three kinds of bodies (gross, subtle and causal) are abandoned and like the ether of the pot when released from its Upadhi, rise to the level of fullness called Videha-mukti. This indeed is the Absolute Liberation (Kaivalya-mukti). That is why even those in the Brahma-loka, get identity with Brahman after listening to the Upanishads from his mouth. And for everyone Absolute Liberation is stated to be (attainable) only through knowledge; not through Karma rituals, not through Sankhya-Yoga or worship. Thus the Upanishad.

II-i-1. Then Hanuman asked Ramachandra: What is this Jivanmukti, Videha-mukti ? What is the authority, means of success and purpose ? Rama said: For a person there is bondage from doer-ship, enjoyer-ship, pleasure, pain etc., -- their prevention is liberation in the body. Videha-mukti (liberation without the body) is from the destruction of Prarabdha (operative) karma, like the space in a pot released from the conditioning (enclosing) pot. For both the authority is the 108 Upanishads. The purpose is eternal happiness through the stopping of the misery of doer-ship etc. This can be achieved by human effort just as a son is got by putra-kama sacrifice, wealth by trade etc., and heaven by jyotistoma.

II-ii-1-9. There are these verses: Human effort is said to be of the two kinds: For and against the Shastras – the former gives disaster, the latter the ultimate reality. True knowledge does not come to one from latent impressions through the world, Shastras and the body. Such impressions are two-fold: good and bad; if you are induced by the good, you shall reach me gradually but quickly; the bad ones involved lead to trouble and should be overcome with effort. The river of impression flowing through good and bad paths, must be turned into the good path with human effort – One should fondle the mind-child with human effort. When by means of practice, good impressions arise, then the practice has been fruitful. Even when this is in doubt, practice only the good tendencies – there shall be no fault.

II-ii-10-15. The destruction of impressions, cultivation of knowledge and destruction of the mind, when practised together for long will yield fruit. If not practised together, there will be no success even after hundreds of years, like mantras which are scattered. When these three are practised long, the knots of the heart surely are broken, like lotus fibre and the stalk. The false impression of worldly life is got in a hundred lives and cannot be destroyed without long practice. So avoid desire of enjoyment as a distance with effort and practise the three.

II-ii-16. The wise know that the mind is bound by the impressions, it is liberated when released well from them. So, O Hanuman, practice the destruction of mental impression, quickly.
II-ii-17-18. When impressions die out, the mind becomes put out like a lamp. Whoever gives up impressions and concentrates on Me without strain, he becomes Bliss.
II-ii-19-23. Whether he concentrates on actions or not, when he avoids all the desires of the heart, he is doubtlessly liberated. He has nothing to gain from action or inaction. If his mind is not freed from impressions even Samadhi and Japa cannot give fruit. The highest place cannot be got without silence free from impressions. Sense organs like the eye go towards external objects without voluntary impression but because of the latent impression just as the eye falls voluntarily without attachment on external objects, so the man of wisdom operates in work.
II-ii-24-31. The sages know that Vasana comprises all objects generated by creative faculty of the mind in attaining or avoiding them. The very unsteady mind which is the cause of birth, old age and death is generated by desire for objects in excess. By the influence of Vasana there is the pulsation of Prana, from it comes Vasana (again) like seed and sprout. For the tree of the human mind, the pulsation and Vasana are two seeds – when one dies both die. Latent impressions stop operating through detached behaviour, avoidance of worldly thought and realization that the body is mortal.
The mind becomes non-mind by giving up Vasanas. When the mind does not think, then arises mindlessness giving great peace; so long as your mind has not fully evolved, being ignorant of the supreme reality, perform what has been laid down by the teacher, Shastra and other sources. Then with impurity ripened (and destroyed) and Truth understood, you should give up even the good impressions.
II-ii-32-37. In a Jivanmukta the destruction of the mind is with form – in a Videhamukta it is formless – when you achieve it, the mind with qualities like friendliness will surely attain peace. The mind of the Jivanmukta has no rebirth.
The mind is the root of the tree of Samsara which has thousands of sprouts, branches, fruits etc. I take the mind to be nothing but construction; make it dry in such a way that the tree also is dried up.
II-ii-38-47. There is only one means for overpowering mind. Shooting up of one's mind is one's undoing, its destruction is good fortune. The mind of the knower is destroyed, it is a chain for the ignorant. As long as the mind is not defeated by means of firm practice, the impressions jump in the heart like ghosts at night.
The impressions of enjoyment die, like lotus in winter, for one whose mental pride is reduced and the senses – the enemies – are defeated. One should at first conquer the mind, hands locked in hands, teeth set on teeth and limbs subdued. The mind cannot be conquered without defectless reasoning (methods) by merely sitting, just as an elephant in rut without a goad. The reasons (methods) well-nourished in mind-conquest are knowledge of Vedanta, contact with good people, giving up impressions and stopping of the pulsation of Prana. Those who ignore these and control the mind by force, throw away the lamp and search in darkness by means of soot, also (try to) bind an elephant in rut by lotus fibre.
II-ii-48-50. The tree of mind, bearing the weight of the creepers of thought, has two seeds: the pulsation of Prana and strong impressions. All pervasive consciousness is shaken by the pulsation of Prana – In contrast, by means of concentration the knowledge arises. The Dhyana, its means, is now imparted. Dissolving thought totally in the reverse order, think only of the remaining pure consciousness.
II-ii-51-56. After the Apana sets and before Prana arises in the heart, there exists the state of Kumbhaka (immobility) experienced by Yogins. Kumbhaka in the external form is the fullness of Prana after in-breath disappears and out-breath arises. By repeatedly practising meditation of Brahman without ego, Samprajnata Samadhi will be got. The Asamprajnata Samadhi, loved by Yogins, is (from) the mind giving great bliss after (all) the mental modifications (thoughts) die away. It is valued by sages, being the spirit devoid of the light (of ego), of the mind (of dream) and of the intellect (in deep sleep). This concentration is other than what is not Brahman. Full above, below and in the middle the essence of goodness – this state, prescribed by the Upanishads, is the ultimate reality.

II-ii-57-60. Latent impression is that unexamined grasping of objects by persistent imagination. What one brings into being, through intense dispassion by one's self, is realized quickly, devoid of opposite impressions. Influenced by impressions, a person looks upon those things as reality by the peculiarity of the impressions, the ignorant person sees the spirit wrongly though it does not lose its own nature.
II-ii-61-68. The impure impression binds, the pure destroys birth. The impure one is solid ignorance and ego, causes rebirth. The restful state is like the roasted seed, giving up the (sprout of) rebirth. Can the inner light be sought with chewing the cud of many Shastras, uselessly ? One who remains alone giving up perception as well as non-perception is himself the Brahman – A person cannot know Brahman by merely learning the four Vedas and Shastras, as the ladle cannot taste the food.
If a person does not get detachment by the bad smell of his own body, what other cause of detachment can be taught ? The body is very impure – the soul is pure. When one knows the difference, what purification need be prescribed ? Bondage is by impressions, Moksha is their destruction – you give them up as well as the desire for Moksha.
II-ii-69-71. Give up mental impressions of objects and cultivate pure impressions like friendship; then, discarding even these while acting according to them, putting down all desires, have only the impression of consciousness. Give up these too along with mind and intellect; concentrate only on me.
II-ii-72-77. Contemplate me as devoid of sound, touch, form, taste and smell, eternal, indestructible, without name and family, destroying all suffering, the nature of vision like the sky, the one syllable Om, unsmearing though omnipresent, unique, without bondage, forward, across, above, below, I fill ever place.
Unborn, ageless, shining by myself, not the cause nor effect, ever contented when the body dies away, giving up the state of Jivanmukta, one enter the Videhamukti stage.
So says the Rik: That supreme place of Vishnu the sages see ever – like an eye extended in heaven. The wise and awakened persons, free from emotions, keep it alight.
Om – This is the Upanishad.

Om ! That (Brahman) is infinite, and this (universe) is infinite.
The infinite proceeds from the infinite.
(Then) taking the infinitude of the infinite (universe),
It remains as the infinite (Brahman) alone.
Om ! Let there be Peace in me !
Let there be Peace in my environment !
Let there be Peace in the forces that act on me !

Here ends the Muktikopanishad belonging to the Sukla-Yajur-Veda.

End of the 108 Upanishads

The basic text of the Yoga philosophy–Yoga Darshana–is the Yoga Sutras (also called Yoga Darshana), the oldest known writing on the subject of yoga, written by the sage Patanjali, a yogi of ancient India. Further, the Yoga Philosophy is based on the philosophical system known as Sankhya, whose originator was the sage Kapila.

In its higher sense Yoga Nidra is the state in which the yogi experiences pure consciousness within the state of dreamless sleep, when he is neither awake nor asleep in the usual sense. And in the highest sense Yoga Nidra is the state in which the three "normal" states of waking, sleep, and deep sleep have become transmuted into the turiya state of pure consciousness and the yogi remains "asleep" in relation to those three lesser states.

Yoga Siddhi: Spiritual perfection or psychic power resulting from the practice of Yoga.

Yoga Sutras: The oldest known writing on the subject of yoga, written by the sage Patanjali, a yogi of ancient India, and considered the most authoritative text on yoga. Also known as Yoga Darshana, it is the basis of the Yoga Philosophy which is based on the philosophical system known as Sankhya.

Hindus believe that there are four yugas: the Golden Age (Satya or Krita Yuga), the Silver age (Treta Yuga), The Bronze Age (Dwapara Yuga), and the Iron Age (Kali Yuga). Satya Yuga is four times as long as the Kali Yuga; Treta Yuga is three times as long; and Dwapara Yuga is twice as long. In the Satya Yuga the majority of humans use the total potential–four-fourths–of their minds; in the Treta Yuga, three-fourths; in the Dwapara Yuga, one half; and in the Kali Yuga, one fourth. (In each Yuga there are those who are using either more or less of their minds than the general populace.) The Yugas move in a perpetual circle: Ascending Kali Yuga, ascending Dwapara Yuga, ascending Treta Yuga, ascending Satya Yuga, descending Satya Yuga, descending, Treta Yuga, descending Dwapara Yuga, and descending Kali Yuga–over and over. Furthermore, there are yuga cycles within yuga cycles. For example, there are yuga cycles that affect the entire cosmos, and smaller yuga cycles within those greater cycles that affect a solar system. The cosmic yuga cycle takes 8,640,000,000 years, whereas the solar yuga cycle only takes 12,000 years. At the present time our solar system is in the ascending Dwapara Yuga, but the cosmos is in the descending Kali Yuga. Consequently, the more the general mind of humanity develops, the more folly and evil it becomes able to accomplish.

The Yantras of Deities and their Numerological Foundations

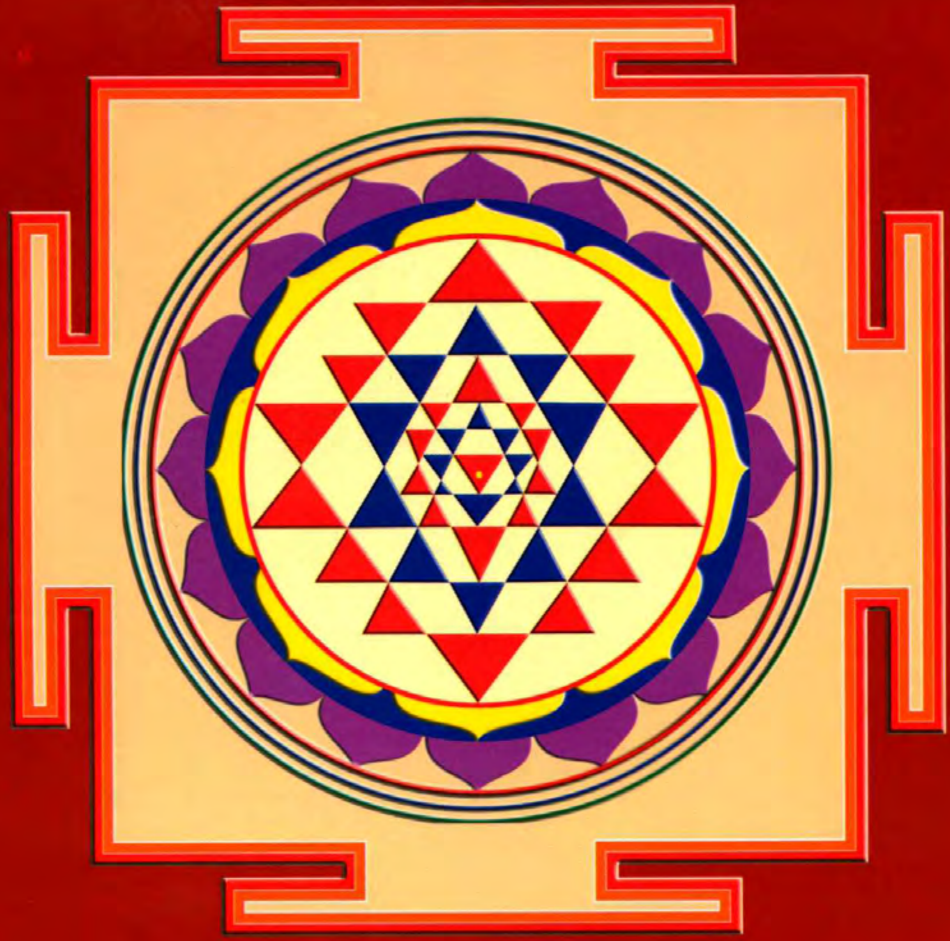
— An Iconographic Consideration —



Fredrick W. Bunce

Hinduism is known for the bewildering profusion of its deities, which are represented not only in two- or three-dimensional anthropomorphic images, but also in abstract configurations, known as yantras. In yantras is, thus, seen almost a parallel with the surfeit of deities in Hindu tradition. Literally meaning an 'instrument,' 'apparatus' or a 'talisman,' yantra is a kind of mystical diagram used in tantra for both meditation and invoking a divinity, and is believed to possess/arouse occult powers.

Drawn only by the adept, the ones schooled in this arcane, highly intricate process, and energized by siddh mantras, these seemingly innocuous geometrical figures are employed for any number of reasons or desires: whether to attain wealth, ward off disease, beget a son, vanquish enemies, or even to cause somebody's death. This book, the latest from Professor Bunce, highlights the essential import of these innocuous-looking, yet enigmatic, diagrams surfacing from the occult practices of the tantrics.

The author, an internationally known scholar of Oriental Art, examines a range of tantric yantras, with their varieties, applications, modes of construction and, above all, their iconographic features. Also inter-woven in his text are lucid descriptions of all else associated with a yantra, notably, its deity, its specific purpose, its predominant and secondary numbers and its mantra.

Carrying beautiful visual representations of over a hundred yantras, Professor Bunce's study holds out enduring appeal to the readers concerned not only with the iconography of tantric yantras, but their mystifying under-pinnings as well.

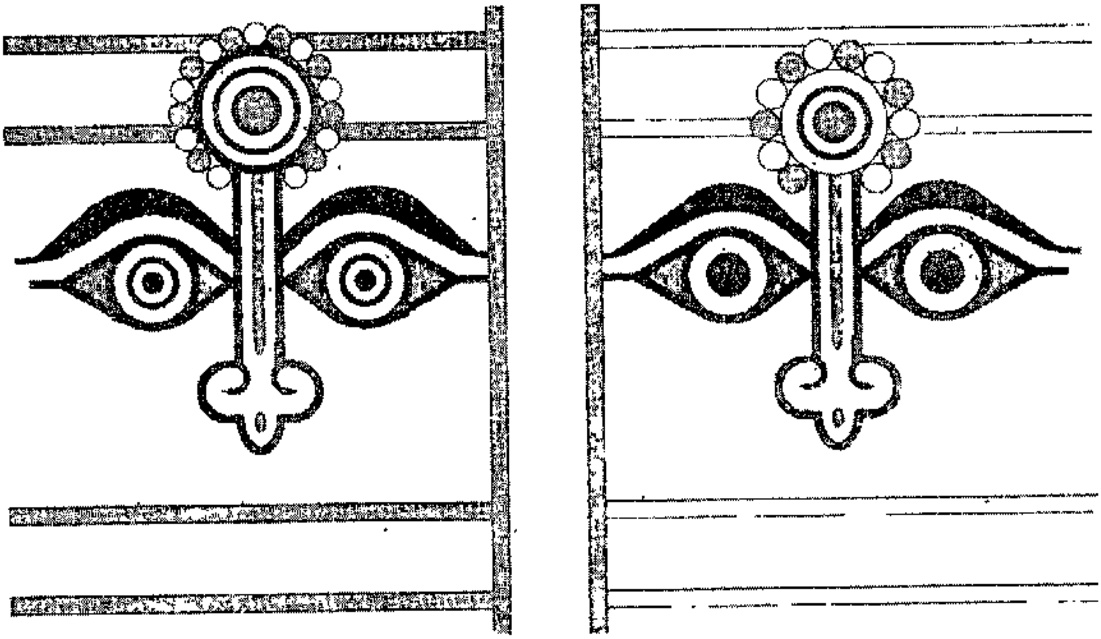
Preface and Introduction



Preface

Having been born and raised in the United States, my introduction to things Eastern had come well into my mature years. My education had been of quality, but Eurocentric in orientation which was not unusual for the time. Although, my undergraduate institution was one of the first Liberal Arts Colleges to institute an Asian Studies program in the mid '50's which concentrated upon the Near East. My first introduction, albeit brief, was during my graduate studies where the institution had a notable Southeast Asian program at the time.

I have, over the years, considered this Eurocentrism to be a drawback, if not a hindrance. However, my primarily education was in the Arts--i.e., painting and sculpture--which has given me a visual sense that has served me well over the years. This was particularly true when applied to my advanced studies in Comparative Arts--i.e., Art and Architectural History.

Being then a neophyte, an intellectual and experiential virgin with regard to the Orient was, in some cases, somewhat problematical. However, my approach over the years to the iconography of Buddhism and Hinduism as been with the acuity of the uninitiated. Through my rather eclectic training, I was able to see, to perceive certain similarities and differences that may have passed the eyes of one who had been solely trained in the scholastic method. This was especially true when confronting images both two and three dimensional.

As part of my third compilation, An Encyclopaedia of Hindu Deities, Demi-Gods, Godlings, Demons and Heroes With Special Focus on Iconographic Attributes, I included an appendix dealing with the Yantra as it related to the iconography. I was urged to expand this into the form that is herein included.

Contained within this brief study are a small number of Tantric yantra which are employed for a specific purpose. They are incorporated, particularly when they involve or refer to a specific deity. There are numerous, nay, hundreds of other yantra which are employed for any number of reasons or desires--e.g., yantras for the birth of a son, for stammering, for heart attack, to tease an enemy, for piles, etc.

The following yantras are but a sampling and are not intended to represent the entirety of yantras that are dedicated to a specific deity or deities. Further, the yantras herein contained were computer generated by the author from drawings (a number by Deepak Singh [DS]) kindly supplied by Mr. Susheel Mittal of New Delhi as well as various monographs, articles and actual yantras observed by the author. The sources are noted with each yantra considered.

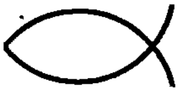
Indic terms are rendered in English transliteration. There are numerous complete dictionaries that can supply the Indic spelling. The "Index," however, includes the Indic spelling with proper diacritical marks.

Introduction

Virtually every major world religion employs abstracted symbolic elements which carry varying degrees of potency, latent power or cognitive elements. These iconic elements, in most cases, represented the deity's existence rather that being a manifestation of the deity.

Christianity employed the fish symbol in its nascency as a badge of recognition which carried iconic meaning.



Later the cross became the Christian arch-symbol and it developed into a number of forms.

The wearing or displaying of these symbolic forms not only identified the bearer, but also carried with them certain potent, protective qualities as well--e.g., a number of Eastern European Christians believed that just by wearing the cross protected them, shielded them from evil or malevolent forces such as vampires, or, were sure assurances of entry into paradise, particularly if held in the hand at the time of death. To the more enlightened, modern Christians, the cross is an icon which in-and-of-itself is not imbued with sacred power or presence, but is symbolic of the source of that power. To-the-point that, members of liturgical sects will bow their head as a processional cross passes them. Recognized symbols as a referent to the Christian deity are, due to the nature of the theology, finite.

Early Buddhists also employed symbols which held important and special significance. The eight-spoked wheel was to the early Buddhist a symbol of the setting into motion the dharma as first preached by the Lord Buddha.

To the Theravadist, it is a symbol of the important historical and philosophic event which possesses theological implications. The Mahayanists, and particularly the Vajrayanists imbued great power into abstract symbolic thangkas.

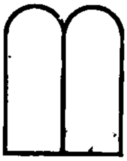
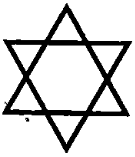
To Judaism, the abstract form of the stone tablets received by Moses or the six pointed star, the Star of David, are merely cognitive symbols of recognition or belonging and carry with them no inherent or supernatural power.





The iconoclastic Muslims eschew visually recognizable natural symbols, particularly human forms, of the deity. The major exception is the Arabic letters denoting Allah.

Yet, virtually every home in the Islamic world will display this "sign," and it, the name, the written name is highly revered. However, it is the spoken word, the audible recitation that carries the greatest and undeniable import within Islam.

Abstract forms (yantra) which are employed by the Hindu, are also utilized by Buddhists and in some instances by Muslims as well. However, particularly in relation to the latter faith, it must be emphasized that their employment are not canonical or Koranic, but rooted within ancient regional or local beliefs which are tolerated. Tolerated by Islam as long as the practice is not viewed as impinging upon the faith, or are anti-Koranic.

The proliferation of symbols that are to be found in the Hindu tradition are more abundant. Not only are abstract forms recognized, but various natural forms are viewed as a direct expression of a deity--e.g., naturally formed, smooth, ovoid rocks are recognized as Shiva linga and a shalagrama is seen as a manifestation of the Lord Vishnu.

If one is remotely aware of the myriad Hindu deities, they are cognizant of their many forms--i.e:, multi-headed, both fierce and calm of visage, and often with numerous arms. Not only are the various Hindu deities represented in two and three dimensional physical--anthropomorphic--images, they are often represented in abstract diagrams known as yantras. These diagrams are frequently made up of geometrical shapes and some employ numbers and letters (Sanskrit). They are employed to call down the deity to a special place, or to insure a desire of one sort or another by the devotee. Yantras are two dimensional but infer three dimensions. They are "an instrument, an apparatus, a talisman or (a) mystical diagram."[3] They are drawn by an adept and energized by a sidh mantra.

Frequently, Hindu yantras appear as a square, or bounded within a square. The square, a form sacred to the Hindus, represents the earth, the corporeal world. A square within a square represents heaven, the spiritual world. However, there are other forms in which yantras appear from time to time. Often triangles are employed. They too have a divine significance--the divine, that which is unattainable but fervently sought. The center, sometimes represented by a dot or a small circle (Indic:

bindu) which exemplifies the deity, eternity, the ever-past, ever-present, ever-future and is the power locus of the yantra. Additionally, it is believed that it is from the bindu that the triangles, squares and rectangles so necessary for the yantra are formed.

To construct a yantra is in itself a holy task, the commissioning of which brings much merit as well as the desired effect. It employs often elaborate preparation and the execution of which necessitates one schooled in this intricate and arcane process. It is accompanied with the recitation of sacred syllables called mantras[4] that are applicable to the deity or outcome for which the yantra is employed.

Certainly, an important, powerful and most frequently represented yantra(s) is that which represents Devi (Shri). Its is employed for the attainment of monetary success, power over travail and ones enemies, as well as authority. It is to be noted that in these Shri-chakram Yantra the triangle predominates in bewildering complexity. "The belief in the mystic potency of the interlacing triangle and other geometrical figures, does not belong exclusively to the Hindus. The Interlacing triangle (of) the Freemasons, . . . an Egyptian Tau, . . . (and) of Modern Theosophical Societies."[5] Not to mention its importance as a symbol to the Jewish faith and to the Buddhists.

Within the Hindu tradition, the application of the yantra is divided into six categories regarding their usage.[6] As such, they are grouped within the general rubric of Tantra: 1) the Vashi Karan used to being any being under ones influence; 1) the Shanti Karan which is employed to ward off diseases and any other negative influence; 3) Stambhan yantras may be employed to neutralize the negative undertakings of ones enemies; 4) the Videshan are used to create conflicts between people; 5) the Uchattan which are engaged to divert ones adversaries from their duties; and 6) the Maran yantra are composed to cause the death of any being.

There are six varieties of yantras: 1) Shakta yantras--referring to any yantra that represents the 'Divine mother'--2) Vaishnava yantras--referring to any yantra that represents any form of the Lord Vishnu or a related deity (e.g., Hanuman)--3) Shaiva yantra--referring to any yantra which represents the Lord Shiva or a related deity (e.g., Mritasanjivani)--4) architectural yantras--referring to those yantras inscribed for ground plans (Manduka or Paramasayika Mandala)--5) astrological yantras--referring to those yantras which apply to the Navagrahas either singly or in combined form--and 6) numerical yantras.[7]

There are seven types of yantras: 1) Sharir yantras--applied to the six Chakras--2) Dharna yantras--which are worn on various parts of the body for specific purposes--3) Asana yantras--which are kept under the asana during sadhana--4) Mandala yantra--in which the devotees assume the form of a yantra--5) Puja yantra--which are ascribed to different deities--6) Chhatar yantra--they are kept on the person, usually under hat or turban, wrapped in a piece of cloth--and 7) Darshana yantra--refers to yantras that are installed in a sanctified place which brings benefit when viewed by a devotee.[8]

There are numerous yantra which are dedicated to particular deities--puja yantras. They are often deities which have special significance for the individual, family, village, district, etc. When the deity is a personal deity, the aim of the yantra and the accompanying mantra is to enliven the kundalini (the sleeping serpent, shakti power) within the individual. If this is accomplished successfully, the resultant effect is the attainment of super consciousness and the attainment of samadhi. Of major significance are the Mahavidyas--ten Tantric Shaktis--whose realm within the Hindu pantheon are highly puissant within the Shakti sect.

The oft confusing surfeit of deities finds another parallel in the yantras. Not so much in numbers, but in other confusing conundrums--bewildering for the non-Hindu, and is some instances even for Hindus. It is to be noted that the yantras of Krishna (avatara), Balarama (avatara) and Hayagriva are virtually identical. Is this due to the fact that they are closely allied with the Lord Vishnu? Each deity's yantra is, as noted above, constructed and accompanied with a specific mantra for that deity. Obviously where the yantras are visually comparable, they are in practice not identical due to the very specific mantra employed.

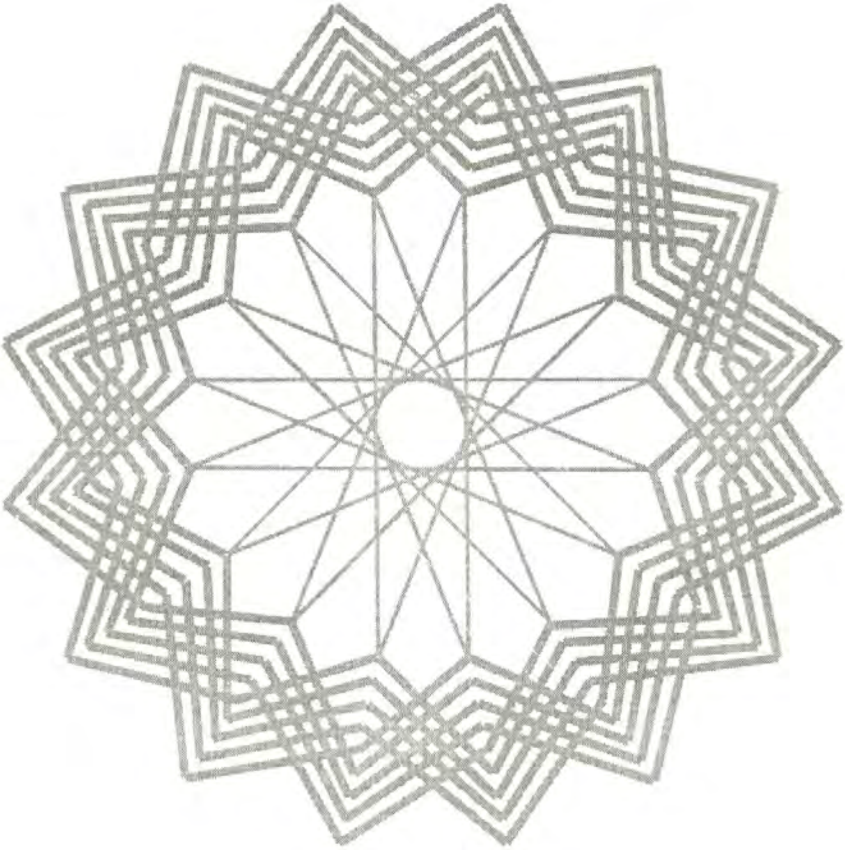
In addition, there are, in a few instances, differing yantras for a particular deity. In conversation with a number of Brahman priests, no reason for this fact was adequately explained. Merely, "they are different." In one instance--i.e., the Kali Yantras (Plates XLI-XLIV)--one source depicted this yantra with the triangles pointed upward.[9] The triangle with its apex pointing upward is masculine, referring to the linga. Whereas, the triangle with its apex pointing downward is feminine, referring to the yoni. Since Kali is a most important goddess, these upward pointing triangles seemed out of place for her. Also the yantra may consist of various lotus--some with eight petals (ashta-dala padma), others with twelve petals (dvidasha-dala padma), etc.

There is seen to be variations in the supportive forms of a yantra. For example, the shape and form of the lotus petals vary from one source to another. It would appear obvious that their form is less important than the internal forms of the yantras--i.e., triangles, stars, etc. Yet H. Johari provides a rather detailed process in the construction of a lotus petal. He states that the petal should be in a "heart-shaped form" and resemble the feminine yoni.[10] Nonetheless, the form of padma petals is merely a stylistic device which falls to the whim or preference of the one constructing the yantra, or the region from which they are derived, or regional preferences and/or peculiarities. Likewise, the outer form of the bhupura is apparently also a stylistic device. Variations of forms are noted below under: 'Variations on the Bhupura Shape." These variations do not refer to the levels or steps in the bhupura, merely their form or shape.

Further, not only the employment of certain shapes and forms have significance, but the repetition of certain forms are important--e.g., the number of lotus petals within a circle, the steps surrounding the sacred enclosure (bhupura), numbers of ascending circles, etc.--are of significance.

Numerology, as an occult science, finds its genesis deep in prehistory. The earliest historical records are replete with references to the importance of certain numbers. Earliest mankind doubtlessly found the repetition of certain numbers in nature--e.g., two as in day and night, the sun and the moon, male and female, or mother and father; four as in the seed, early growth of a plant, maturation and harvest (death) or, out of necessity, (the) four directions; or six as in the number of petals in many flowers or in the sides of a bee's comb. They saw these repetitions, these numbers as of some significance and may have ascribed certain importance or attributes to them. As mankind progressed and began to develope into pre-civilized groups, other numerical repetitions, often cyclical in nature, probably began to be seen as important--e.g., the cycles of the moon, tides, in the temperate climes, the seasons of the year, and the solstice as well as the equinox assumed major importance. Needing to ascribe some reason(s), some meaning for the natural phenomenon that were observed, cosmic and/or magical associations were obviously seen to be the reason(s) behind these numbers. From these observations, from the need to attribute some meaning to these natural occurrences, cosmic associations were seen and an oral catalogue of these were doubtlessly the genesis of this occult science.

Numbers as Symbols



Numbers as Symbols

Numbers and numerology play an important and viable role in many cultures, past and present, particularly in Asia. Within the "modern West" numerology smacks of superstition. But, who of us does not harbor some vestige of numerological preference or abhorrence? One seldom finds a Thirteenth Floor in an American hotel, Friday the Thirteenth is considered, at the very least, ominous and the date: 9-9-99, saw thousands more marriages than the average for the Ninth of September. The relationship of a number to other numbers also plays an important role in many societies--e.g., in America, the Mark II (used to designate a model of the Lincoln Continental) was utilized rather than the less "prestigious" Mark 2!

Within Eastern religions--Hinduism, Buddhism, Jainism, etc.--numbers play a vital and active part in the individual faiths as well as in every day life. A Hindu temple's construction will not commence unless certain numbers--involved in arcane computations--are auspicious. Marriages and/ or other important life-occasions within the Hindu world are subject, in part, to numerical considerations as well as Zodiacal influences. Throughout Delhi and other larger cities in India, one can find numerous book stalls devoted in-a-large-part to the esoteric and popular publications revolving around numbers and their cosmic and practical applications. Virtually every Brahmin Priest is well versed in numbers and their implications. Various occult "practitioners" associated with the Bhrigu-Samhita in Hoshiapur, Punjab, utilize various numerical computations prior to their "readings."

The pervasiveness of numerology within the Orient, and in particular India causes one to see, and understand that the numerological influence upon the yantra cannot be denied. Indeed there are a significant number of yantra which revolve entirely around numbers--e.g., the nine "magic squares" associated with thew Navagrahas (See: Plate 68) as well as a host of other number oriented yantra. For the devotee as well as the scholars, numbers buttress the visual forms and enrich the raison d'etre of each and every yantra.

In order to explain the unknown, the ineffable, humankind has sought out associations or sources to unravel these conundrums. It was early noted that there was a relationship between the phases of the moon and the tides. The concept of neither the earth's rotation or even that of the moon was know or fathomed, nor was the concept of gravity understood. However, the twenty-eight day cycle was calculated, noted and became an important number. Likewise, the circle, a form that appeared frequently in nature was also considered as a source of some importance--the number one was ascribed to this form. The nuclear or core family of a father, mother and child--three--and later the trinity (the Lords Brahmá, Vishnu and Shiva; or Sarasvati, Lakshmi and Parvati) were seen as having special significance. The square later assumed status with its four equal sides and equal angles--four, therefore, assumes status. So, ancient man saw significance in numbers and frequently used them to explain or even predict through the "science of numerology." Astrology became a parallel, interwoven "science" that was also assiduously practiced as a way of understanding things unknown or unseen. Together, they were employed to fathom the unexplained, to predict the future.

Within the Buddhist/Hindu world the philosophy of numbers, the ethos of numbers the meaning of numbers beyond their numerological application were, for the most part, intuited and understood by the priests (Brahmins) and the architects (sthapati). Within the various treatises--e.g., the Manasara or Mayamatam--appeared ratios, relationships and numbers, the iconography of which was understood by the priests and/or architects. Numerology, on the other hand, which frequently was employed to predict ones future, was applicable to the sthapati's endeavors in as much as the iconic meanings were utilized in the design and construction of temples and other buildings.

The "magic square," held an important and particularly far reaching fascination for all the various cultures of Asia. Consecutive numbers, starting with the number one, are placed within equally divided squares, the sum of which, in any direction, is the same (See: the numbers 'Fifteen' and 'thirty-four' below). Within both the Hindu and the Buddhist traditions, numbers have important mystic and iconic significance. Not only the numbers, but also the geometric forms which are associated with certain numbers are of considerable importance in these cultures.

Certain numbers, it was noted, have interesting or unusual qualities--e.g., six is the sum of the first three numbers (1 + 2 + 3 = 6) or the product of the first three numbers (1 x 2 x 3 = 6); eleven is made up of the sum of the second and third numbers plus the product of the second and third numbers ([2 + 3] + [2 x 3] = 11; any product of nine, when reduced equals nine (9 x 2 = 18 = 9, 9 x 9 = 81 = 9, 9 x 24 = 216 = 9, etc.)--or assume cosmological importance. There are several numbers which assume paramount importance. Three, and by association nine (3^3) are most sacred. In addition the numerals seven, fourteen, twenty-one and twenty-eight become auspicious due to their relationship to the lunar cycle.

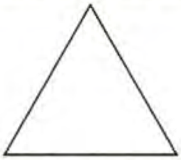
It is to be noted that within the Hindu system odd numbers are masculine, whereas even numbers are feminine. Odd numbers refer to essential functions while even numbers allude to fundamental functions. Finally, compound numbers can be looked at in one of two ways. First, as a number composed of two separate components--i.e., twenty-three (23)--in which the two inetgers, two and three are considered separately and as a combination. Two is a feminine even number related to the Moon (Chandra or Soma) and three is an odd masculine number associated with Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Both planets influence the compound number, Secondly, the number can be viewed as the sum of the two components of the compound number--e.g., using again the number twenty-three: 2 + 3 = 5. Five is a number associated with Mercury (Budha).

The following is but a listing and annotation of certain numbers, their significance and use as applied to Buddhist and Hindu practices:[11]

One: denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. This number is generally considered neither an odd nor an even number. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). It is visually represented by: a dot (bija) or the circle.

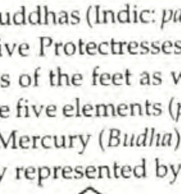
Two: denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. This integer is a material number, as opposed to a divine number, and when applied to either the Arabic or Roman alphabet, it is considered as the number of creation, and the mother principle. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; Two Actions (Pali: kamma) being: akusala-kamma (evil deeds) & kusala-kamma (good deeds); the Two Types of Gift Giving (Pali: dana) being: amisa-dana (material gift) & dhamma-dana (spiritual gift); right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). The Moon, a prime feminine symbol is quite naturally assigned to the first feminine (even) number. Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. It is visually represented by two points (usually connected by a line or is visually represented in yantra by the two petal lotus.

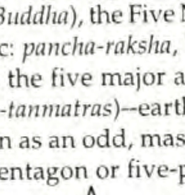
Three: denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection (1 + 2 = 3). This numeral is considered to be the first masculine (odd) number and therefore has certain precedents as a vivifying force. As an odd number, three is a male symbol and further represents the idea principle, day, light, right and the sun. It is the most sacred number within the Hindu faith. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; the Three Patrons (Tib.: Rigs-gSum mGon-po); the Trikaya system; Tripitaka (Pali: Tipitaka); the Three Refuges of the Theravada tradition being the Lord Buddha, the dharma; (Pali: dhamma) (the law), the sangha (the community of monks); and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is visually represented by the triangle, the most stable of all forms.



Four: denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala, Tib.: Phyogs-sKyong); the Four Seasons (Tib.: Dus-bZhi Lha-mo); the Four Basic Elements (Tib.: hByung-ba bZhi); the Four Bodies (Tib.: sKu-bZhi); and the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). As with the number two, the even number four is seen to be associated with the Moon. Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. It is visually represented by the square which for the Hindu represents the stability, unchangingness of The Absolute One, or as a four petal lotus in a yantra.

Five: denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative [downward pointing]). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or pancha-tanmatras) being: shabda (sound), sparsha (touch), rupa (form), rasa (flavor) & gandha (odor); the Five Failings or Weaknesses being: ahamkara (pride), moha (illusion), lobha (greed), kama (passion), krodha (anger); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas) being: akasha (ether), vayu (air), tejas (fire), apas (water) & prithvi (earth); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra being: madya (wine), mamsa (meat), matsya (fish), mudra (parched grain), maithuna (sexual congress); the five skandhas being: rupa, vidana, sanini, sanskara, vidyana; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five senses (Pali: kamaguna); the Five Forces (Indic: pancha-balani); the Five Sense-stimulating Objects (Tib.: hDon-yon sNa-lNga); Fivefold Transcendental Wisdom (Tib.: Ye-shes lNga); the Five Sisters of Long Life (Tib.: Tshe-ring mChed-lNga); the Five Buddhas (Indic: pancha-Buddha), the Five Mystics (Indic: pancha-tathagata, Tib.: De-bZhin-gShegs-pa); the Five Protectresses (Indic: pancha-raksha, Tib.: bSrung-ma lNga); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Again as an odd, masculine number five is assigned a masculine planet. It is visually represented by the pentagon or five-pointed star (pentagram).





Six: denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number (1 + 2 + 3 = 6 or 1 x 2 x 3 = 6) and the product of the first male and female numbers (2 x 3 = 6) signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras (Tib.: hKhol-lo) being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; the six acts (shat-karmas); the Six Buddhas (Tib.: Thub-

Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. The shatkona is made up of the male symbol and the female symbol and additionally symbolizes the macro- and microcosm. It is visually represented by a hexagon or six-pointed star or in a yantra as a six petal lotus.

Seven: denotes the sacred, the mystic being made up of the spiritual three (masculine) plus the practical four (feminine) (3 + 4 = 7), is often considered as the number of creation and perfection, as well as natural law. It is associated astronomically with the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon). The assigning of the descending node of the Moon to a masculine (odd) number appears contradictory. However, Ketu is an inauspicious masculine deity. It may be represented as heptagon as in the Sharabha Yantra, a seven-petaled lotus as in the Matsya Yantra or a form which connotes endlessness.

Eight: denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number (9 x 9 = 81=9, 9 x 18 = 162 = 9). Yantra Construction, Variations and Application

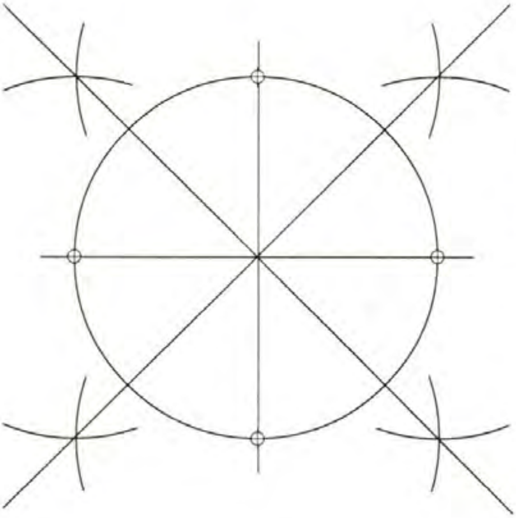
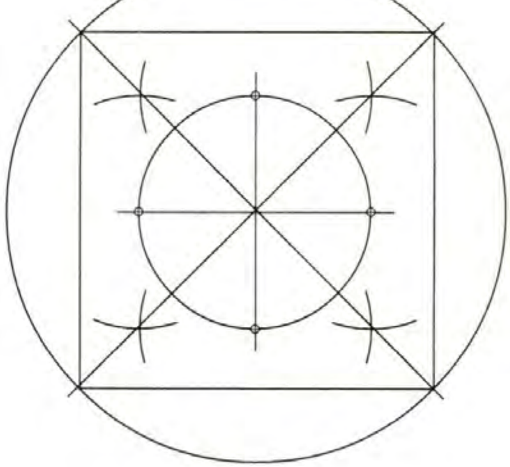
Constructing the Sacred Enclosure (bhupura)

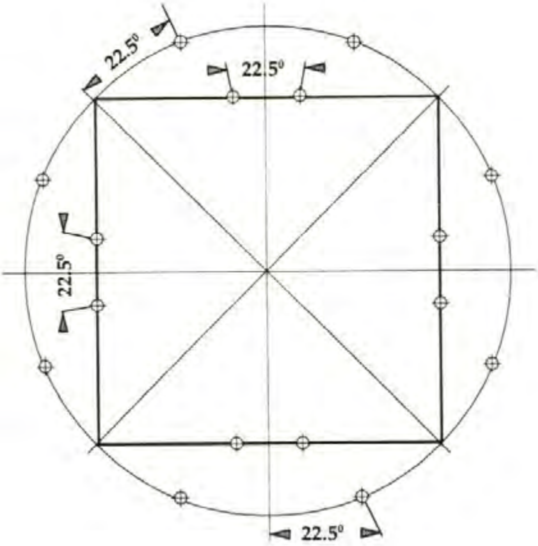


STEP 1: A vertical and a horizontal are drawn with an angle of 90 ^{0}. A circle is drawn using the crossing of the vertical and horizontal as the center. Where the circle crosses the vertical and horizontal two arcs are drawn. Where these arcs cross, a line is drawn diagonally through the center of the circle to establish the true diagonals, as shown to the left.

STEP 2: A large circle is then drawn. Within this circle, where the diagonals cross its circumference, a set of verticals and horizontals or a square is drawn, as shown to the right.

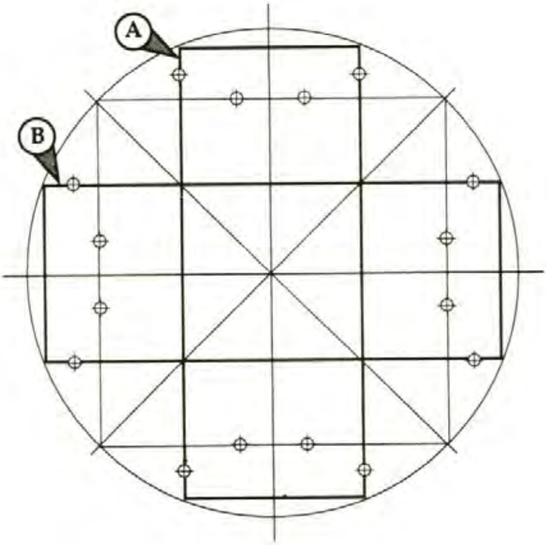


Steps in constructing the sacred enclosure (Continued)



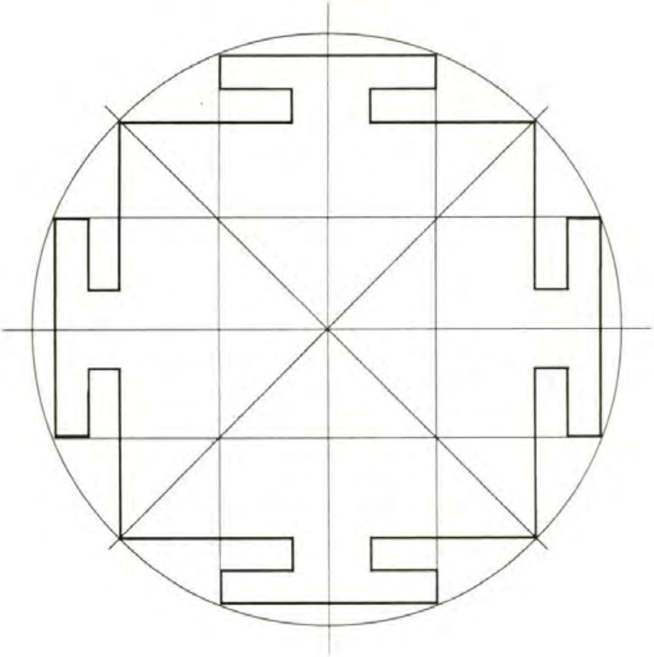
STEP 3: The first circle and diagonal arcs are erased. Points are established on the circle's circumference which are 22.5^0 (half the distance between the diagonals and the verticals/ horizontals) from each diagonal. Then on the square's four edges, points are established that are 22.5^0, centred on the verticals and the horizontals; or 11.25^0 on either side of the verticals and horizontals, as shown to the left.

STEP 4: Rectangles are established, one vertical (A) and one horizontal (B) from the 22.5^0 points from the main vertical and horizontal on the circle's circumference. Secondly, a point is established half way from the upper and lower (or outer) edges of the two rectangles and the border of the large square, as shown to the right.

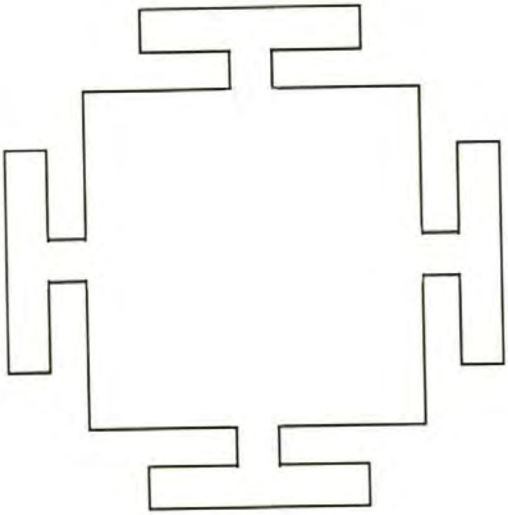


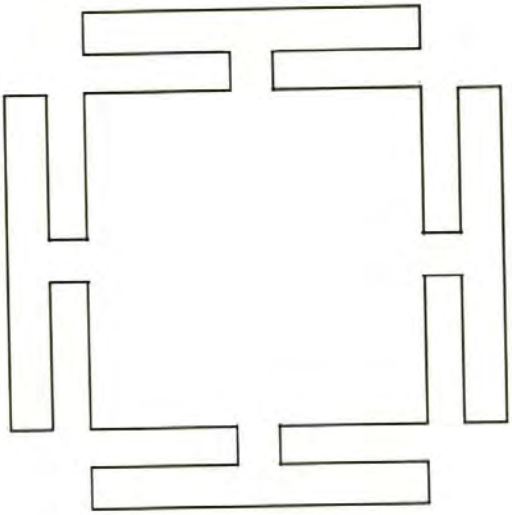
Steps in constructing the sacred enclosure (Concluded)

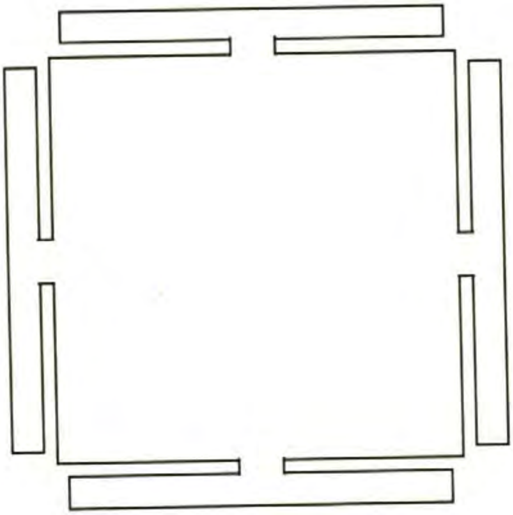
STEP 5: The outer perimeter of the sacred enclosure (bhupura) is then constructed and all extraneous lines are erased, as shown below. This is but one approach in the construction of a bhupura. The following pages indicate some variations in form.[13]

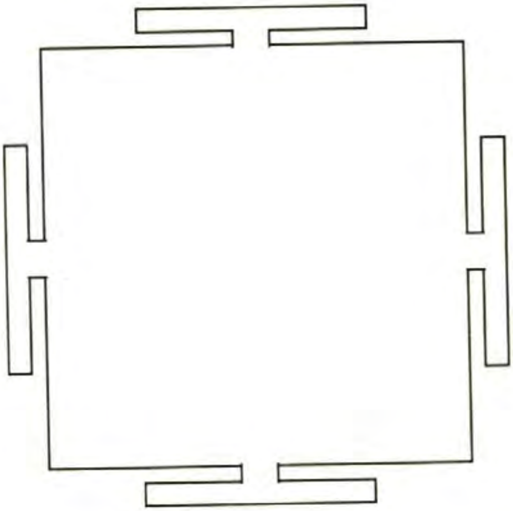


Variations on the Bhupura Shape

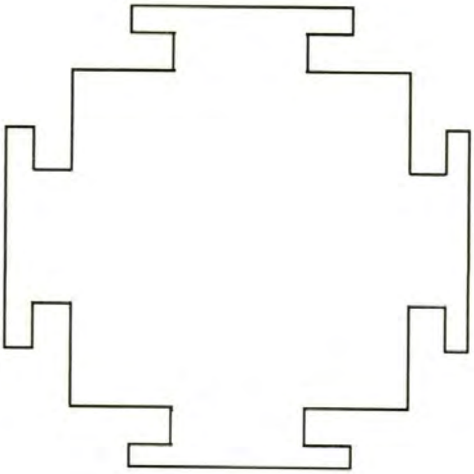


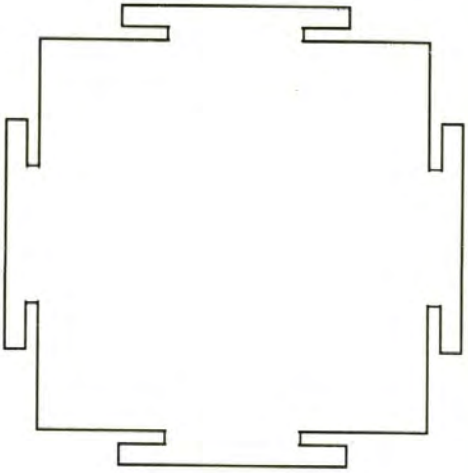


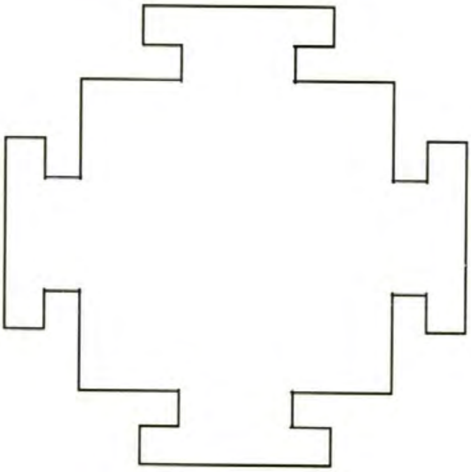


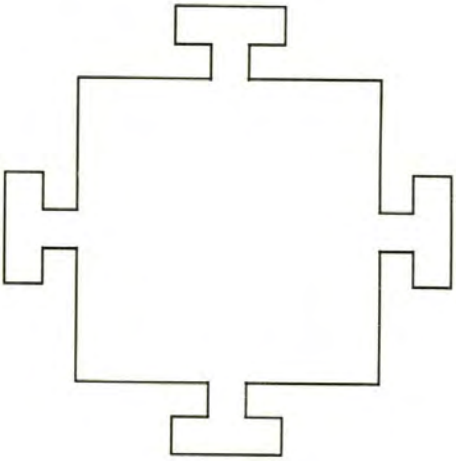


Variations on the Bhupura Shape (Continued)

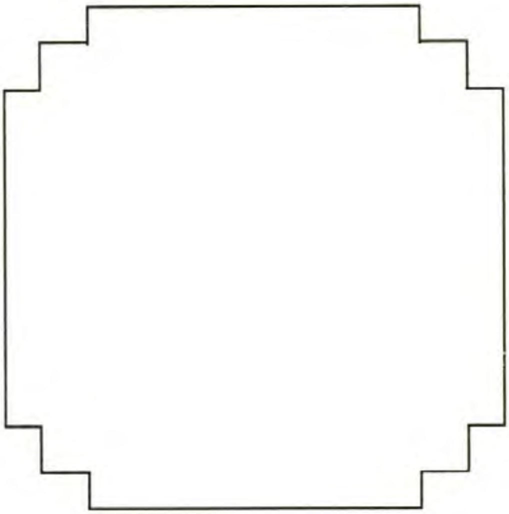


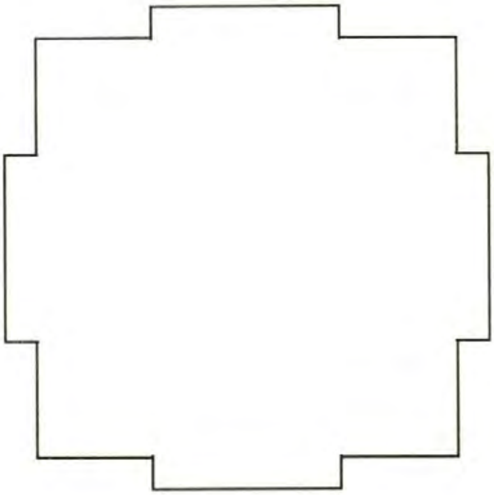


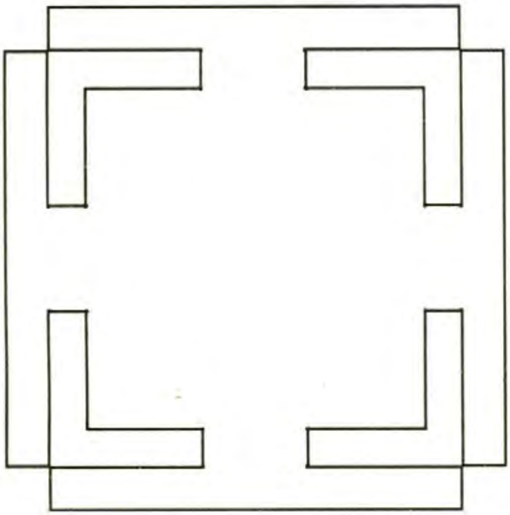


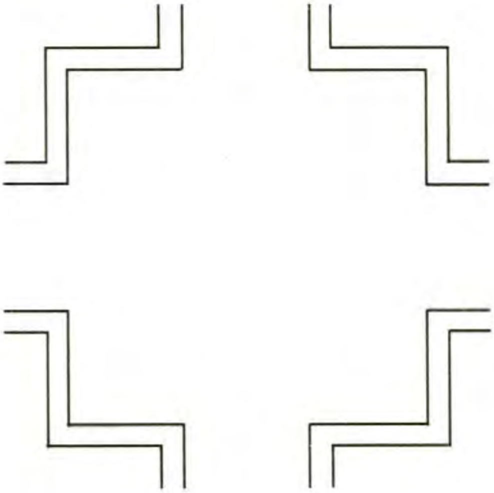


Variations on the Bhupura Shape (Concluded)







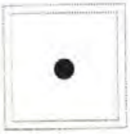


Construction of the Petal Shape

STEP 1: An inner and outer circle is established. The relationship of their diameters may vary. Lines are established denoting the cardinal and intercardinal points (————) and the space between these lines are bisected (— — — —). A circle (A) is drawn, centered where the bisecting line (— — — — —) crosses the inner circle. This establishes the 'body' of the petal. Two smaller circles (B) of proportional diameter establish the 'point' of the petal and two more of similar diameter (C) form the inner shape.

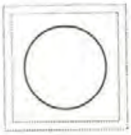
STEP 2: All extraneous lines are removed leaving an eight-petaled lotus. The shape of the individual petals are described as 'heart shaped' or resembling a yoni.[14] Again, as with the bhupura, there are numerous variations in the shape and construction of the individual petals. There technically should be no space between the petals of the lotus as it would spell harm.[15] However, there are a number of yantra in which there is prominent space.

Basic Yantra Iconography



Bindu: the locus of power & the center of supreme consciousness.

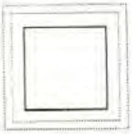
The Circle



The circle: represents space & a never ending process. In tantra iconography it represents water.

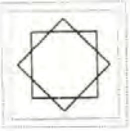
The radiating circle: represents expansion and a sun sign. Here radiant lines are cardinal and intercardinal, there may be more.

The Square

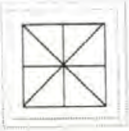


The square: the most sacred Hindu form represents The Absolute One, The Sublime One. In tantra iconography it represents earth.

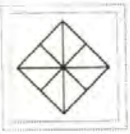
The square on point represents the dynamic element of this form, power and therefore, the feminine.



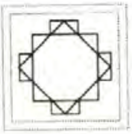
Two overlapping squares: indicates balance between static--the masculine element--and dynamic--feminine element--it further symbolizes preservation.



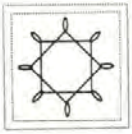
Vertical, horizontal and diagonals within a square: represents the earth in a static condition.



Vertical, horizontal and diagonals within a square, en pointe: represents the earth as a dynamic element of this form--i.e.,power and therefore, the feminine.



Vertical, horizontal and enclosed diagonals: represents the earth in a static condition or confined



Vertical, horizontal and diagonals with loops: the dynamic & restricted expresson.

The Triangle

Triangle on its base (vahni kona): the male, the sun, the linga & triple principles of creation. In tantra iconography it represents fire.

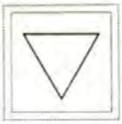
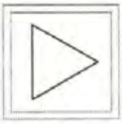
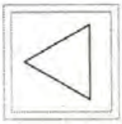
Basic Yantra Iconography (Continued)



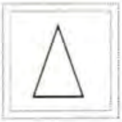
Triangle on its apex: represents water, the female, the moon, the yoni, the Divine Mother & the origin of all. It is the dynamic element of this form, power and therefore, the feminine.



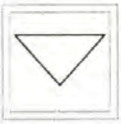
Trikona, right facing represents the dynamic male element.



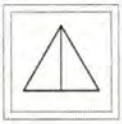
Trikona, left facing represents the dynamic female element.



Isosceles triangle represents the dynamic elements: here of the masculine element.



Isosceles triangle represents the dynamic elements: here of the feminine element.



Bisected triangle on its base: equilibrium & is static.

Interlocking triangles (shatkona): represents equilibrium, male-female union, rising aspiration & is static.

Interlocking triangles (shatkona): represents the dynamic, male-female union in right (m) and left (f) pointing trikonas.

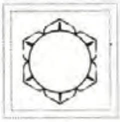
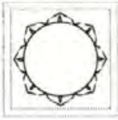
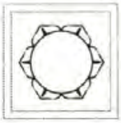
Interlocking isosceles triangles: represents equilibrium, male-female union & is dynamic.

The Lotus

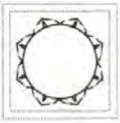




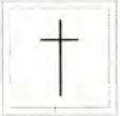
The lotus: represents the divine manifestation and expression. The padma may be represented in either 2, 4, 6, 8, 12, 24 or 32 even number petals. There are isolated examples of odd numbered petals used to form a lotus. The most frequently employed form is the ashta-dala padma of eight petals. The padma is oriented with petals pointing upward.



The lotus when oriented with the space between the petals pointing upward; represents the dynamic element of this form, power and therefore, the feminine.

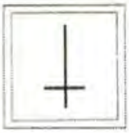


Other Forms and Lines



Movement upwards.

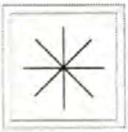
Basic Yantra Iconography (Concluded)



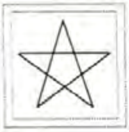
Movement downwards.

Straight line (rijulekha) represents unhindered movement and the ability for further development.

The bindu with crescent (nada bindu): represents dynamic sound, the source of all.[16]



Combined vertical, horizontal and diagonals: is dynamic & represents expression as well as the points of the compass.



Five-pointed star (pentagram): represents the human being and magical elements.

Eight-pointed star (ashtakona): here denoting infinity or never-ending. Such forms are frequently ascribed to a single deity--here Gayatri.

Pentagon: it is related to the pentagram.

Hexagon: it is related to the shatkona (interlocking triangles).

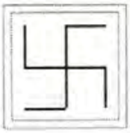
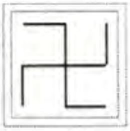
The hexagon in this alignment, represents the dynamic element of this form, power and therefore, the feminine.



Right facing swastika: represents the male element & creation.



Left facing swastika: represents the female element--dynamic element of this form, power and therefore, the feminine--dynamic element of this form, power--as well as dissolution.

Color as Iconography

Frequently, when studying texts dedicated to yantra, the term most frequently employed for the construction of a yantra is "write" or "writing." This, of course, implies a strictly linear approach. However, there are times when a yantra may be presented in two dimensional form and color becomes an integral part of the whole. As with any sacred art form, color assumes iconic significance when it is employed.

In dealing with ancient texts and even modern ones, it is often difficult to ascertain precisely which color is required from the various descriptions. Imprecise terms--e.g., "dark bluish purplish green"--are employed, or purely descriptive terms--e.g., "the color of lifeless dry earth"[17]--or the like, are to be found in abundance through the various sources. This presents a conundrum.[18] The following is an abbreviated consideration of color and its iconography within yantra. It is to be noted that within the individual colors there may be both positive and/or negative aspects indicated and those terms in parenthesis refer to the color under which they are found.

Red: is considered hot, vitalizing, positive magnetic force, the color of life, the color of revolution, represents rage and aggression, alkaline and astringent; stimulates the adrenals, subdues basic brain-stem instincts; it symbolizes fire.

Orange: is seen as warm, cheering, positive magnetic force, alkaline and astringent; stimulates the gonads, calms sensuality.

Yellow: is considered as hot, positive magnetic force, alkaline and astringent; stimulates: the brain, the love of knowledge and optimism, the cerebral cortex; symbolizes earth.

Green: is seen as cool, refreshing, neutral, balanced, restful, pacifying, love and harmony inducing; stimulates the blood's chemistry; ("smoky" green: light tone of green) symbolizes air.

Blue: is considered cold, acidic, creates pessimism, insecurity, serenity (light value of blue), openness to others, sociable; stimulates the nervous system.

Violet: or purple: cold, creates antibodies, increases resistance and acceptance; stimulates meditation; symbolizes ether.

Black: symbolizes ignorance.

White: symbolizes water and knowledge.

Gold: (metallic): a color that inspires (yellow orange); symbolizes the sun and knowledge.

Silver: (metallic): symbolizes the moon and is live-giving.

Value: refers to the relative lightness or darkness of a color, based on a gray scale:

white ├──────────────────────┤ black light medium dark

Tint: refers to any color to which any amount of white has been added.

Shade: refers to any color to which any amount of black has been added.

Tone: refers to any color to which any amount of any value of gray has been added

In general colors that are tones--i.e., any value of gray added--or shades--i.e., colors to which black has been added--tend to become negative, especially when a dark value of gray or black is employed to a greater extent. On the other hand, tints of a color--i.e., a color to which white has been added--tends to focus on the positive aspects of the color.

Thangka with Nine Mandala-Yantras
Shri Chakra Yantra

The form of the yantra is and has been applicable to a number of usages other than as a vehicle for contact with a deity. Yantras, particularly numerical yantras, are constructed (written) for: the cure of illness and disabilities, for affairs of the heart, for dominance over ones enemies or the neutralization of an enemy's power, for monetary aggrandizement, for new undertakings, etc.

The yantras considered in this brief study are those directed towards specific deities. Following are five yantras which have applications of varying ends. The sixth yantra of the section, the Shri Chakra(m) Yantra, the premier yantra, is dealt with in some detail as it is the lodestone for all deity-centered yantras.

Temple Plan Based on a Mandala (Yantra)

The mandala (yantra) here indicates one of the possibilities in which iconography can be applied to the corporeal.[19] Tantric in origin, it refers to those treatises which deal specifically with temple plans and proportions. [20]

Whether or not this 'plan' is based upon an accepted mandala (diagram) plan noted in the Mayamatam or Manasara is beyond the purview of this study. Nonetheless, when either a Manduka Mandala of sixty-four pada (below, left) or a Paramasayika Mandala of eighty-one pada (below, right) is impressed upon the plan in the mandala (yantra), both appear applicable.

The numerological consideration of the is mandala (yantra) could be based on eight & sixty-four, or nine & eighty-one, as applicable to either the Manduka or Paramasayika Mandalas. The obvious emphasis placed upon the cardinal points of the compass, not an unusual consideration, and upon the intercardinal points, places some emphasis upon the numbers four and eight. Four denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); and the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. Nine denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada.

It would be difficult to ascribe this mandala (yantra) to any specific deity. Rather, it appears to be a generic yantra to which this plan has been applied.

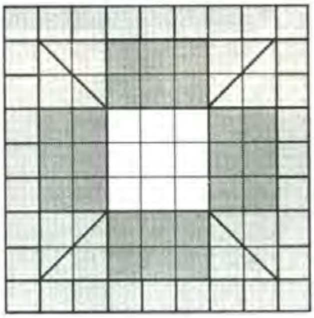
Astronomical Chart Based on a Sarvatabhadra Yantra

The yantra ascribed to Sarvatabhadra[21] assumes the form of a mandala, specifically a Paramasayika Mandala of eighty-one pada. "Many Tantrik works of art . . . contain elaborate calculation-systems resembling coloured checker-boards by which the sadhaka can work out the necessary correspondences. These 'magic square' devices are also used as a way of producing an incalculable variety of mantra-combinations. . . ."[22] The Paramasayika Mandala of eighty-one pada is shown below along with the major areas--i.e., the deities of the first, second and third 'rings:'



The construction of "Astronomical Chart Based on a Sarvatabhadra Yantra" is identical with the Paramasayika Mandala shown above. The variation comes in the various values (colorations) of the different pada. Since the "Astronomical Chart " is reproduced in both sources in black and white, consideration of the iconic meaning of these various areas is impossible. Color, as has been noted above, plays an important role in the yantra.[23] With regards to the Paramasayika Yantra the number nine is important. Nine denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3 and therefore a magnification of that sacred number. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; Nava-Nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; and the Pitha Mandala. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). Eighty-one denotes mystic wholeness and a number whose √ is 9. It is exemplified in: the number of pada for a Paramasayika Mandala. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani) (8) and the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). When reduced it produces nine (8 + 1 = 9) and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9).

The semicircular extensions on the four sides do not appear in any reproduction of the Paramasayika Mandala. These 'extensions,' four on each side, for a total of sixteen, raises the number of spaces--i.e., padas plus the semicircular spaces--to ninety-seven. Ninety-seven has no particular significance other that when reduced it produces seven. However, sixteen is important. It denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 and is exemplified in: the sixteen human parts; the sixteen signs of beauty; the Sixteen Kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada, called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7).

The application of yantra to mandala, or mandala to yantra can be seen in this 'diagram.' It indicates psycho-cosmic 'symbiotic' relationship of the various visual-iconic elements that permeate Hinduism.

Janan Yantra

Janan(a)[24] is called "the one who is the progenitor of living creatures," and one of the thousand names of the Lord Vishnu (Vishnusahasranama) enumerated in the Mahabharata. The epithet refers to the deity's preeminence and role in the cosmos.

The yantra consists of a large, downward pointing trikona--i.e., feminine & yoni--containing forty-nine smaller triangles arranged in seven rows. There are seven rows of downward pointing, light value trikonas, beginning with seven in the uppermost row; and six rows of light value, upward pointing trikonas--i.e., masculine & linga--beginning with six in the uppermost row. The total number of feminine-centered trikonas are twenty-eight, the total number of masculine-centered trikonas are twenty-one and a total of forty-nine (7 x 7 = 49) feminine- and masculine-centered triangles. There are thirteen feminine- and masculine-centered triangles along each side of the larger triangle.

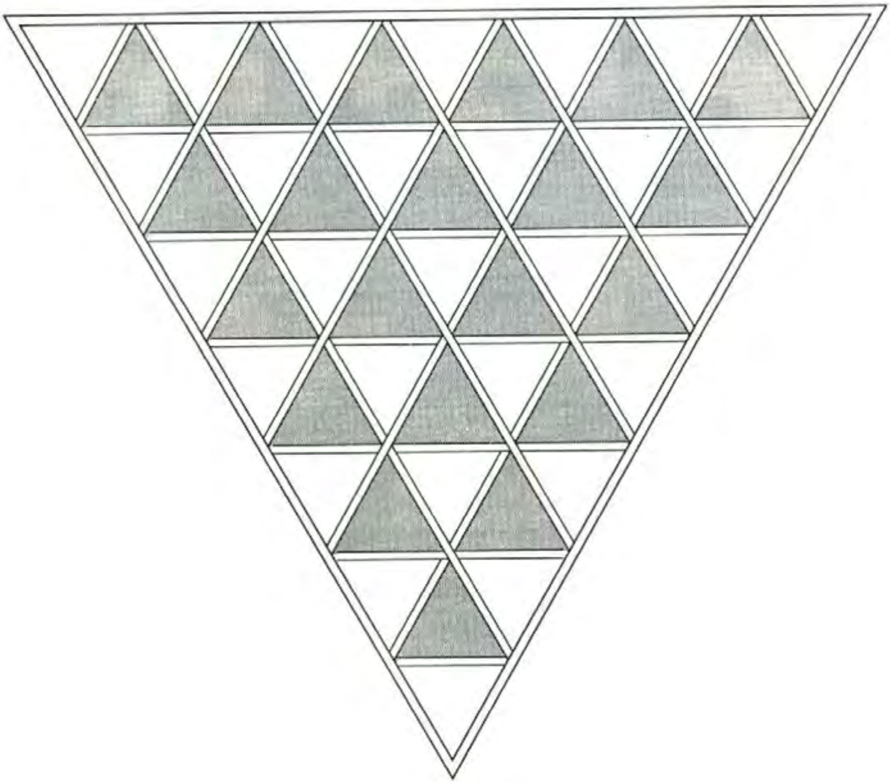
The numbers, individually and combined appear to focus unremittingly upon Moon (Chandra or Soma) related integers--i.e., seven, twenty-one, twenty-eight and forty-nine. Seven is often considered as the number of creation and perfection and exemplified in: the seven days of the week; the phases of the moon (4 x 7 = 28); within the Vedas as the seven wives (sisters) of Agni; the seven streams of soma; and is associated astronomically with the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon). Twenty-one denotes perfection and is made up of : 1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 = 21--it is to be noted that 21 when reduced produces three: 2 + 1 = 3. This numeral is related to the cycles of the moon: 3 x 7 = 21. As a compound number twenty-one is associated with: the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2), the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Twenty-eight is an auspicious number (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 + 7 = 28), and represents a number that is associated with the moon's cycle--twenty-eight days (4 x 7 = 28). Twenty-eight is a perfect number arrived at by the addition of its divisors (1 + 2 + 4 + 7 + 14 = 28). It is exemplified in: the number of "mansons" in the moon and as a compound number it is also associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2), the planet Saturn (Shani) (8) and the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) (2 + 8 = 1[0]). Finally, forty-nine which is a sacred number whose √ is 7. As a compound number forty-nine is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4), the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9). When reduced it produces four (4 + 9 = 13 = 4) and, therefore, the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4).

Three is also a number of some importance--referring to the triangle(s). Three denotes perfection, the trinity and is considered to be the first masculine (odd) number and therefore has certain precedents as a vivifying force. It is a most sacred number. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: Triloka) namely (Indic) Arupadhatu, Rupadhatu, Kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Forces (Guna) (Indic: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna); and the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar. It is visually represented by the triangle, the most stable of all forms.

The iconography of form and numbers would seem to point to the Lord Vishnu and, therefore, underline the assumption of Janan as as form of this important deity. The representation of the major, downward pointing triangle (feminine in nature) as applied to a masculine deity is not unusual.[25] It would appear to underline the concept of the the union of the male, idea and light with the female power and dark centered elements. The dark masculine and the light femine trikonas, however antithetical, would also appear to underline this unity.

Plate 3 -- Janan Yantra

(AM , p. 39)



Linga Mandala as Yantra

The Linga Mandala[26] indicates the close relationship between mandala and yantra. The aesthetic relationship is noted with Piet Mondrian. "Throughout his life he was interested in Hindu philosophy and was inspired by mystic ideas. . . . The vertical and horizontal theme in his work reflects the interplay of contrasting forces: male and female, active and passive. . . . Mondrian identified the vertical with the male principle and the horizontal with the female."[27] To ascribe the horizontal and vertical elements to the female and the male is rather simplistic with regard to this diagram.

The repeat design element(s), indicted below, may well be a sign of the Lord Shiva. However it does not relate to any of the symbols associated with this deity that are know by this author. One may ascertain certain relationships with a number of tilaka associated with this deity, as illustrated below.

Their orientation must be assumed to possess little significance individually. The grouping may be of more significance--i.e., the central area (square) is surrounded by four of the design elements, and they, inturn, by eight elements. This may relate to the brahmabhaga and vishnubhaga--the square lower element and the octagonal mid-element of a linga. If this is the case, then the internal, central, nine-part square (Pitha Mandala), would refer to the linga's rudrabhaga. The deployment of the design elements, each of which are made up of twelve squares, is such that a nine pada square is formed in the center, four diagonally from the center, and four bracketed at the cardinal points by the eight outer elements. It is of further interest to note that in each corner a square of sixteen pada (Mahapitha Mandala) is formed. All are enclosed within a seventeen (two-hundred-eighty-nine, Vratabhoga Mandala) pada side.

The numbers four, eight, nine and seventeen would appear to be of some significance. Four denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Eight denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Eight Secret Deities (ashta-rahasaya-yogini or ashta-vag-devata); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Nine denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. It is exemplified in: the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; the nava-Mudras; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; and the nine level worship of the Shri Chakra (navavarana puja). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). Seventeen denotes conquest, wisdom and immortality. This number is a symbol for speech, as well as the number of assent and one which represents struggle. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces eight (1 + 7 = 8) and, therefore, the planet Saturn (Shani) (8).

Rajasthani Yantra (c. 17th C.)

This yantra[28] is of bas relief copper. The assigning of this yantra to a particular deity becomes quite difficult, if not impossible from the illustration in the text. Nonetheless, a basic analysis based upon form and numbers is possible.

The sacred precinct (bhupura) is of a single step. This in itself may indicate that the deity is not a 'major' deity.[29] The eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) is surrounded by a single line (Indic: valaya or vritta) which may indicate a deity of lesser standing. The eight-petaled lotus in the source illustration bears Sanskrit devices which, although unreadable, quite probably indicates the names of eight deities who occupy these seats. These eight petals encompass, like the Janan Yantra, a feminine trikona--i.e., downward pointing. This triangle consists of: thirty six triangles, twenty-one feminine trikona (arranged in rows of: 6, 5, 4, 3, 2, & 1) and fifteen male trikona (arranged in rows of: 5, 4, 3, 2, & 1). The twenty-one feminine trikonas all bear written inscriptions, however, the fifteen male trikonas are blank.

A majority of the numbers are masculine, odd numbers: three, fifteen and twenty-one; while a minority are feminine, even numbers: eight and thirty six. Three denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection (1 + 2 = 3). It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Fifteen denotes cosmic completeness, destiny. This number is considered to be a fatal number associated with chance. Fifteen is also auspicious in its make up: (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 = 15, 5 + 5 + 5 = 15, 3 x 5 = 15). It is exemplified in: the fifteen world planes being: six in kamaloka, five in rupaloka and four in arupaloka, and is the sum of the various directions in a nine pada magic square of Surya. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). When reduced it produces six (1 + 5 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Twenty-one denotes perfection, and success (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 = 21). It is related to the cycles of the moon, (3 x 7 = 21). As a compound number it is associated with: the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2) and the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). When reduced it produces three (2 + 1 = 3) and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). On the feminine side, eight denotes perfection, good fortune, and is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (Ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (Ashta-Matrikas); and the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature). It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Thirty-six is a number which represents macrocosmic completeness (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 + 7 + 8 = 36), and whose √ is 6. It is exemplified in the thirty-six Tattvas of Kashmiri Shaivism. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the planet Venus (Shukra). When reduced it produces nine (3 + 6 = 9) and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9).

Due to the fact that a majority of the numbers are masculine and that a majority of the planet signs are masculine--i.e., Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru), the Sun (Ravi or Surya), Mercury (Budha), Saturn (Shani) and Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka)--one may assume that this yantra could be that of a male deity. Although, it is also possible that it could be a female deity due to the numerical preponderance of the feminine trikona.

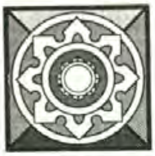
Thangka with Nine Mandala-Yantras

The 'Thangka with Nine Mandala-Yantras' illustrated in Rawson[30] presents, visually an interesting and complex image. The design, the elements of these mandala-yantras would lead one to suspect or even conjecture that this thangka is obviously of the Vajrayana tradition. As with the previous "Rajasthani Yantra," the lack of further information makes specific identification impossible, but formal analysis as well as numerical relationships are possible.

Each of the inner "mandala-yantras" are different in design and/or color arrangement, making nine separate, but related elements.



A

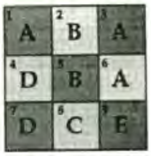
E



1 A	2 B	3 A
4 D	5 B	6 A
7 D	8 C	9 E

Frequency

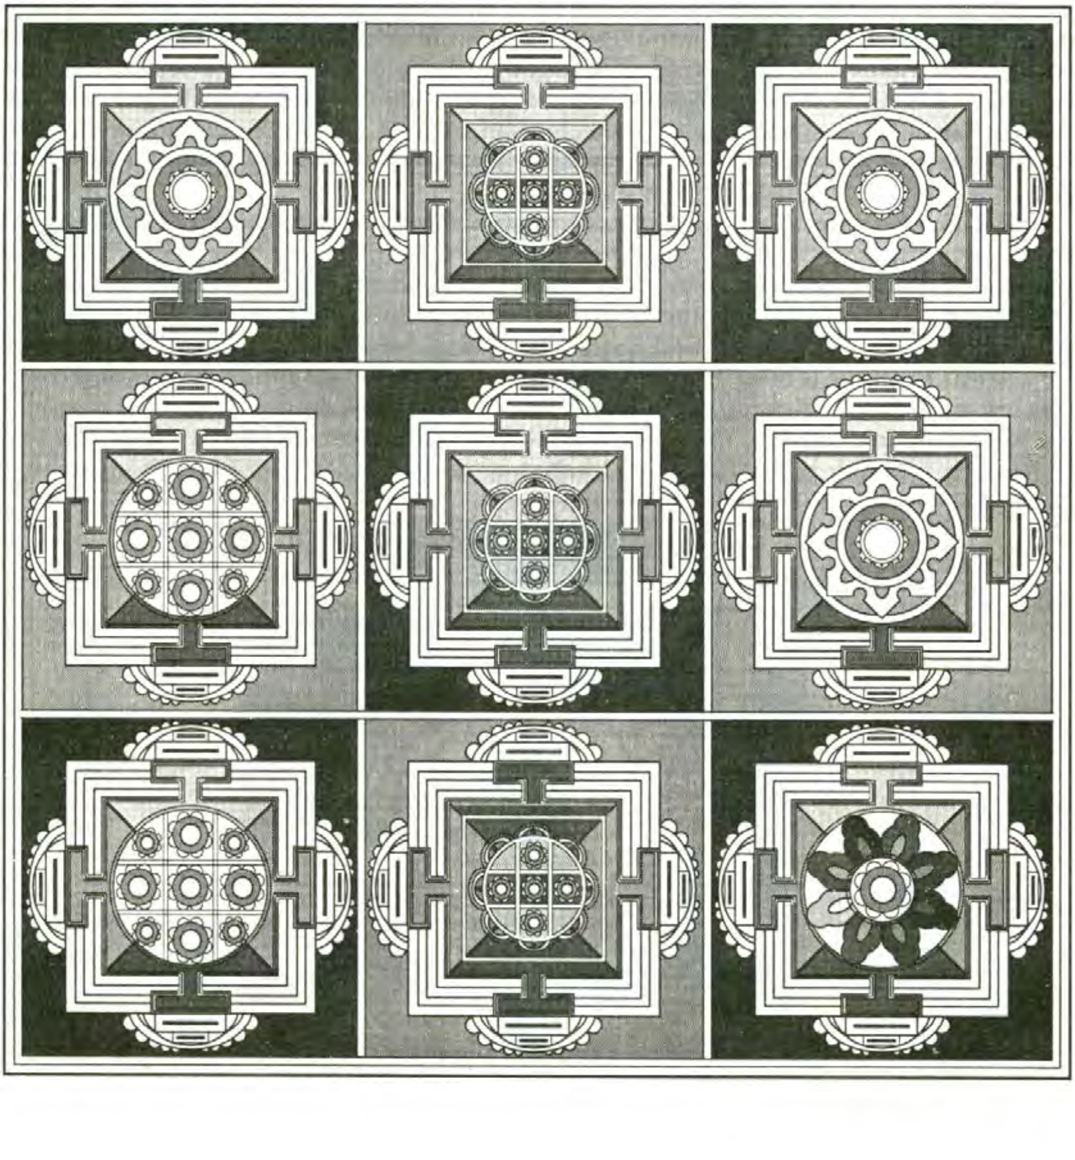
As is indicated above there are five elements--i.e., A-E (B and C are shown as separate, although C is but a variation on B). The elements are placed: A in squares 1, 3 & 6; B in squares 2 & 5; C in square 8; element D in squares 4 & 7 and E in square 9-- as indicated above. Element A is repeated three times, elements B & D are repeated twice, and C & E appear but once. Do these arrangements hold any iconic keys? If so, then the numbers one through nine may be of some arcane and esoteric consequence. Of further note is the arrangement of light and dark value squares upon which the individual "mandala-yantras" are placed--i.e., cruciform en plan, the dark squares numbering five while the light amount to four. The light squares fall on even number--feminine--spaces and the dark squares fall upon the odd--masculine--numbered ones, opposite in the value designation.

Certainly the numbers three, four, five and nine are significant beyond those mentioned immediately above. Three denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and has certain precedents as a vivifying force. It is a most sacred number. It is exemplified in: the trinity (Trimurti); and the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar. It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Four denotes completeness, perfection and a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the cardinal directions; the four phases of the moon; the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; and the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap). It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Five denotes magical properties and the natural elements both positive and negative. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, represents the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the five "M's" (Panchamakara); and the fifth of the five elements (earth [kshiti, prithvi]). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Nine denotes completion, perfection and a number whose √ is 3 and therefore a magnification of that sacred number. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number (9 x 9 = 81=9, 9 x 18 = 162 = 9). It is exemplified in: the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; and the Nava-Nadis. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka).

Even though masculine numbers appear to predominate, it cannot be assumed that the deities of the nine "mandala-yantras" are all male. Do the light value, even number squares hold feminine deities? A conundrum.

Plate 6 -- Thangka with Nine Mandala-Yantras

(PR, Fig. 55)



Shri Chakra Yantra

The Shri Chakra(m) Yantra, the most powerful and important of all the yantra, is equally complex. Its construction is precise. Each of the nine areas or levels--referred to individually as chakra--is iconographically significant. The yantra consists essentially of: a bhupura with three rings (trivalya), a sixteen-petaled lotus (shodasha-dala padma), an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma), fourteen triangles (chaturdasha trikona), ten outer triangles (dasha trikona), ten inner triangles, eight triangles (ashta trikona), a single triangle (trikona) and a bindu. In this representation, it consists of a bhupura of three steps, a shodasha-dala padma, a ashta-dala padma, a group of chaturdasha trikona, two groups of dasha trikona, a group of ashta trikona, a single trikona and a bindu.

The sacred precinct (Indic: bhupur or bhupura) of this yantra is composed of three elements: 1) three levels or squares (Indic: chaturasa or tri-rekha), 2) three rings or girdles (Indic: trivalaya or tri-vritta) as in the case of the Shri Chakra Yantra and 3) the bhupur, the area between the chaturasa and the trivalaya; although the bhupur is often employed to refer to the whole of the sacred precinct--i.e., that area beyond the first of the lotus petal rings. This precinct, the Trailokya Mohana Chakra, corresponds to the Akula Chakra and is ruled by Tripura. Generally, in the case of the Shri Chakra Yantra, it consists of three levels or squares (chaturasra or tri-rekha), although there are instances in which it is represented with two levels (See: Plate 82). The representation of the bhupur with three levels is considered to be of the Kaul Mat tradition, while that of two levels is of the Samaya Mat tradition.[31] The three steps are indicated below--i.e., the Kaul Mat tradition:

There are six symbolic gates (Indic: amnaya) which are guarded by puissant goddesses--i.e., Bhuvaneshvari to the East, Dakshina-Kali to the South, Kubjika to the West, Guhya-Kali to the North, Tara at the nadir and Bala-Maha-Tripura-Sundari at the zenith. The outer chaturasa is the home of ten siddhis (powers)--i.e., anima (power of becoming minute), laghima (power of lightness), mahima (power of strength), ishitva (power over others), vashitva (power of attraction of others), prakamya (power to assume any form), bhukti (delight in power), iccha (power to attain desires), garima (power of becoming heavy) and sarva-kamasiddhi (power to fulfill intentions). The middle chaturasa is guarded by eight fierce matrikas or powers at the cardinal and intercardinal points. Finally the inner line is the seat of ten goddess-lokapalas.[32] The three square limits of the Trailokya Mohana Chakra are said to represent the feet, knees and thighs of the Shri Chakra. The bhupur finally holds three rings.[33] These three rings or circles represent the three Divine Mothers of the Shakti Trimurti--i.e., Sarasvati, Lakshmi and Parvati--as well as three types of expression--i.e., pashyanti, madhyama & vaikhari. However, it must be noted that these three lines, these three circles do not represent an enclosure and in some traditions there may be only one or in others they are omitted altogether.

Plate 7 -- Shri Chakra Yantra

(SS, Nos. 1-9; SR, pp. 82-90)

These three rings or girdles (Indic: trivalya or tri-vritta) enclose a sixteen-petaled lotus (shodasha-dala-padma) and indicated below, left:

This lotus is known as Sarva Ashapurak Chakra or Shodashdal[34] also called the Sarvasha Paripuraka Chakra[35] and corresponds to the Muladhara Chakra of the body. It is the 'wish fulfilling' chakra[36] and the presiding deity is the goddess Tripureshi. The sixteen petals each are guarded by an individual goddess-shakti, each of whom, in turn, employ sixteen implements: the ten indriyas, five elements and one mind.[37] S. Rao, on the other hand lists: kama-karshini (desired centered attractions), buddhya-karshini (intellect centered attractions), ahama-karashini (ego centered attractions), shabda-karshini (sound centered attractions), sparsha-karshini (touch centered attractions), rupa-karshini (form centered attractions), rasa-karshini (taste centered attractions), gandha-karshini (taste centered attractions), chitta-karshini (thought centered attractions), dhairya-karshini (fortitude centered attractions), smritya-karshini (recollection centered attractions), nama-karshini (name centered attractions), bija-karshini (source centered attractions), atma-karshini (selfhood centered attractions), amrita-karshini (immortality centered attractions) and sharira-karshini (body centered attractions).[38] This ring or chakra is said to represent the Buddhist philosophy.

Within the sixteen-petaled lotus is an eight-petaled lotus (Indic: ashta-dala padma) as indicated above, right. This lotus is called the Sarva Sankshobhana Chakra and is often referred to as the 'agitator of all'[39] which is reigned over by the goddess Tripursundari., and corresponds to the Nabhi Chakra or Manipura Chakra of the body. The eight petals are thrones for eight goddesses who rule over vachan (speech), adana (transference), gamana (departure), visarjana (transcendence), ananda (bliss), bana (absence), upadana (giving) & upeksha (neglecting). Additionally the eight petals are symbolic of: rupa (form), rasa (taste), gandha (smell), sparsha (touch), shabda (sound), nada (primal sound), prakriti (primal nature) & purusha (self).[40] There are eight psychophysical forces (Indic: ananga) being: ananga-kusuma (speech), ananga-mekhala (transference), ananga-madana (departure), ananga-madanatura (transcendence), ananga-rekha (bliss), ananga-vegini (absence), ananga-madanankusha (giving) and ananga-malini (neglecting).[41] This ring or chakra is said to represent the philosophy revolving around the worship of Ganesha.

The eight-petaled lotus surrounds the Sarva Saubhagya Dayak Chakra or Sarva Saubhagya-davika Chakra or Sarva Saubhagyada Chakra, a chaturdasha kona (fourteen triangles), is referred to as 'the giver of all auspiciousness' and is reigned over by the goddess Tripura-vasini.[42] It is indicated below, left:

This fourteen-cornered form is composed of three overlapping triangles with their apexes pointed upwards--i.e., masculine and linga--and three overlapping triangles with their apexes pointed downwards wards--i.e., feminine and yoni. Each of the small triangles are reigned over by a Shakti who each in turn control one of fourteen nadis. The Shaktis with their corresponding nadis are: Sarva-Samkshobhini (alambusha-nadi), Sarva-Vidravini (kuhu-nadi), Sarva-Karshini (vishvodara-nadi), Sarva-Karini (varana-nadi), Sarva-Sammohini (hasti-jihva-nadi), Sarva-Stambhini (yasho-vati-nadi), Sarva-Jrimbhini (payasvini-nadi), Sarvakarshini or Sarva-Vasham-kari (gandhari-nadi), Sarva-Ranjani (pusha-nadi), Sarvonmadini (shankhini-nadi), Sarvartha-Sadhani (sarasvati-nadi), Sarva-Sampatti-purani (ida-nadi), Sarva-Mantra-mayi (pingala-nadi) & Sarva-Dvandva-mayi (sushumna-nadi).[43] The corresponding chakra of the human body is the Anahata Chakra and it represents the Samkhya philosophic tradition.

The next trikona chakra is the outer ten triangles (dashara-kona) called the Sarvartha-Sadhaka Chakra, referred to as 'the accomplisher of all purposes,' and reigned over by the goddess Tripura-Shri.[44] It is indicated above, right. This ten-cornered form is referred to as the 'outer dashara-kona' as opposed to the next, inner chakra known as the 'inner dashara-kona.' It is composed of five triangles with apexes pointing upwards--i.e., masculine and linga--and five triangles with apexes pointing downwards--i.e., feminine and yoni. These ten triangles are the seats of ten powerful goddesses: Sarva-siddhi-prada, Sarva-sampat-prada, Sarva-priyamkati, Sarva-mangala-karini, Sarva-kama-prada, Sarva-duhkba-vimochani, Sarva-mrityu-prashamani, Sarva-vighna-nivarini, Sarvanga-sundari & Sarva-saubhagya-dayini.[45] This chakra corresponds with the Vishuddha-Chakra of the human body and represents Vedic philosophy.

The next trikona chakra is the inner dashara-kona, the Sarva-Raksha-kara Chakra, called 'the protector of all,' and reigned over by the goddess Tripura-Malini.[46] It is indicated below, left:

This is the 'inner dashara-kona.' It, too, is composed of five triangles with apexes pointing upwards--i.e., masculine and linga--and five triangles with apexes pointing downwards--i.e., feminine and yoni. The ten triangles symbolize the ten deities allied with the forces of the vital fire (Indic: vahni-kala): Sarvajna (rechaka [the fire associated with elimination]), Sarva-shakti-prada (pachaka [the fire associated with digestion]), Sarvaishvarya-prada (shashana [associated with removing the effects of stomach fire]), Sarva-jnana-mayi (dahaka [the fire associated with burning]), Sarvavyadhi-vinashini (plavaka [the fire associated with the aids of digestion]), Sarvadhara-svarupa (ksharaka [the fire associated with bile secretions]), Sarva-papa-hara (kshobhaka [the fire associated with the food churning process]), Sarva-raksha-svarupini (irimbhaka [the fire associated with yawning]) and Sarvepsita-phala-prada (mohaka [the fire associated with fainting]).[47] The 'inner dashara-kona' corresponds with the Manipura-Chakra of the human body and is the representative of the solar philosophy.

The ashtakona, the chakra of eight triangles rests within the inner dashara-kona, is called the Sarva-Roga-hara Chakra, the 'eliminator of all diseases,' and is presided over by the goddess Tripura-Siddha.[48] It is the seventh of nine levels and is indicated above, right: This chakra is made up of five triangles with their apexes pointed downward--i.e., feminine and yoni--and three triangles with the apexes pointed upwards--i.e., masculine and linga. It is guarded by eight secret, puissant rahasaya-yogini (secret deities), also called vag-devatas (deities of expression), who reign over the powers of the eight fundamental urges. These goddesses are: Vashini (sita [cold]), Kameshi (ushna [heat]), Mohini (sukha [joy]), Vimala (duhkha [pain]), Aruna (iccha [desire]), Jayini (sattva [wisdom]), Sarveshi (rajas [activity]) and Kaulini (tamas [inactivity]).[49] The Sarva-Roga-hara Chakra corresponds to the Svadhishthana-Chakra of the human body and represents the Vaishnava philosophy.

The final triangle (kona) is the 'bestower of all attainments,' called the Sarva-Siddhi-prada Chakra, which is ruled over by the goddess Tripuramba. It is the eight level and is indicated below. A single, downward pointing triangle (feminine and yoni) composes this chakra. This trikona occupies a position of immense power and importance as it the immediate guard for the locus of the yantra. The three corners of this triangle are the seats of important divinities: Kameshvari who rules over the kamarupa-pitha--present in the Muladhara Chakra--and is the symbol for the moon (chandra or soma); Vajreshvari who reigns over purnagiri-pitha--present in the Anahata Chakra--and is the iconographic representative of the sun (ravi or surya); and Bhaga-Malini who presides over jalandhara-pitha--present in the Vishuddha Chakra--and symbolizes fire (vahni or agni). This triangle is speech-born (Indic: vag-bhava) and also represents the three forms of speech: pashyanti, madhyama & vaikhari.[50] The Sarva-Siddhi-prada Chakra is further said to be the head of the mother goddess and therefore corresponds with the Sahasrara-Chakra of the human body. It is often called the 'threefold residence' symbolic of the three Tantric centers: kamarupa, purnagiri and jalandhara. This feminine triangle, quite naturally represents the Shakti philosophy.

The final level is reached. It is the ninth, the bindu, the Center, 'that which is filled with bliss and joy,' the Sarvananda-maya Chakra, the locus of all yantra power and the seat of the supreme deity to which the yantra is dedicated. It is often referred to as the mandala in which the deity resides. In this yantra, she being referred to by a number of titles or names--such as: Tripura-Sundari, Lalita, Kamakala, Para-bhattarika, Maha-Kameshvari or Shri-Vidya. This is the all powerful deity, the Shri-chakra-raja-rajeshvari (presiding Empress of the Shri Chakra). She is represented by and resides in the very center, the bindu. The bindu is most frequently represented as a small circular dot, however, its conceptual-contentual form is that of three small dots (bindu-traya) arranged as a triangle. This is indicated in Plate 6 as a circle, but shown as an arrangement of three small dots in the enlarged section as illustrated below. The three 'dots' represent the three fires: the Moon (Chandra or Soma), Sun (Ravi or Surya) and Fire (Vahni or Agni). Finally, the philosophy represented by the Sarvananda-maya Chakra, this sacred center is Shaivism.

This is:Tripura-Sundari, Lalita, Kamakala, Para-bhattarika, Maha-Kameshvari, Shri-Vidya, Chakraraja, Viyat Chakra, Matrika Chakra, Navayoni Chakra--this is:

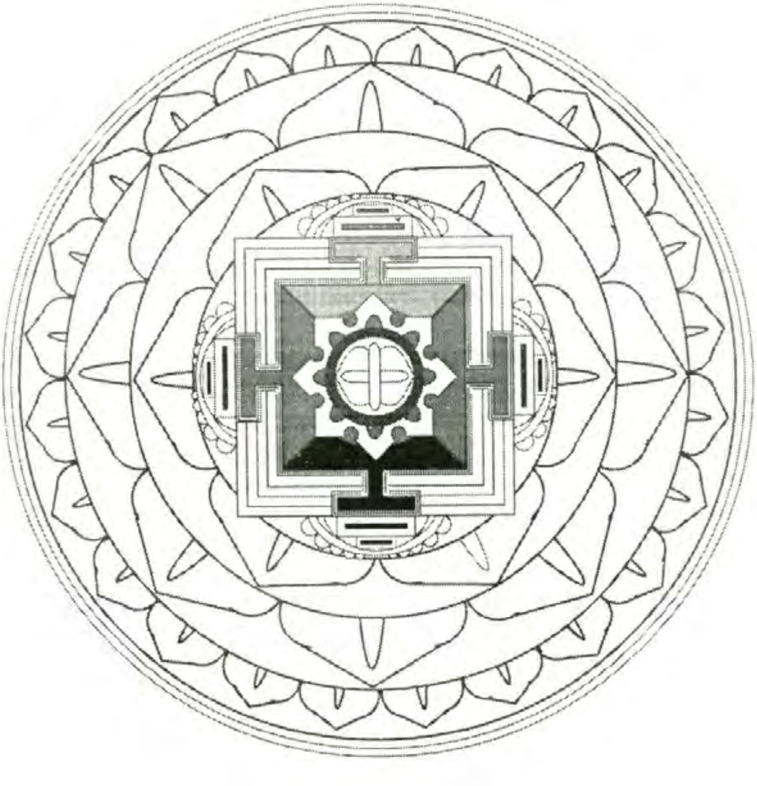
Deity Yantras



Amba Matta Yantra

The Amba Matta Yantra is a yantra dedicated to "the mother Amba" and, therefore, a Shakti yantra. This deity, although minor in import, is frequently worshipped in the south of India as well as other area in Southeast Asia, Malaysia in particular. Amba is seen by some as a princess of Kashi, the eldest of three sisters of some prominence in the Mahabharata. As such, she was ill-fated, wrongly accused, performed various penance and immolated herself, thereby representing unrequited love. As a goddess Amba Matta is a form of the deity Devi and therefore to the Shakti sect. She is also akin to the Shaiva (the worship to the Lord Shiva). In both sects she is known as the mother of the universe. She may appear in either a six or eight-armed form riding a tiger. In the eight armed form she bears icons of the Lords Brahmá, Vishnu and Shiva.

The yantra of this deity does not consists of a square enclosure as does the majority of those represented herein, but is composed of a circle. Within this circle is a triangular form made up of two triangles which are connected and extended forming nine compartments. Within these compartments are sacred bij (Tamil) which apply to Amba Matta's mantra. The triangular yantra is related to the fire element. It is interesting to note that the triangle is oriented upwards, a masculine triangle (linga), rather than oriented downwards, a feminine triangle (yoni). This may be because of the continuation of Princess Amba's story in the Mahabharata. A boon from the Lord Shiva promised her that she would be reborn as a male and would cause the death of Bhishma, the source of her previous trials. She was reborn as Shikhandi.

The trikona, three-sided, represents fire, the male, the sun, the linga & the triple principles of creation. Three denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection (1 + 2 = 3). It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Nine denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka).

The iconic representation of this goddess in the form of a masculine trikona is not unusual. There are a number of precedence for this type of representation. Certainly, the story of Amba Matta would appear to justify this iconic representation. (VM, TR, MB, JG)

Annapurna Yantra

The minor deity Annapurna is generally represented as a youthful goddess. She is the provider of food, protecting her devotees from hunger and starvation. She receives her foodstuff to distribute from Bhikshatanamurti, a mendicant form of the Lord Shiva. The Tantric goddess, Annapurna (aka Vishalakshi) is a form or manifestation of the supreme deity, Devi, of the Shakti sect. She is also related to the Shaivas and popular in the south of India as well as an important deity of the sacred city Benares.

The Annapurna yantra, a Shakti yantra, is composed of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Immediately within this precinct rests a sixteen-petaled (shodasha-patraka or shodasha-dala padma) lotus. This outer band encircles an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) which, in turn, surrounds a four-petaled inner lotus (chatur-dala padma). There are twenty-eight petals in total. An inner circle surrounds a triangle with the apex oriented upwards within which rests the bindu, the seat or manifestation of the goddess. As has been noted the representation of a female divinity by a masculine symbol has numerous precedents.

Various numbers come into play in this yantra--one, three, four, eight, sixteen and twenty-eight. One--referring to the bhupura--represents the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); and the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Four--referring to the chatur-dala-padma-- connotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). The numeral sixteen--referring to the shodasha-patraka--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven ($1 + 6 = 7$) and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. As is noted immediately above, there are a number of references to the moon. Twenty-eight--referring to the total number of petals--represents an auspicious number, this numeral represents a number that is associated with the moon's cycle--twenty-eight days. It is a perfect number arrived at by the addition of its divisors. It is exemplified in the number of "mansions" in the moon. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Saturn (Shani) (8). When reduced it produces one ($2 + 8 = 1[0]$) and, therefore, the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1).

The mantra employed is: "Hareeng Namo Bhagavate Maheshvari Annapurna Savaha."[52] (TR, HKS, JG, LC II)

Bagla Yantra (I)

Bagla[53] or Bagla-Mukhi is one of the ten aspects of Maha-Kali. She has the power to lay low the mighty, make mute the articulate--i.e., to change to the opposite. As a Dasha-Mahavidyas, Bagla is a fierce deity of some importance and is related or associated with Devi and therefore a member of the Shakti sect. Her realm is the embodiment of cruelty, hatred, jealousy, the secret desire to kill and is found in the second night of courage.

The Bagla Yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, consists of a three level sacred enclosure (bhupura) within which are three bands of lotus petals, eight in each ring (ashta-dala padma), twenty-four petals in total. Centered, within these three bands of lotus petals is to be found a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. Within this six pointed star is a triangle with its apex oriented to the right.[54] At the center of the yantra is a bindu.

The numbers three, six, eight and twenty-four are prominent in this yantra. Three--referring to the three level bhupura and the central trikona--refers to perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection (1 + 2 = 3). It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers (2 x 3 = 6) signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the three ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Finally, twenty-four--referring to the total number of petals of the three ashta-dala padmas-- denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, being 12 + 12 = 24, and is considered a lucky number as 2 + 4 = 6. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six (2 + 4 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra employed for Bagla-Mukhi is: "Om Hareeng Bagla Mukhai Namaha"[55] or "Om Hring Baglamukhi sarva / dushtanam vavachamukham / istambhay jivhamkeelay / buddhinshay / Hring Aum Svaha."[56] (RG, HJ, TR, AD, SPS, LC II)

Bagla Mukhi Yantra (II)

A variation on the Bagla Mukhi Yantra (I), the Bagla Mukhi Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, presents a number of significant differences. First it is bounded by a two level sacred enclosure (bhupura) within which are two bands of lotus petals, sixteen in the outer band (shodasha-dala padma) and eight (ashta-dala padma) in the inner The total of the two lotus is twenty-four petals also as to be seen in Bagla Mukhi Yantra (I). The center chakra of this yantra holds a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. Centered in this shatkona is a triangle with its apex oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. A bindu, the seat of power and the manifestation of the deity, rests in the center of the whole.

There are six numbers which appear to be significant: two, three, six, eight, sixteen and twenty-four. Two--referring to the two levels of the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Finally, twenty-four--referring to the total of lotus petals--symbolizes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Bagla Mukhai Namaha."[57] (RG, HJ, TR, AD, SPS, LC, LC II)

Bagla Mukhi Yantra (III)

The third yantra under consideration of this deity, the Bagla Mukhi yantra (III), a Shakti yantra, is a variation on Bagla Mukhi Yantra (II). The bhupura consists of a single stepped sacred enclosure. Protected by this precinct is a lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) dynamically oriented (dynamic = power = female). Surrounded by this lotus is a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of interlocking triangles; one with its apex oriented upwards and the other with its apex oriented downwards. Within this six pointed star is a trikona with its apex oriented downwards. Centered in the whole is a bindu, the seat of Bagla Mukhi.

Even though this yantra is a close variation on the Bagla Mukhi Yantra (II), there are some differences with regard to the consideration of numbers--they being: one, three, six and eight. One--referring the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the trikona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as represented by the shatkona--connotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

As with the previous two, the mantra assigned to this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Bagla Mukhai Namaha." (RG, HJ, TR, AD, SPS, LC, LC II, APR)

Bagla Mukhi Yantra (IV)

The fourth variation of the Bagla Mukhi Yantra is related to Bagla Mukhi yantra (II & III), a Shakti yantra. This fierce Dasha-Mahavidya is some times referred to as "crane headed"[58] and represents the uglier side of humankind--"jealousy, hatred and cruelty."[59] Her worship brings to her devotees self confidence, courage, independence and invincibility.[60]

The sacred enclosure, the bhupura consists of two levels. A single ashta-dala padma rests in the center of the bhupura's field. This lotus encloses a shatkona, the apexes of which are oriented upwards and downwards. At the very center of the yantra is a bindu.

The numerals two, six and eight bear significance. Two--referring to the two-leveled bhupura--symbolizes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers (2 x 3 = 6) signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for Bagla-Mukhi is: "Om Hring Baglamukhi sarva / dushtanam vavachamukham / istambhay jivhamkeelay / buddhinshay / Hring Aum Svaha."[61] (LC, LCII, HJ, PR, AM, TR, RG)

Bagla Mukhi Yantra (V)

The Bagla Mukhi yantra (V), a Shakti yantra and a variation on Bagla Mukhi yantra (II), possesses a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of three steps. A lotus of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma) rests within this precinct, dynamically oriented. Resting within this sixteen-petaled lotus is one with eight petals (ashta-dala padma). The two lotus together amount to twenty-four petals. An inner circle with a six-pointed star (shatkona) with an orientation that is different from those employed in the previous yantra--one of the triangles oriented to the right while the other is oriented to the left. Within this six-pointed star is a triangle with its apex oriented upwards. Centered within this inner triangle is a bindu (dot).

Five numbers appear to be of significance--three, six, eight, sixteen and twenty-four. Three--referring to both the trikona and the three-stepped bhupura--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection (1 + 2 = 3). It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers (2 x 3 = 6) signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the (shodasha-dala padma)--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Finally, twenty-four--referring to the total lotus petals--symbolizes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Bagla Mukhi Namha."[62] It is not unusual for a deity, especially the Dasha-Mahavidyas to be represented by a number of different yantras. Bagla Mukhi Yantra (V) does, however, present some questions.[63] (LC, LCII, HJ, PR, AM, TR, RG)

Balarama (avatara) Yantra

Called 'Rama the strong one,' the eighth avatara of the Lord Vishnu, Balaramavatara is considered to be the older brother of Krishnavatara. Due to his uncle Kamsa's perfidy, he was removed from the womb of his mother Devaki as her seventh son and was placed into Rohini's womb by Mayadevi. He was married to Revati, daughter of Rishi-King (rajarishi) Revata. With his brother Krishnavatara, he partook of many adventure, including the destruction of Kamsa. Upon his death a white serpent issued from his mouth. It is said that this serpent was Shesha, giving rise to the belief of some that he was an incarnation of Shesha. Balaramavatara is never worshipped independently, but is found in shrines dedicated to Krishnavatara. There are those Vaishnavas who do not believe that Balaramavatara is an avatar of the Lord Vishnu, they consider the Buddhavatara in his place.

The Balarama Yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, consists of a four level sacred enclosure (bhupura). An eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma), which is dynamically oriented, occupies the central position. This yantra is quite similar to the: Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55),Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103).[64] This cannot be considered unusual since Balarama is deemed to be an avatar of the Lord Vishnu. There are radiant lines proceeding from the central circle on all eight petals, pointing in all directions. The central circle consists of a number of dots similar to the bindu, or bija, that is to be found in a number of the other yantras form this source.[65]

Two numbers are of apparent importance--four and eight. Four--referring to the four level bhupura--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The fact that this yantra is rather simple when compared to others does not denigrate its importance. Rather, it is interesting to note that the yantras of the Lords Vishnu and Shiva, likewise are not exceedingly elaborate. Perhaps this would indicate the fact that yantra, an important element of Tantra, is more frequently associated with the Shakti sect. (SPS, TR, RG, MS)

Bala (Shakti) Yantra (I)

Bala (Shakti) is a Hindu goddess, a form or manifestation of the deity Devi and related to the Shaivas. In particular, Bala (Shakti) is the name that is used for Devi when she is worshipped as a nine year old. In addition, she is worshipped in "the Kamakshi-amman temple at Conjeeveram" in which a chakra (yantra) is placed in front of the deity, thereby ascribing to her the dominion over the six chakras (shat-chakra). The source noted for this yantra is Silpasara.[66]

The Bala (Shakti) yantra, a Shakti yantra, is composed of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of two levels. An eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma), which is dynamically oriented, encloses a circle. This circle in turn contains a hexagon which is dynamically oriented. A triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented downwards rests within the hexagon, and at the very center a bindu. The fact that the ashta-dala padma, the hexagon and the triangle are dynamically oriented underline the feminine quality of the yantra.

Four numerals appear worth considering: two, three, six and eight. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the hexagon--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

A mantra is associated or assigned to every yantra. The source of this yantra, unfortunately, did not note a mantra. (AM, HKS, MS)

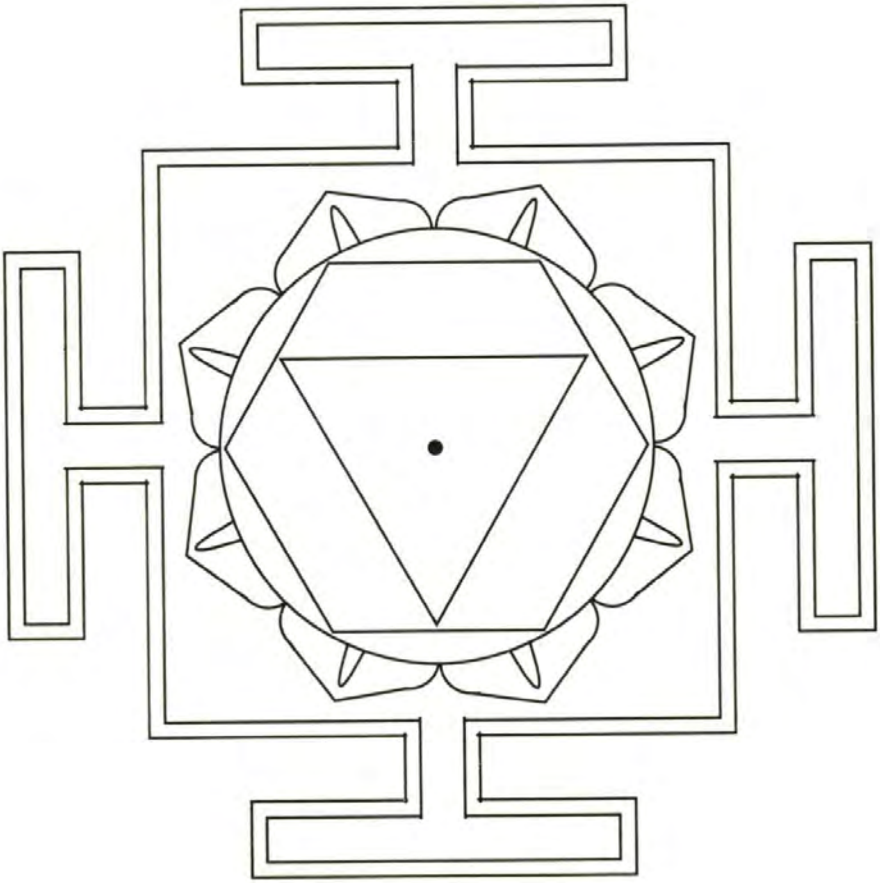
Plate 16 -- Bala-Shakti Yantra (I)

(HKS, p. 222)



Bala (Shakti) Yantra (II)

The Bala (Shakti) Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, indicates not merely a variation on the previous, but one of a completely different character.[67] This in itself is not unusual, merely indicates a different source from which this yantra was drawn.

The source illustration does not indicate a bhupura. A sacred enclosure of a single step was utilized here at the discretion of the author even though the Bala (Shakti) Yantra (I) utilizes a two-stepped bhupura. A lotus of twelve petals (dvidasha-dala padma) is the first element. This lotus encircles one of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). Within this inner lotus is a shatkona with a large circle in its interior hexagonal space. Although a circle has the numerical value of one, and, therefore, masculine, it is considered by its very form to be feminine--i.e., circle = vaginal. A bindu is centered at the whole.

It would seem apparent that four numbers are of significance--i.e., one, six, twelve and sixteen. One--referring to the inner circle--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Twelve--referring to the dvidasha dala padma--denotes sacrifice and is related to immortality. This numeral is: a cosmic number as well as comprehending all numbers lower than itself. It is exemplified in: the Barahmasa poetry being based on twelve; the twelve signs of the Zodiac; the twelve hours of the day as well as the twelve hours of the night; and the twelve months of the solar year. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Additionally, it represents the Anahata Chakra. Sixteen--referring to the dvidasha dala padma--symbolizes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalās of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra.

As with all yantras, there are various deities of a subordinate nature associated with a yantra. The employment here of two lotus of twelve and sixteen petals signifies twelve and sixteen deities respectively who reign over a particular petal and guard the central area much in the same way as do the parivara-devata stand sentinel over the inner sanctuary of a temple. Bala-Tripura Yantra

Bala-Tripura Yantra is one of three goddesses which are closely associated with the Shri-Chakra Yantra (See above, pp. 42-48). She is envisioned as being the youthful Shri-Vidya (Devi) mother goddess, a girl of sixteen.[68]

The yantra, a Shakti yantra, is composed of a bhupura of two steps.[69] Within this sacred precinct is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The ashta-dala padma encloses a set of triangles (trikona) forming nine points (nava-yoni). The first, an equilateral triangle with its apex pointed upwards--masculine and linga--touches the surrounding circle. The second triangle, an isosceles triangle, with its inverted base resting upon the center line of the whole and its apex touching the bottom of the circle, is feminine and yoni. The third triangle, an equilateral triangle, is inverted with its apex touching the base of the first equilateral triangle and its base touching the surrounding circle. These three triangles so arranged form eight points (ashta-yoni). The three overlapping triangles form six feminine (yoni) triangles (see below, left) and five masculine (linga) triangles. The ninth point is formed by a line running from the right hand corner of the second (inverted) equilateral triangle, to the inverted apex of the second (isosceles) triangle (see below, right). SR does not indicate a bindu in the illustration of this yantra.

Two, three, five, six, eight and nine are six numbers which figure prominently in this yantra. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality and diversity. It is exemplified in: the concept of right-left; heaven-hell; day-night, etc.; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Five--referring to the five linga trikona--denotes magical properties, mental activity, the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the five "M's" (Panchamakara); the five skandhas; the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). Six--referring to the six yoni kona--denotes the macrocosmic, the spiritual plus the material world; and balance. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion. This number is an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. Nine--referring to the nine points--denotes completion, perfection, wisdom and silence. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; and the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna).

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Aim Klim Sauh."[70] (SR, HKS, TR)

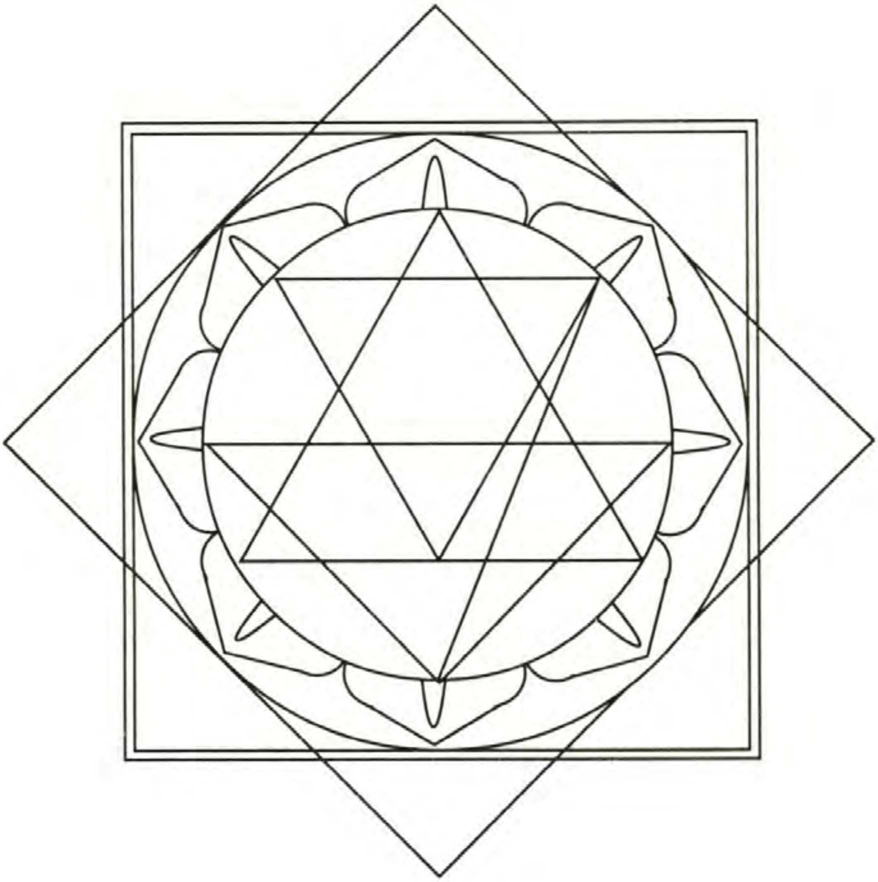
Plate 18 -- Bala-tripura Yantra

(SR, p. 96)



Bhairon Yantra (I)

Bhairon is a deity of contradictory genesis. He is a godling who represents the spirits of the field and is termed in the Shiva Purana as incarnate of the Lord Shiva. Also, he is connected with the Lord Shiva through Bhairava and with the cult of dogs. Bhairon, in the Vishnu Purana, is described as being part of the Lord Vishnu. He is particularly popular in north India.

The Bhairon (Bhairava) yantra (I), a Shaiva yantra, is formed by a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within this enclosure is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. This ring encircles three triangles: two forming a shatkona and oriented vertically, and the third trikona, a dynamic isosceles, has its apex pointed downwards. With the three overlapping triangles, eleven triangles are apparent.

Four numbers appear to be of some significance--one, three, six, eight and eleven. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura and to the single feminine triangle--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the feminine trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as exemplified in the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Eleven--referring to the total number of trikona--denotes universal energy, liberty and the transience of life. It is considered obstinate and revolutionary. To some it is an unlucky number (Hindu), the number for transgressions, while to others is auspicious and dynamic signifying vitality. It is a mystic number made up of one twice (1\1). It is exemplified in: the eleven Rudras who are destroyers. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). When reduced it produces two, and, therefore, the Moon (Soma or Chandra).

The mantra employed is: "Om Hareeng, Butkaya Aapaduddharanay Kuru Kuru Butkaya Hareeng, Om Swaha," or "Om Hareeng Bhairve Bhairve thekarhar maang raksha raksha hoong phut swaha."[71] (LC, LCII, MS)

Bhairon Yantra (II)

The Bhairon (Bhairava) yantra (II), a Shaiva yantra, is composed of a three-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this enclosure is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. These petals enclose a double circle within which is a shatkona. Within this six-pointed star is a single triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented upwards--masculine and linga. At the very center is a bindu (dot), designating the powerful locus of the deity.

There are five numbers which appear to merit out consideration--one, two, three, six and eight. One--referring to the masculine trikona--connotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--referring to the double circle--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the triple-stepped bhupura--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed is: "Om Hareeng Butkaya Apaduddhar anay Kuru Kuru Barukaya Hareeng."[72] (LC, LC II, MS)

Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (I)

Bhuvaneshvari, called the "sovereign queen of the total existing phenomenal word,"[73] is one of the aspects of Maha-Kali (Dasha-Mahavidyas). She represents one of the ten aspects of the divine night and her realm is the forces of the physical world and the night of realization. It is said that the Trimurti were enlightened by this deity when she made them realize that they were only the tools or implements for creation, preservation and destruction--three aspects of her limitless power.

The Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, is bounded by a single level bhupura. Within this sacred precinct are two lotus of eight petals each (ashta-dala padma), one superimposed over the other. The inner ring of petals is somewhat different from the representation of similar padmas in that the petals possess a dark central area.[74] The inner circle consists of a shatkona (six pointed star) made up of two intersecting triangles: one oriented to the left while the other's orientation is to the right, the dynamic, feminine orientation. At the center is a bindu.

One, six, eight and sixteen are four numbers which appear in this yantra and seem to be of some consequence. One--referring to the single step of the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the total number of petals in the two lotus--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada ($4 \times 4 = 16$) called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven ($1 + 6 = 7$) and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra.

The mantra recited for this deity is: "Om Aeeing Hareeng Shareeng," " Om Hareeng Shareeng"[75] or "Hareeng."[76] (SH, TR, HJ, LC, LC II, PR)

Plate 21 -- Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (I)

Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (II)

The Bhuvaneshvari yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, is a variation on Bhuvaneshvari yantra (I). The only difference is to be found in the orientation of the shatkona. The yantra is bounded by a single level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this sacred enclosure are two lotus of eight petals each (ashta-dala padma)--one superimposed over the other. Within the inner circle rests a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of two intersecting triangles. This shatkona is oriented vertically, rather than horizontally as is represented in Bhuvaneshvari yantra (I). At the center of the yantra is a bindu.

As with the previous yantra, one--referring to the single step of the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the total number of petals in the two lotus--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. However, it is the orientation of the shatkona, as noted above, which makes the Bhuvaneshvari yantra (II) different from the Bhuvaneshvari yantra (I). The horizontally oriented shatkona connotes the dynamic element of this symbol. (SH, TR, HJ, LC, LC II, PR)

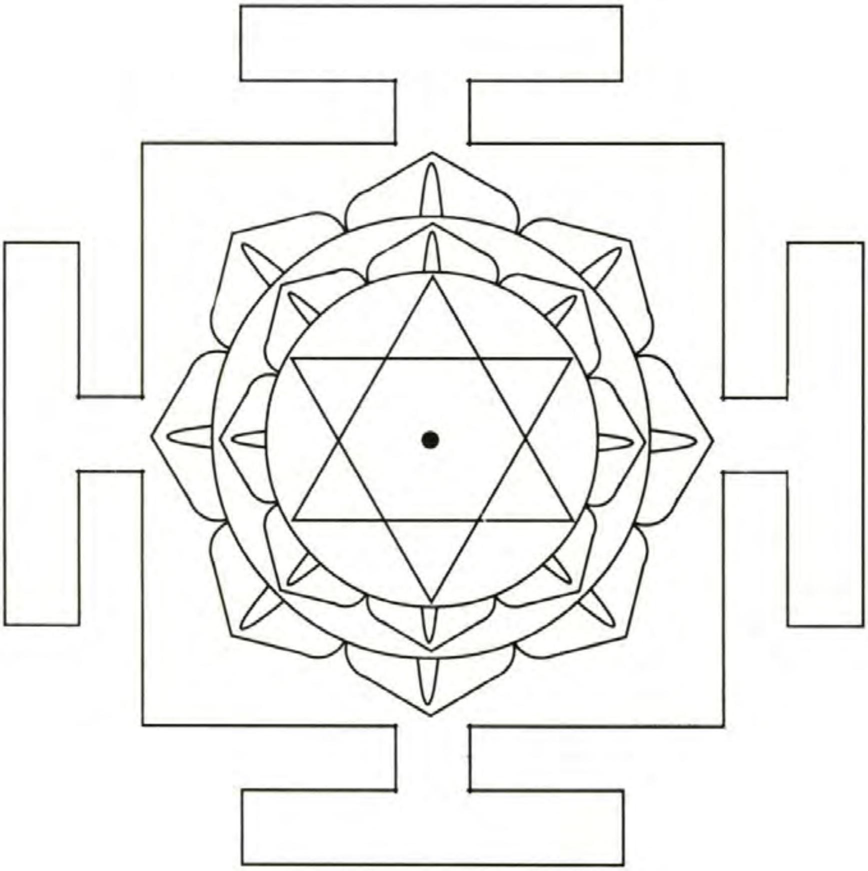
(APR, fig. 126; HJ, Pl. 9 & p. 104)



Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (III)

The Bhuvaneshvari yantra (III), a Shakti yantra and a third variation, is bounded by a double-leveled sacred enclosure unlike Bhuvaneshvari yantra (I & II). Within this divine precinct (bhupura) is a single lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma). It is this single lotus which constitutes the major difference between this yantra and the Bhuvaneshvari yantra (I & II). The petals encircle a six pointed star (shatkona), oriented vertically made up of dynamic isosceles triangles. At the center of all is a bindu.

Two, six and eight are three numerals which bear some scrutiny. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. In addition, the shatkona is composed of isosceles triangles, rather than equilateral triangles, emphasizing the dynamic elements of this icon.

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Aeeing Hareeng Shareeng" or " Om Hareeng Shareeng."[77] (SH, TR, HJ, LC, LC II, PR)

Chinnamasta Yantra (I)

Chinnamasta ("the one whose head is severed") is one of the aspects of Maha-Kali (Dasha-Mahavidya) and represents one of the ten aspects of the divine night. Chinnamasta's realm is the eternal darkness or night, the sacrifice of the severed head, and the night of courage. Of the Dasha-Mahavidya, Chinnamasta is considered as one of the most important and further represents the severing of all mental activities (vrittis). Her sacrifice, the severing of her own head, and the resulting three streams of life's fluid represent the Three Forces (gunas): sattvaguna, rajoguna and tamoguna.

The Chinnamasta Yantra, a Shakti yantra, is unremittingly feminine. It is made up of a three level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this divine shelter is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). Within this lotus is to be found is a triangle (trikona) with its apex pointed downward. This triangle encloses three concentric circles (trivalya) within which, finally, is a second downward oriented triangle. At the center of all is a bindu.

The number three predominates Chinnamasta's yantra; one, two and eight are secondary numerals. One--referring to the feminine trikonas (two)--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--representing the two trikonas--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona as well as the triple-stepped bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as represented in the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Shareeng, Kaleeng, Hareeng, Aeeng Vaj Vyrochaneeye Houng Houng Phut Swaha."[78] (SH, LC, LC II, PR, HJ)

Chinnamasta Yantra (II)

The Chinnamasta Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, is nearly identical to the Chinnamasta Yantra (I). It is made up of a three level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this divine shelter is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). This lotus holds a dynamic, isosceles triangle (trikona) with its apex pointed downward. This triangle encloses three concentric circles within which, finally, is a second downward oriented equilateral triangle. At the center of the whole is a bindu.

The numbers one, two, three and eight are of some importance within this yantra. One--referring to the single lotus--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--representing the two trikonas--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona as well as the triple-stepped bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as represented in the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Shareeng, Kaleeng, Hareeng, Aeeng Vaj Vyrochaneeye Houng Houng Phut Swaha."[79] (SH, LC, LC II, PR, HJ)

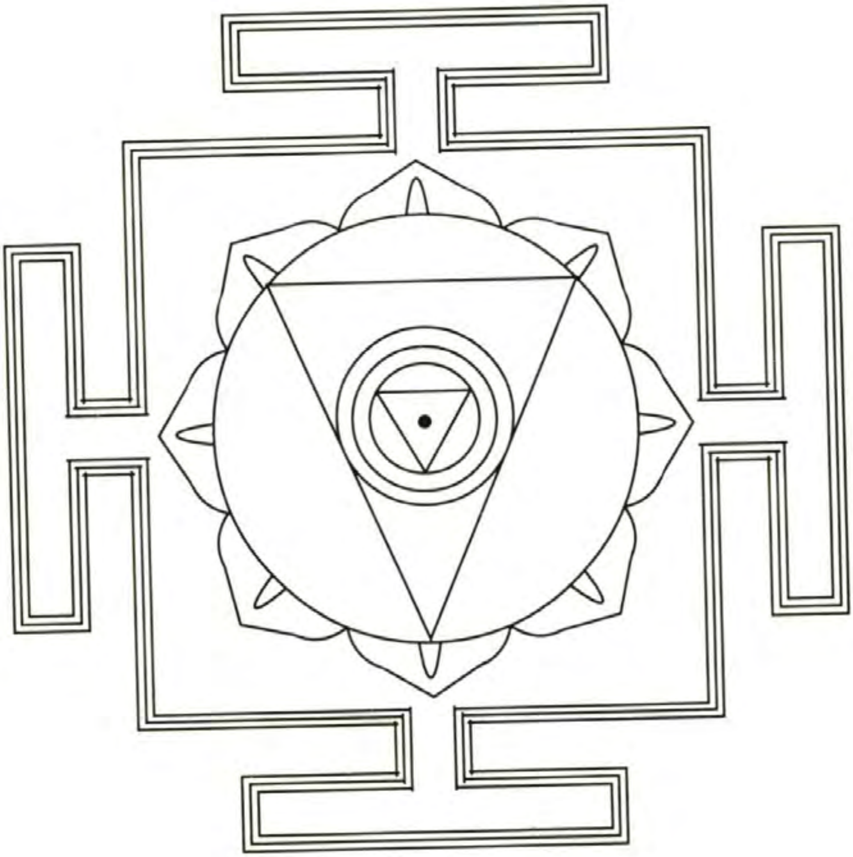
Plate 25 -- Chinnamasta Yantra (II)

(LC, fig. 3-14)



Chinnamasta Yantra (III)

Virtually identical to the Chinnamasta Yantra (I), this Chinnamasta Yantra is made up of a three level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this divine shelter is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). Within this lotus is to be found is a triangle (trikona) with its apex pointed downward. This triangle encloses three concentric circles (trivalya) within which, finally, is a second downward oriented triangle. At the center of all is a bindu.

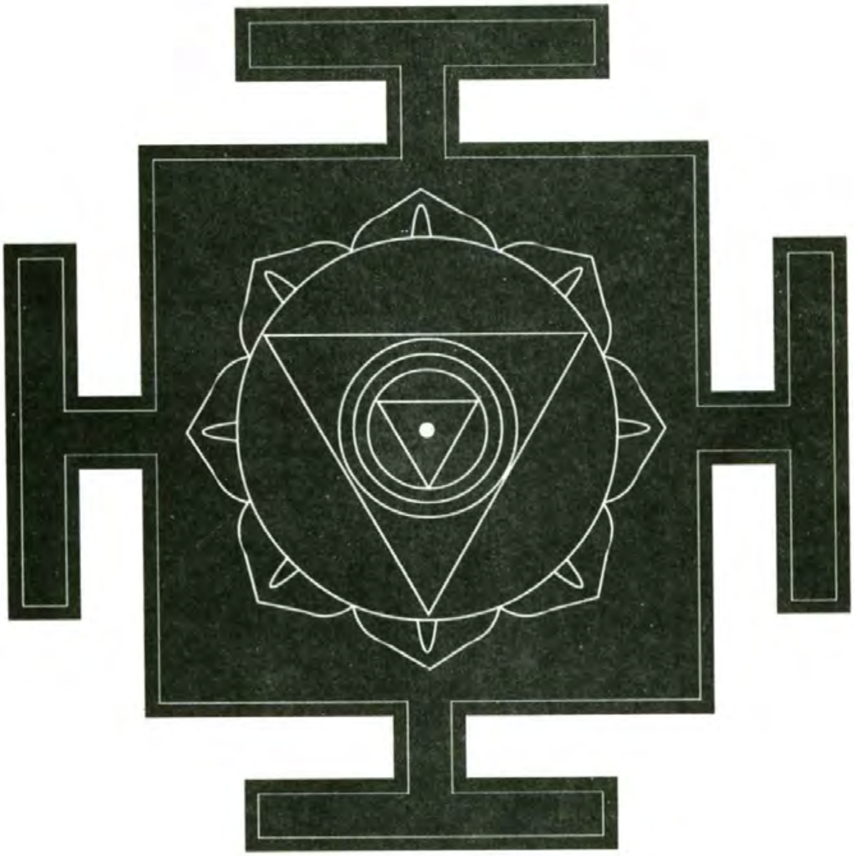
The difference here is obvious. This yantra is presented with the whole being black in color with white lines. Black does possess certain iconic significance. It represents night, the realm of the moon and therefore, female and the motive power. (HJ, SH, LC, LC II, PR)



Devi Yantra

Devi is the major Hindu goddess and is the focus of the Shaktis. She is, indeed, unique. Devi as God, She becomes a singular concept in the major religions of the world. Devi, She is associated with the Vedic Aditi, the 'Original Mother,' and is the Mahadevi (the Great Goddess), the One Without Beginning, the Supreme Deity, the Ultimate Principle. Her three major manifestations are: Maha-Sarasvati, Maha--Lakshmi and Maha-Kali. She assumes major importance and is considered by some as the Supreme One.[80]

The Devi Yantra, a Shakti yantra, illustrated here is different from the majority of the other yantras in this brief study in that it is shown, or drawn, without the normal bhupura. It consists of a triangle, oriented downwards with three lotus-like petals guarding the three corners. Within is the sacred bijakshara.

The yantra is obviously feminine. It is "in praise of Devi, (who) stand(s) in no need of separately worshiping Brahma, Vishnu and Rudra (Shiva), who are but her agents, standing by her foot stool, ever at her back (sic) and call and in the act of adoring her."[81] In this brief quote, one sees the position of this goddess and, it would seem, that Her paramount importance is such that the need for an elaborate yantra is obviated. One might even be inclined to apply the term digambara (sky clad) to this yantra--a term applied to Kali whose greatness and power of place is illustrated in her absolute radiance by her nudity. She is above the need for any adornment or garments.

The sacred number three becomes the dominant number: the triangle (trikona) and the three petal forms. Three denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru).

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Trayanam devaram tri-guna-Janitanam tava Sive bhavet puja puja tava charanayo yai Viracita."[82] This yantra is inscribed upon gold and would be worn about the neck as a protective amulet. (LC II, HJ, SH, LC, PR)

Dhanda Yantra

Dhanda (aka Danda), called "the one who is the staff of power," is one of the thousand names of the Lord Vishnu (Vishnusahasranama) enumerated in the Mahabharata. Danda is the deity personification of the weapon, danda, carried by and associated with the Lord Vishnu.

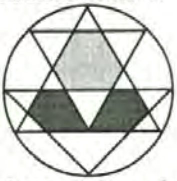
The Dhanda yantra a Vaishnava yantra, is formed by a bhupura of a single step. This is one of three yantra that L. Chawdhri represents with a dark surrounding square in the two works cited.[83] Within the hallowed precinct is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma), oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. A circle holds three triangles. The first, an equilateral triangle oriented upwards filling the whole circle, the second oriented downwards, its apex resting on the base of the first and its inverted base touching the arc of the surrounding circle. The third triangle is isosceles, dynamic and oriented downwards, its apex touching the bottom edge of the circle and its inverted "foot" on the horizontal center of the circle. The total triangles formed, including the three major triangles, are fourteen triangles. There are two additional geometric figures formed by the intersections: a hexagon and two pentagons noted below:



Four numbers are prominent: one, three, eight and fourteen. One--represented by the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the three trikonas--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Finally, fourteen--referring to the total trikonas-- symbolizes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. This integer is a number of luck. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle nadis; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4).

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om namaha Vaishnava Surpataye Mahavilaye Savaha."[84] (LC II, LC, RG, VM, TR)

Dhumavati Yantra (I)

Dhumavati, called "the beholder of smoke" or "the smoky one," is one of the ten aspects of Maha-Kali, a Dasha-Mahavidya. She exemplifies one of the ten phases of the divine night. Dhumavati's domain is fire and the destruction of the universe. In addition, she personifies poverty and the night of frustration. Dhumavati is a widow, therefore she is always represented without a male counterpart or partner. Her other names are: Jyeshtha (the oldest Shakti), Kutila (the crooked one), Alakshmi (without radiance) or Kalahaspada (the quarrelsome one).[85]

The Dhumavati Yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, consists of a single level, interlocking enclosure (bhupura). Bounded by this enclosure is a lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. Within this lotus is to be found a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. At the center of all is a bindu

The somewhat elaborate, interlocking sacred enclosure is fairly unconventional when comparing it to the other enclosures. However, when observing the negative areas, the traditional enclosure is to be seen. Three numbers are prominent: one, six and eight. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited is: "Om Dhoong Dhoong Dhumavati Tha Tha."[86] (LC, LC II, APR, PR)

Plate 29 -- Dhumavati Yantra (I)

Dhumavati Yantra (II)

Similar to the Dhumavati Yantra (I), the Dhumavati yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, varies only in the fact that the bhupura is of two steps rather than one. Enclosed within this single-stepped precinct is a lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma). A shatkona made up of an equilateral triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards rests within the ashta-dala padma. At the center of all is a bindu.

The numbers two, six and eight are significant within this yantra. Two--referring to the double stepped bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed is the same as that utilized in the Dhumavati Yantra (I).[87] (HJ, LC, LC II, APR, PR)

Durga Yantra (I)

Durga is frequently worshipped as an independent deity of major importance within the Shakti sect of Hinduism. She is worshipped as an important mother deity in Assam, Bengal and the Deccan. As such, she is represented in a calm mien. As a fearful or fierce deity, her forms are Chandi and Kali, which are popular in the south of India. And, as one who forgives, she is represented as Tara. Her prominence is further manifested in the fact that her yantra is rather simple as are the yantras of the powerful and important Lords Shiva and Vishnu (See: Plates: 76 & 103).

The Durga yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, is firstly fabricated from a three level bhupura. Within this sanctuary one discovers two padma consisting of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) each, combined, there are sixteen petals. They are dynamic, feminine oriented. The intersecting lines of the petals creates the central locus which is the bindu.

Three, eight and sixteen are numerals which assume interest in this yantra. Three--referring to the triple-stepped bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). The numeral eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--a referent to the sixteen petals of the two ashta-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra.

The mantra employed in the worship of the deity Durga is: "Om Hareeng Kaleeng Chamundaye Viche."[88] (DS, SPS, HJ, LC, LC II, TR, PR, SH, RG)

Durga Yantra (II)

This yantra, the Durga Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, is one of three yantra that L. Chawdhri represents with a dark interior in the two works cited.[89] As a representation of this most important goddess, it possesses a number of interesting features.

The Durga Yantra (II) is formed by a bhupura of two steps. Within this precinct is to be found three rings or circles (trivalya) which enclose an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). This lotus is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. The center holds three triangles. The first, an equilateral triangle oriented upwards, the second dynamically oriented downwards, its apex resting on the base of the first. The third, a dynamic, isosceles triangle, is also oriented downwards, its apex touching the bottom edge of the circle and its inverted "foot" on the horizontal center of the circle. The total triangles formed, including the three major trikonas, is fourteen. It is to be noted that this yantra appears almost identical to the D(h)anda yantra (Plate 28). The difference is to be found in the steps of the sacred enclosure and the three rings enclosing the central trikonas.

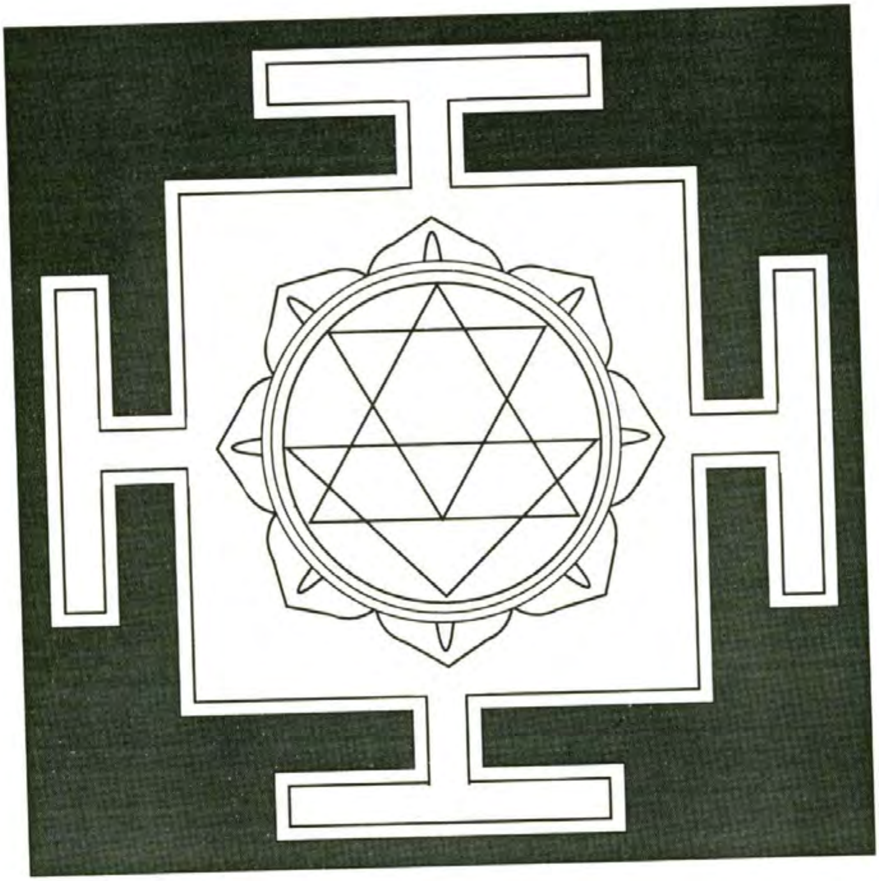
The numbers two, three, eight and fourteen appear to be of some significance. Two--referring to the double-stepped bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the triple rings--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Finally, fourteen--as a referent to the number of trikonas--denotes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. This integer is a number of luck. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle nadis; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5).

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Kaleeng Chamundaye Viche." Chamunda noted in the mantra is one of the Seven Divine Mothers (Sapta-Matrikas) and the counterpart of Yama. Chamunda is the fierce form of the goddess Durga.[90] (LC II, LC, DS, SPS, HJ, TR, PR, SH, RG)

Plate 32 -- Durga Yantra (II)

(LC II, p. 194)



Durga Yantra (III)

The Durga yantra (III), a Shakti yantra, a complex yantra indeed. Its complexity befits this important goddess and indicates her power.

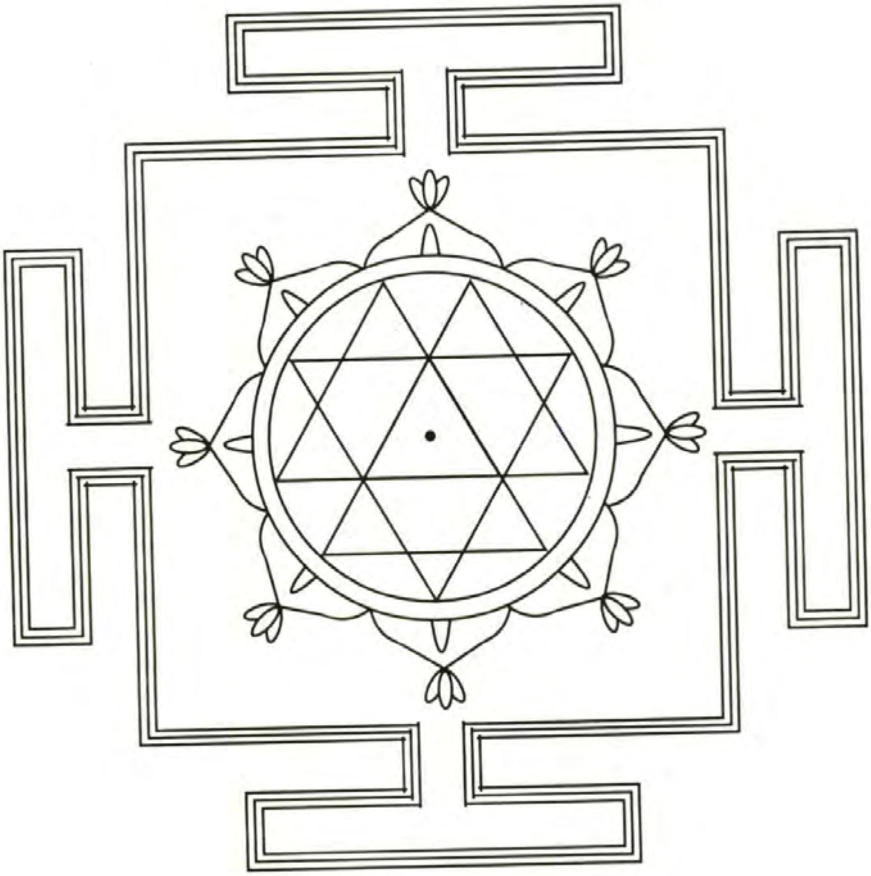
The yantra is bounded by a three-stepped bhupura. Within this sacred enclosure is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). This lotus is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Each of the tips of the petals terminates in a three-petaled flower-form (lotus).[91] Within a double circle (dvivalya) are four equilateral triangles (trikonas). Two, oriented upwards, resting on the same plane and overlapping forming a smaller triangle within which is a bindu at the center of the circle. The third triangle, also oriented upwards, is partially formed by the upper two intersecting triangles--the bindu resting in its upper portion. The fourth equilateral triangle, the largest, is oriented downwards with its apex touching the bottom of the inner circle. Fourteen triangles are formed by these four overlapping triangles as well as three quadrangles of similar proportions and size.

Five numbers appear to be of some importance--two, three, four, eight, and fourteen. Two--referring to the two circles--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Three--referring to the bhupura as well as to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Four--a referent to the four trikonas--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon; and the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Fourteen--referring to the number of trikonas formed--symbolizes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. This integer is a number of luck. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle nadis; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5).

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Dum Durgayaee Namaha."[92] (LC II, LC, DS, SPS, HJ, TR, PR, SH, RG)

Plate 33 -- Durga Yantra (III)

(LC II, p. 274, HJ, Pl. 4 & p. 80)



Durga Yantra (IV)

The Durga yantra (IV), a Shakti yantra, is substantially different from the yantras (II & III) and even from yantra (I). The basis of construction of these sacred form comes from the historical past, the Common Era. Their sources are considered to be from divinely inspired rishis and/or other holy personages. Their description in the old texts are not considered to be the immutable or eternal or virtual words of the Absolute One.[93] Therefore, it is considered possible that a holy man of sufficient character may, through divine inspiration, present a yantra, heretofore unseen.[94]

The Durga yantra (IV) is composed of a two-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this precinct is a lotus of twenty-four petals (chaturvimshati-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. These petals surround an eight-petaled ring (ashta-dala padma), oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Thirty-two is the sum of all the petals. Within this band is a circle which contains a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of a triangle oriented upwards and one oriented downwards. The center of all is a bindu.

The numbers two, six, eight, twenty-four and thirty-two appear to be significant. Two--referring to the double stepped bhupura--symbolizes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--as referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Twenty-four--referring to the twenty-four-petaled lotus--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, being, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six ($2 + 4 = 6$) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Thirty-two--referring to the total number of petals--is exemplified in: the thirty-two points of the compass--e.g., south, south south-southeast, southeast south-southeast, etc.--and the thirty two characteristics of human physiology. As a compound number it is associated with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5).

The mantra employed with this yantra is: "Om Shree Durgayaee Namah."[95] (JN, LC II, LC, DS, SPS, HJ, TR, PR, SH, RG)

Ganesha Yantra (I)

Ganesha, is the more familiar name of the highly popular deity Ganapati. He was an important leity in ancient Aryan and non-Aryan cultural religions as well as present day Hinduism. He is a leity who is worshiped generally by all sects. Of such a stature is this deity that T.A. Gopinath Rao in nis classic study separates this deity from the Vaishnava, Shaiva and Shakti sects' deities and presents him first.[96] The genesis of Ganesha (Ganapati) is most confusing, and in many cases, contradictory. He appears to have been developed or transmuted from early deities--either Ganapati-Brahmanaspati, or Brihaspati-Marudgana or both. The result was the birth of Ganesha (Ganapati). The exploits of the deity Ganesha are myriad as befits his popularity. His realm is wisdom, learning, lost causes and writing.

The Ganesha (Ganapati) Yantra (I) is composed up of a three-stepped bhupura. Within this sacred precinct is an eight petaled sacred lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. The petals encompass a circle within which is a six pointed star (shatkona) composed of a triangle oriented upwards and one pointed downwards. At the center of this six pointed star is a triangle (trikona) with its apex pointed upwards holding, at its center, a bindu.

The numbers three, six and eight assume importance in this yantra. Three--referring to the three-stepped bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--symbolizes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Shareeng Galo Gang Ganapatya Var Vard Sarvjanam Me Vashmanaye Svaha" or "Om Gang Ganapataya Namah."[97] (See also Maha-Ganapati, Plates 52-54) (LC, LC II, TR, RG, HJ, SH)

Ganesha Yantra (II)

As has been stated in the previous section, Ganesha is of such universal popularity in the Hindu world that this deity is freely worshipped by all sects. This yantra, the Ganesha Yantra (II), presents decidedly a Shakti oriented view.

The Ganesha Yantra (II) differs somewhat from the previous yantra. It is composed of a single stepped sacred precinct (bhupura) within which is a circle containing an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals encompass an inner circle within which is a triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented downwards, the dynamic, feminine orientation and yoni. The trikona, in turn, holds a shatkona made up of two triangles, one pointing upwards, the other downwards.

One, three, six and eight assume some importance in this yantra. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--as referent to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Shree Ganeshaya Namah."[98] (APR, DS, JN, LC, LC II, TR, RG, HJ, SH)

Ganesha Yantra (III)

The Ganesha Yantra (III) is essentially a variation of the Ganesha Yantra (I &II). It is made up of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of two steps within which rests a circle. This circle encompasses an eight petal lotus (ashta-dala padma), oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. The lotus surrounds a second circle within which is an equilateral triangle (trikona) with its apex pointing upwards--masculine and linga. Within this triangle is a six pointed star (shatkona) oriented vertically. Secure within the center of this shatkona is the point (bindu), the locus of sacred power and the manifested deity.

The numerals two, three, six and eight appear to hold some significance. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. The sacred three--as referent to the trikona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Shareeng Galo Gang Ganapatya Var Vard Sarvjanam Me Vashmanaye Svaha" or "Om Gang Ganapataya Namah"[99] or "Om Shree Ganeshaya Namah."[100] (APR, DS, JN, LC, LC II, TR, RG, HJ, SH)

Gayatri Yantra

The Gayatri Yantra, a Shakti yantra, is, indeed, a yantra of unusual complexity when compared to a number of other yantras. Unlike the other yantras it is presented without a bhupura.[101] Each angle, both concave and convex is labeled with a bijakshara referring to the appropriate guardians.

Within the bhupura is a complex star-form (ashtakona), the line of which is unending, symbolizing infinity, and revolves around a variation on an eight-pointed star--amounting to sixteen acute-angled points. The variation angles from one point to the next (starting from the uppermost point) are three then two, etc.--amounting to sixteen points and eight sets of the variation three and two. Additionally, the 'star' consists of twenty-four convex angles and sixteen concave angles, all together amounting to forty angles. At the center of this endless form is the sacred bijakshara of the goddess Gayatri.

Two, eight, sixteen, twenty-four and forty are numerals which appear to be of some importance. Two--referring to the twofold variation--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Eight--as referent to the ashtakona--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the eight sets of two points--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Twenty-four--referring to the twenty-four convex angles--connotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Forty--as a referent to the total angles--denotes perfection and completion. This numeral is related to the Pleiades disappearance. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4).

Gayatri is a goddess of some importance who, along with Savitri and Sarasvati, was one of the three goddesses called upon during the thrice-daily chanting of the Gayatri mantra. She presides over the morning prayer and rules over the garhapatya fire. The mantra recited is: "Om Bhur Vhuvah Svah Tat Savitur Varenyam Bhargo Devasya Dheemahi Dhiyo To Nah Prachodayat."[102] (JN, SH, TR, HJ, HKS, MS)

Hanumat (Hanuman) Yantra (I)

Hanumat or Hanuman, a demi-deity/hero who figures prominently in the Ramayana as a faithful companion of Ramavatara and Sita. The gods, gave Hanuman, who appears in the form of a monkey, invincibility against weapons. After Sita had been abducted by the fierce and treacherous demon, Ravana, Ramavatara and Hanuman met and the latter became the former's close companion and warrior/servant. His valorous exploits in the war against Ravana's forces are numerous. After the death of Ramavatara, Hanuman spent the rest of his life guarding the Kadali forest. As a deity, he represents trustworthiness and the selflessness of true friendship.[103]

The Hanumat (Hanuman) yantra (I), a Vaishnava yantra, is one of the simpler yantras to be considered in this brief study. It consists of a single stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura) within which is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. Unlike the majority of eight petaled lotus, it is not oriented to the points of the compass, but its orientation indicates its dynamic character (See: p. 24). Within these petals is a circle and at the center is a bindu.

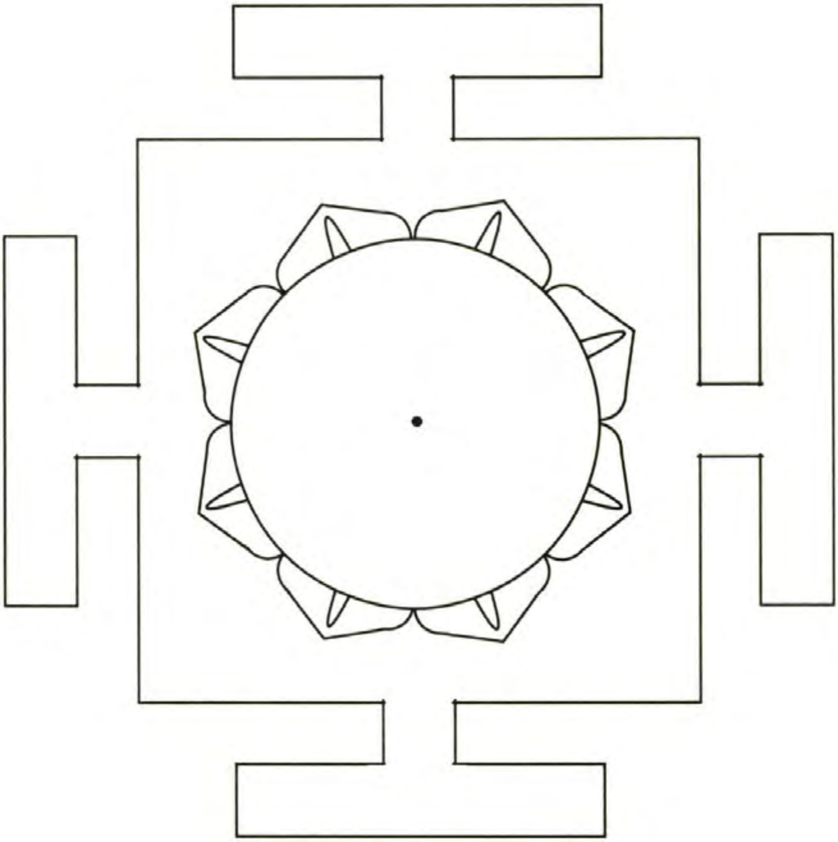
Two numbers are of some interest here: one and eight. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. This number is generally is considered neither an odd nor an even number. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited is: "Om Hareeng Hanumat Namaha."[104] (ARP, DS), JN, SH, TR, HJ, HKS, MS)

Plate 39 -- Hanumat (Hanuman) Yantra (I)

(ARP, fig. 122; DS)



Hanumat (Hanuman) Yantra (II)

The Hanumat (Hanuman) yantra (II), a Vaishnava yantra, and is a variation on Hanumat (Hanuman) yantra (I). This yantra is centered around power, authority and vigor and the various guardian deities are noted.[105] It underlines the simplicity of the previous yantra. The Hanumat (Hanuman) yantra (II) consists of a single-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura) within which are two concentric circles (dvivalya). Within the inner circle is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the points of the compass. Within these petals is a circle and at the center is a bindu.

Three numbers are of some interest here: one, two and eight. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura-- denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--referring to the double circle (dvivalya)--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. This integer is a material number, as opposed to a divine number, and when applied to either the Arabic or Roman alphabet, it is considered as the number of creation, and the mother principle. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; as an even number, a female symbol: night, dark, left; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Om Om Houm Haspraim Kafrain Hasoum Hanumantay Namah."[106] (LC II)

Hayagriva Yantra

Hayagriva or Hayashirsha is an interesting form of the Lord Vishnu. A form, but neither is he one of the Dashavataras (Ten [major] Avatars), nor is he considered to be one of the fourteen minor avatars. Nonetheless, he is a deity of some popularity and is frequently depicted. His form--the body of a man and the head of a horse--was assumed by the Lord Vishnu to destroy a mettlesome deity(s): Madhu and Kaitabha in some accounts and the rakshasha Hayagriva in other accounts. Further Hayagriva is equated with the goddess Sarasvati as he, like she, represents learning. In addition is looked upon as the preserver of the Vedas.

The Hayagriva yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, involves a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of four steps. Within this sacred enclosure is to be found an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. The center of this lotus is a small circle with a number of dots (bindu?).

This yantra is quite similar to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55),Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103). The divine shelter (bhupura) of Hayagriva's yantra is composed of four levels, equal to that of Balarama. In fact the two are identical

As with the Balarama (avatara) Yantra, two numbers are of apparent importance--four and eight. Four--referring to the four level bhupura--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

There are no mantras noted to this deity in the sources. (DS, SPS, TR, RG, SH)

Plate 41 -- Hayagriva Yantra

Kali Yantra (I)

No deity inspires more controversy than the enigmatic Kali, especially outside the Hindu faith. The representation of a fierce goddess, dark in color, dishevelled hair, nude ('sky clad' [digambara]), wearing an apron of severed arms, carrying a freshly severed head and a blood-dripping chopper creates this controversy. Within the newer world religions, particularly Christianity, which are used to 'sweet,' positive representations of the deity this distinctly negative representation is antithetical.[107]

The Kali yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, comprises a single leveled, sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within these precincts is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). Three descending radius circles (trivalya) rest within the ashta-dala padma. They surround five triangles (trikona), one within the other which are in the dynamic, feminine orientation. These equilateral triangles are all oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. Within the center of this trikona-nest is the biṇdu, the manifestation of the deity.

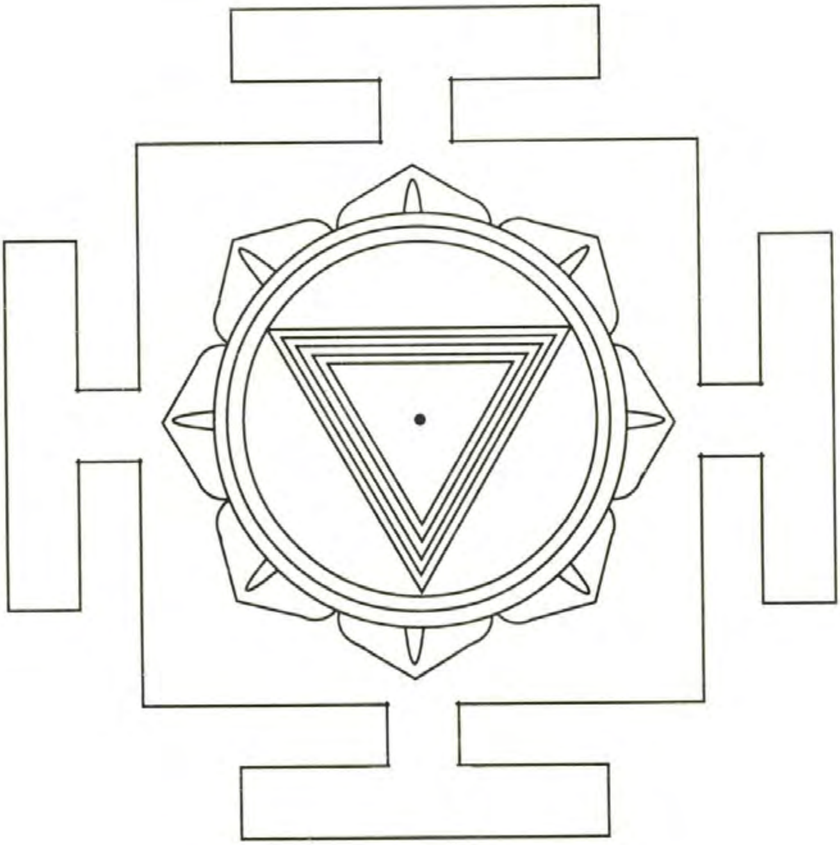
One, three, five and eight are four numbers which appear significant. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--a referent to the three circular band--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the nested trikonas--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Failings or Weaknesses; the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra; the five skandhas; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited is: "Om Kareeng Kalikaya Namah, Om Kapalinyai Namah."[108] (LC, LC II, SH, TR, RG, HJ, MS, PR, HKS, AM)

Plate 42 -- Kali Yantra (I)

(LC, fig. 2.3; LC II, p. 33)



Kali Yantra (II)

Kali is certainly the most important fierce manifestation of Devi (Shri) in the Hindu tradition. She commands a particularly high position in the south of India amongst the Tamils. She is both an important representative of the Shakti sect--some say proceeding from Durga (Devi)--as well as the Shaiva sect--as a consort-lover of the Lord Shiva. But since she is always represented as a dark goddess, her association with the night (feminine) and the moon (feminine) is apparent.

The Kali yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, significantly different from the Kali yantra (I), consists of a single level divine precinct which encloses an isosceles triangle (trikona)--indicating its dynamic aspect--pointing downwards--feminine and yoni. This trikona's apex touches the center of the yantra and its top plane (inverted base) rests on the upper part of a circle. This circle encloses an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) which, in turn, surrounds three, decreasing radius circles. In the innermost circle are three triangles (trikona) of decreasing size, one within the next, all of the apexes are pointed downward--again, feminine and yoni. The total number of feminine triangles is four. At the center of all rests Kali in the form of a bindu.

Three numbers appear to be significant: one, three and eight. One--referring to the bhupura, the isosceles triangle and the single large circle--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--as a referent by the three circles (trivalya) and the three nested trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Finally, eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

Kali's representation by four ascending triangles iconically finds its genesis in arcane mysticism related to the Lord Shiva. The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Kareeng Kalekaya Namah" or "Om Kapalinaye Namah."[109] (APR, DS, LC, LC II, SH, TR, RG, HJ, MS, PR, HKS, AM)

Kali Yantra (III)

The Kali yantra (III), a Shakti yantra, is a variation on the Kali yantra (I). It comprises a double leveled, sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). Three descending radius circles (trivalya) rest within the ashta-dala padma. They surround five triangles (trikona), one within the other. These equilateral triangles are all oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. Within the center of this trikona-nest is the bindu, the manifestation of the deity.

Two, three, five and eight are four numbers which appear significant. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--a referent to the three circular bands (trivalya)--symbolizes denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the nested trikonas--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras) being: shabda (sound), sparsha (touch), rupa (form), rasa (flavor) & gandha (odor); the Five Failings or Weaknesses being: ahmkara (pride), moha (illusion), lobha (greed), kama (passion), krodha (anger); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas) being: akasha (ether), vayu (air), tejas (fire), apas (water) & prithvi (earth); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra being: madya (wine), mamsa (meat), matsya (fish), mudra (parched grain), maithuna (sexual congress); the five skandhas being: rupa, vidana, sanini, sanskara, vidyana; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squares (pada) that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Kali Yantra (IV)

The Kali yantra (IV), a Shakti yantra, significantly different from the other Kali yantra (I, II & III). It bears a resemblance, somewhat, to the Kali Yantra (II), but the symbols are inverted. First, this yantra is comprised of a two-stepped bhupura. An isosceles triangle is a major deviation. Its apex rests at the center of the yantra and its base is to be found at the bottom of the ashta-dala padma--masculine and linga. The source for this yantra is the Shakta Pramod and this triangle is said to symbolize the "Cosmic Mother."[110] As mentioned, an ashta-dala padma is centered in the bhupura. Within this lotus appears three concentric circles (trivalya). These circles enclose three trikonas oriented also upwards--masculine and linga. At the center is a bindu.

Four numbers appear to be significant: one, two, three and eight. One--referring to the isosceles triangle--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--as referent to the two-stepped bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--as a referent by the three circles (trivalya) and the three nested trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Finally, eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra utilized for this yantra is: "Kring Kring Kring Hing Hring Dakshine Kalike Kring Kring Kring Hring Hring Hung Hung Svaha,"[111] (HJ, AM, APR, DS, LC, LC II, SH, TR, RG, MS, PR, HKS)

Kalki Yantra

Kalki is the last of the ten major avatars of the Lord Vishnu. He is the avatar-to-be, whereas the other nine avatars have been. He will appear at the close of this present yuga, riding a blazing white horse and wielding a sword with which he will destroy all those enemies of the Law (Dharma).

The Kalki yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, is initially composed of a four level sacred enclosure within which is to be found an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. This yantra is quite similar to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55),Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103). Similar with the Balarama and Hayagriva yantras there are radiant lines proceeding from the central circle pointing in all directions. At the center is a circle which displays a number of dots (bindu?).

Two numbers are of apparent importance--four and eight. Four--referring to the four level bhupura--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (DS, SPS, SH, TR, RG, MS)

Kamala Yantra (I)

Kamala, another name for Lakshmi, is one of ten aspects of Maha-Kali, known as the Dasha-Mahavidyas. The Mahavidya Kamala, called 'one who is clad in water,' reigns over the consciousness of self, the power that wealth brings and the night of splendor. She is the opposite in every way of Dhumavati (Alakshmi).

The Kamala (Kamalatmika) Yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, is made up of a single stepped bhupura. Within this divine precinct is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals are oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this lotus is a six pointed star (shatkona), made up of a triangle oriented upwards and one downwards. At the center of all is a bindu representing the goddess.

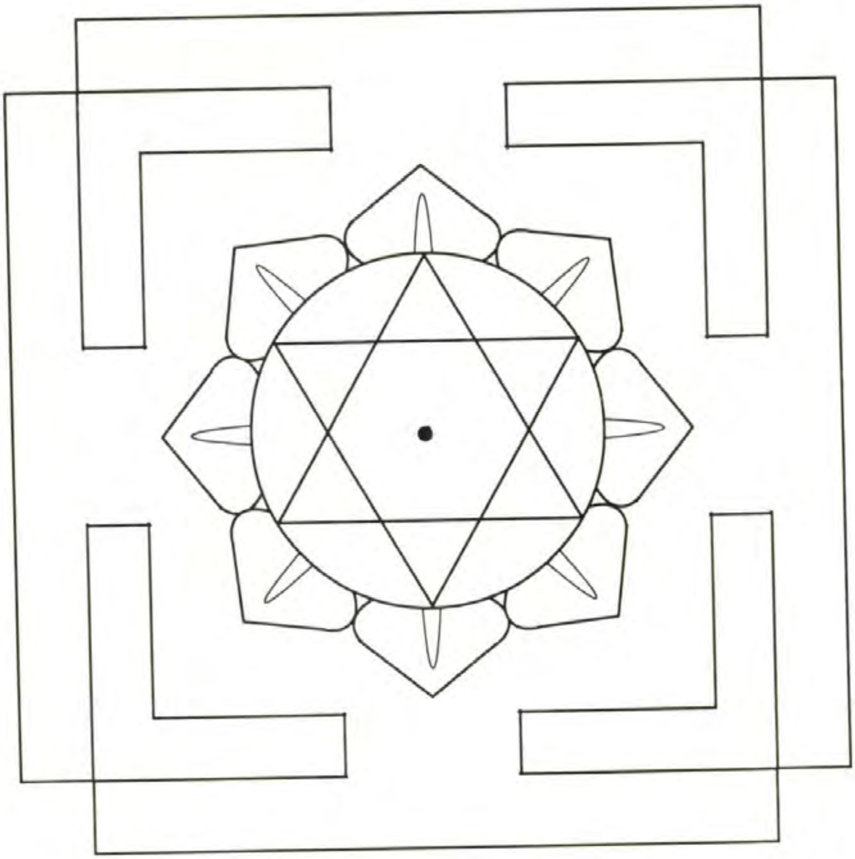
The numbers one, six and eight appear to be worthy of consideration. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as referent to the shatkona--symbolizes denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited for the Kamala Yantra (I) is: "Aum Aing Hing/ Shring Kling Hassau/ Jagatprasutayei Namah."[112] (APR, DS, LC II, LC, TR, RG, MS, SH)

Plate 47 -- Kamala Yantra (I)

(APR, fig. 132, DS)



Kamala Yantra (II)

The Kamala Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, is essentially a variation on Kamala Yantra (II). It is made up of a two-stepped bhupura. Within this precinct is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals are oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this lotus is a six pointed star (shatkona), made up of a triangle oriented upwards and one downwards. At the center of all is a bindu representing the goddess.

The numbers two, six and eight appear to be worthy of consideration. Two--referring to the double-stepped bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. This integer is a material number, as opposed to a divine number, and when applied to either the Arabic or Roman alphabet, it is considered as the number of creation, and the mother principle. It is exemplified in: right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; as an even number, a female symbol: night, dark, left; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--as referent to the shatkona--symbolizes denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

As with the previous yantra, the mantra recited for the Kamala Yantra (II) is: "Aum Aing Hing/ Shring Kling Hassau/ Jagatprasutayei Namah."[113] (APR, DS, LC II, LC, TR, RG, MS, SH)

Krishna (avatara) Yantra (I)

Krishna is of major importance within the Vaishnava sect. Called "the black one" or "the dark one," Krishnavatara is one of the Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu. This avatara is so popular in India that some devotees look upon Krishna as the Supreme Lord. He is the son of Vasudeva and Devaki and was taken to Nanda and Yashoda, servants, by his father to hide him from King Kamsa, Vasudeva's evil brother-in-law. Krishna embodies the supreme statesman, warrior, hero, philosopher and teacher. His exploits are recounted in many sources, including: the Harivamsha; the Shrimad-Bhagavata, and the Vishnu-Purana. A number of tales recount the numerous amorous adventures of this deity. His discussion with Arjuna prior to the great battle of Kurukshetra is the Bhagvat-Gita.

The Krishna yantra (I), a Vaishnava yantra, is quite similar to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55),Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103). Similarly, there are radiant lines proceeding from the central circle pointing in all directions. Even though the apparent likeness, there would be a major, obvious difference in the fact that the mantra recited for the Krishna yantra is different from that employed to create Parashurama's yantra.

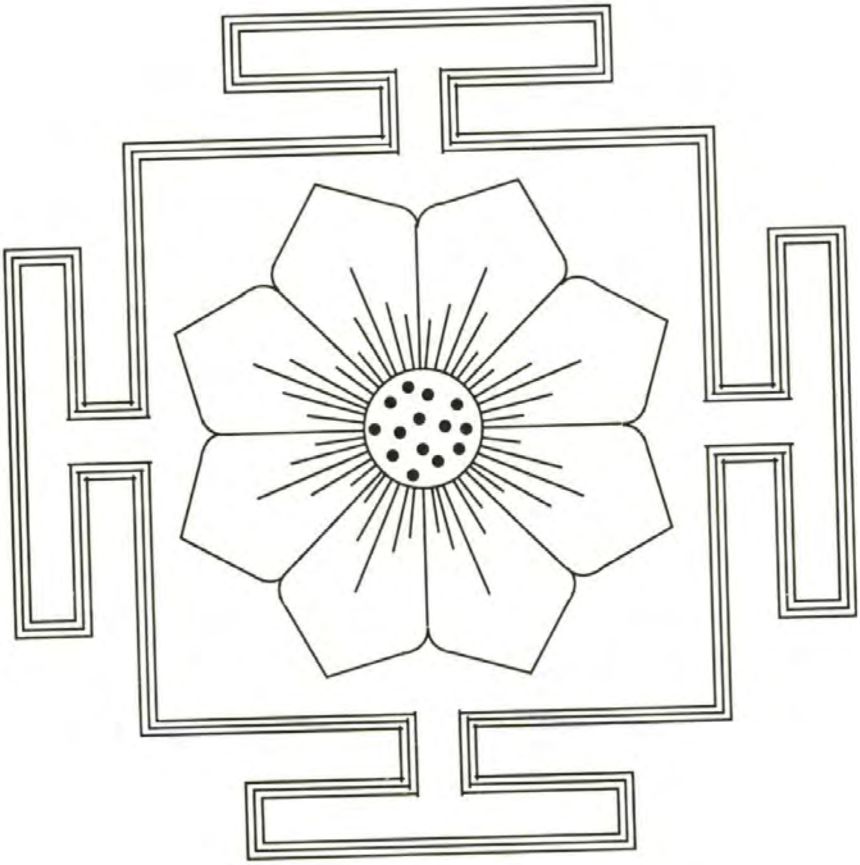
The numbers three and eight assume importance. Three--referring to the triple-stepped bhupura--represents perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Sri Krishnaya Namah."[114] (DS, SPS, TR, RG, HS, MS, JN, MB, VM)

Plate 49 -- Krishna (avatara) Yantra (I)

(DS, 26; SPS, Pl. 1)



Krishna (Gopala) Yantra (II)

The Krishna Yantra (II), a Vaishnava yantra, is considerably different from the Krishna Yantra (I). It is composed of a triple-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this precinct is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) which, in the source and here, is neither oriented to the cardinal not the intercardinal points of the compass, but rotated slightly so as to make both the points of the petals and the space between the petals fall short of true orientation. Encircled by the ashta-dala padma is a six-pointed star (shatkona) This shatkona is composed of two triangles--one with its apex pointing to the right and the other to the left in the dynamic, feminine orientation. In the center of the whole is a bindu.

The numbers three, six and ten appear to be of some consequence. Three--referring to the triple-stepped bhupura--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as referent to the shatkona which so oriented represents its dynamic elements--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Ten--referring to the dasha-dala padma--denotes perfection or completeness, success, and cosmic wisdom, as well as karma. It further represents unity emerging from multiplicity. It is the first compound number. It is exemplified in: the Ten Avatars of the Lord Vishnu (Indic: dashavataras); the dasha-vahini-kala (ten powers of the vital fire); the dasha-yonis or dasha-shaktis; the Ten Sense Powers (Indic: indriyas); the Tenfold Knowledge (Indic: dasha-nanam); the Ten Directions which are: the cardinal points, the intercardinal points, the nadir and the zenith; the ten books of the Rig-Veda; Dasha-Mahavidyas; and ten fingers and ten toes. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Additionally, it represents by the Manipuraka Chakra.

The mantra employed with this yantra is: "Bhajo Radhe Govinda / Gopala Tera Pyara Namah Hai / Gopala Tera Pyara Namah Hai / Nandalata Tera Pyara Namah Hai" and "Om Namo Bhagavate Vasudeva."[115] (JN, DS, SPS, TR, RG, HS, MS, MB, VM)

Kurma (avatara) Yantra

Called "the one who is the tortoise," Kurma (avatara) is one of the ten main avatars (dashavatara) of the Lord Vishnu. In Vedic times, the tortoise was associated with the creator. The Hindu Vedic deities were frequently in battle with the demons (Asuras) who had performed severe austere practices and had received blessings from the gods. The Asuras then turned against the gods. The gods begged the Lord Vishnu to help them. He advised the gods to make peace with the Asuras and join them in churning the oceans to obtain the nectar of immortality (amrita). This the gods did. They collected all kinds of plants and herbs, threw them into the ocean, and used the great Mandara mountain as a stirring rod. But, the weight of the mountain was too much and the earth began to sink. The Lord Vishnu turned himself into a tortoise, crawled beneath the Mandara mountain to support it. As a result, the nectar (amrita) that the ocean brought forth brought power and immortality to the gods.

The Kurma Yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, comprises a single level divine precinct within which is a simple lotus made up of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. Unlike the related Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki yantra (Plate 46), Krishna yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi yantra (I) (Plate 55) and the Shitala yantra (Plate 75), this yantra does not possess a central circle even though Kurma, as the others noted above, is associated with the Lord Vishnu.

Two numbers appear to be of some importance--one and eight. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--represents the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (DS, SPS, SH, TR, RG)

Maha-Ganapati Yantra (I)

Ganapati (aka Ganesha), of course, is a deity which in the Hindu tradition transcends sectarian boundaries. He is frequently worshipped as an independent deity. T.A.G Rao devotes an entire section to Ganapati, separate from those of Vishnu, Shiva and Devi, as has been stated. He is seen by some as related to The Lord Shiva and his divine consort Parvati. Virtually every Hindu temple possesses a shrine to this deity and there are numerous temples dedicated specifically to him.

The Maha-Ganapati yantra (I) is represented by a triple-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The orientation of the petals in this yantra is towards the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this padma is a circle upon which is inscribed a six point star (shatkona). It is made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. Within this shatkona is a triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented upwards--masculine and linga. In the center of all is a bindu.

The numerals three, six and eight appear to be of importance. Three--referring to the three-stepped bhupura and the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantras for this yantra are: "Om Shree Ganeshaya Namah"[116] or "Om Hareeng Shareeng Galo Gang Ganapatya Var Vard Sarvjanam Me Vashmanaye Svaha" or "Om Hareeng Shareeng Galo Gang Ganapatya Var Vard Sarvjanam Me Vashmanaye Thah Thah."[117] (LC, LC II, TR, RG, MS, SH, VM, HKS)

Maha-Ganapati Yantra (II)

The Maha-Ganapati yantra (II) is a variation on the Maha-Ganapati yantra (I). One of the difference is that the Maha-Ganapati yantra (II) is represented by a single level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The orientation of the petals in this yantra is towards the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this ashta-dala padma is a circle upon which is inscribed a six point star (shatkona). This shatkona is made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. Within this shatkona is a triangle with its apex oriented downwards--feminine and yoni--the second difference.[118] At the center of the whole is a bindu.

The numerals one, three, six and eight appear to be of importance. One--as referent to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (DS, LC, LC II, TR, RG, MS, SH, VM, HKS)

Maha-Ganapati Yantra (III)

The Maha-Ganapati yantra (III) is essentially identical to the Maha-Ganapati yantra (I). The difference is that the Maha-Ganapati yantra (III) is represented by a two-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The orientation of the petals in this yantra is towards the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this ashta-dala padma is a circle upon which is inscribed a six point star (shatkona). This shatkona is made up of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. Centered in this shatkona is a triangle with its apex oriented upwards--masculine and linga. At the center of the whole is a bindu.

Four numerals appear to be of importance: two, three, six and eight. Two--as a referent to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the three-stepped bhupura and the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantras associated with this yantra may be any one of thirty-three that are noted by Johari.[119]

Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I)

Maha-Lakshmi is admittedly a most important deity-goddess within the Hindu tradition. She not only is the consort of the Lord Vishnu (Vaishnava sect), she also is a goddess of no mean position within the Shakti (Devi) sect. Her association with the Lord Vishnu would account for the visual relationship of the yantra's central form. This yantra is virtually identical to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103). The fact that Lakshmi is the consort of the Lord Vishnu is not lost in this visual association.

The Maha-Lakshmi yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, embodies a single level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is to be found an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. The central element of the ashta-dala padma is a circle filled with dots (bindu?).

Two numbers appear to be of significance--one and eight. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

A mantra that is often repeated in conjunction with Lakshmi is: "Om Srim Maha-Lakshmyai Namah."[120] (DS, SPS, JN, VM, TR, RG, LC, LC II, SH, HKS)

Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (II)

The Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, sometimes called the Kamala Yantra , represents a single level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is to be found an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala-padma). Within this ashta-dala-padma is a six pointed star (shatkona) composed of two triangles--one oriented upwards and the other downwards. This shatkona in not constructed of equilateral triangles, but of isosceles triangles, placing emphasis upon the dynamic elements of this iconic device. Centered is the bijakshara, the syllable "Shreeng."

One, six and eight are three numbers which assume some importance in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--symbolizes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra of this most auspicious goddess is: "Om Shree Mahalakshmiaya Namaha."[121] (LC, LC II, DS, SPS, JN, VM, TR, RG, SH, HKS)

Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (III)

The Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (III), a Shakti yantra, is essentially a variation on the Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (II). It represents a three-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is to be found an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala-padma). Surrounded by this ashta-dala-padma is a six pointed star (shatkona) composed of two triangles--one oriented upwards and the other downwards. Centered is the bijakshara, the syllable "Shreeng."

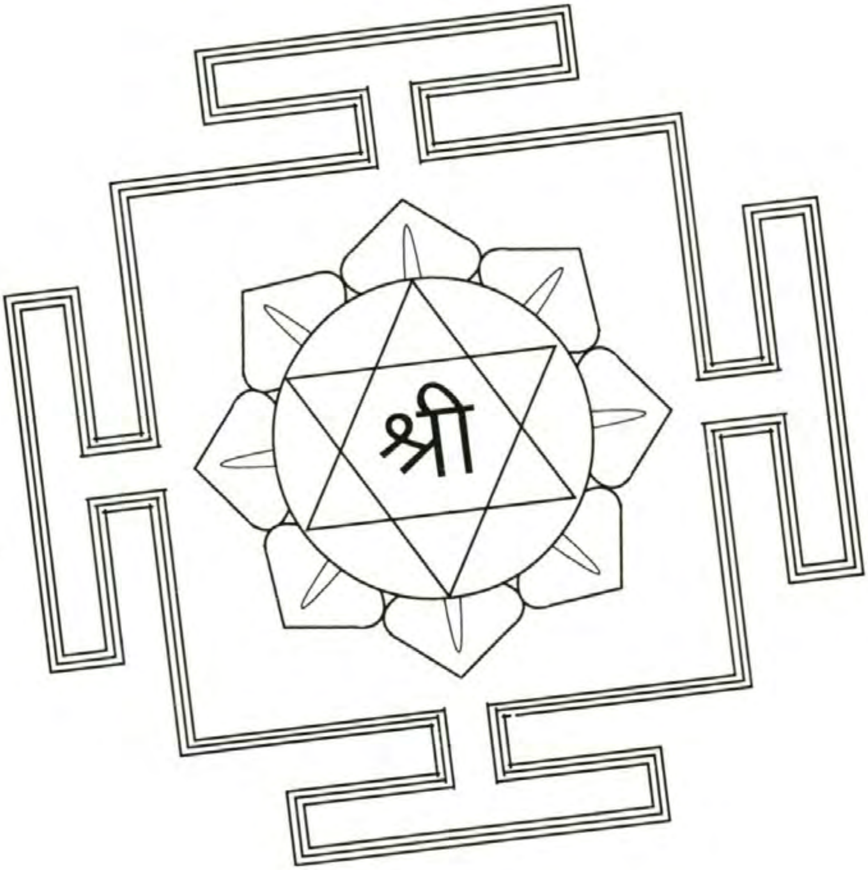
Three, six and eight are three numbers which assume some importance in this yantra. Three--referring to the bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--symbolizes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for this yantra of this most auspicious goddess is the same as that used for the previous yantra: "Om Shree Mahalakshmiaya Namaha"[122] or "Shareeng Hareeng Kaleeng Om Aeeng Svaha."[123] (LC, LC II, DS, SPS, JN, VM, TR, RG, SH, HKS)

Plate 57 -- Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (III)
(LC II, p. 224)



Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (IV)

The Maha-Lakshmi yantra (IV), a Shakti yantra, is visibly the most complex of the Lakshmi yantras. It recalls the Shri Chakra yantra (See: Plates VI & LXXX-LXXXVII) in form and composition and certainly underlines the importance of this goddess. It consists of a three stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura is found a triple circle. These three circles, in turn enclose a lotus of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). This shodasha-dala padma encloses a second padma of eight petals (ashta-dala padma). The two lotus together total twenty-four petals. This inner ring encompasses a circle within which is a series of six overlapping triangles. Three of the triangles are oriented upwards--masculine and linga--while three are downwards--feminine and yoni. These overlapping triangles form an additional thirty triangles--thirty-six including the original six. At the center of the yantra is a bindu, the manifestation of the goddess

Three, six, eight, sixteen, twenty-four and thirty-six are six numbers that appear to assume some importance. Three-- referring to the bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Six-- referring to the elemental trikonas of the center--symbolizes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight-- referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. Sixteen-- referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Twenty-four-- referring to the total number of petals in both padma--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number and is considered a lucky number. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Thirty-six--referring to the total trikonas--represents a number which represents macrocosmic completeness and whose √ is 6. It is exemplified in the thirty-six tattvas of Kashmiri Shaivism. It is also the number of pada in an Ugrapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the planet Venus (Shukra). When reduced it produces nine and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9).

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Aeam Hareem Shareem Kaleem Shom Maha Lakshmi Namah."[124] (LC II, LC, DS, SPS, JN, VM, TR, RG, SH, HKS)

Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (V)

The Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (V), a Shakti yantra, also indicates a yantra of some complexity. It consists of a single stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is a sixteen-petaled lotus (shodasha-dala padma) in the dynamic, feminine orientation. This shodasha-dala padma encompasses a circle within which is a sacred eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). This ashta-dala padma, again surrounds a circle within which is a four-petaled lotus (chatur-dala padma). The three bands of lotus petals amount to twenty-eight in all. Finally, within the chatur-dala padma is an inner circle holding a triangle (trikona) of which the apex is oriented downwards--feminine and yoni.

Five numbers assume apparent importance: one, four, eight, sixteen and twenty-eight. One--referring to the bhupura and the inner trikona--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Four--as a referent to the chatur-dala padma--connotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Twenty-eight--referring to the combined number of petals--is an auspicious number, this numeral represents a number that is associated with the moon's cycle--twenty-eight days. It is a perfect number arrived at by the addition of its divisors. It is exemplified in the number of "mansions" in the moon. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Saturn (Shani) (8). When reduced it produces one and, therefore, the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1).

Although this yantra is not quite as complex as the Maha-Lakshmi yantra (III), it does emphasize the feminine principle in a most definite manner. (APR, LC II, LC, DS, SPS, JN, VM, TR, RG, SH, HKS)

Maha-Mritanje (Shiva) Yantra

Maha-Mritanje, a Shaiva yantra, is the one who conquers death, brings good fortune, protects one from dreadful diseases and dispels all evil. This deity is considered to be a form of the Lord Shiva who, in this capacity, assumes a sustaining role generally associated with the Lord Vishnu.[125]

The Maha-Mritanje (Shiva) Yantra, a Shaiva yantra, is composed of a two stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura is a lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma). The petals encircle a six pointed star (shatkona) composed of a triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle pointed downwards. Within the shatkona is a circle enclosing a triangle with its apex oriented upwards--masculine and linga. At the center of the inner triangle is a bindu.

Two, three, six and eight are four numbers which may be seen to assume some importance in this yantra. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--as a referent to the trikona--symbolizes denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited is: "Om Hoong Joong Om Bhoorbhava svah / Om Tryamakam Yajamaha Saugandhim / Pushtivardhanam diyoyona Parchodyat / Urvarukmev Bandhananmrityomu mamritsmat Svaha / Bhoova Bhooh om Sah joon Houng Om."[126] (LC, LC II)

Mangala (Hanuman) Yantra

Whereas a majority of the yantras considered herein are dedicated to the worship of specific deities and, secondarily, to their realms of influence. This yantra is far more specific and may be ranked with those Tantric yantras that are of the Shanti Karan variety. As a yantra of pacification, one prays to Mangala to rid one of debts, high blood pressure and rashes. Even though this yantra is ascribed to Mangala (Mars) it is also attributed to Hanuman.

The Mangala (a Navagraha) Yantra is composed of a series of triangles (trikona), twenty-one in all, set in five rows: seven in the bottom row, five in the second and third rows, three in the fourth row and one in the top row. Unlike other deity yantras this yantra is not enclosed within a sacred enclosure (bhupura).[127] Within each of the triangles is inscribed a different name of Mangala, they are not shown here.

One, three, five, seven and twenty-one are five numbers which can be seen as assuming some significance in this yantra. One--referring to the single, large trikona--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--as a referent to the row of three trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Five--referring to the five rows and the two rows of five trikona--symbolizes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative. This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra ; the five skandhas; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). Seven--referring to the row of seven trikona--denotes the sacred, the mystic being made up of the spiritual three (masculine) plus the practical four (feminine), is often considered as the number of creation and perfection, as well as natural law. It is exemplified in: the seven Hindu planets; the seven days of the week; the phases of the moon; the Seven Mothers (Indic: Saptamatrikas); the sapta-dhatu; the Seven Factors of Enlightenment (Indic: satta-bojjhanga); within the Vedas: the seven wives (sisters) of Agni, his seven tongues; the seven streams of soma; the sapta-rishis; and the mytho-geographic: sapta-loka (seven worlds), sapta-para (seven cities), sapta-dwipa (seven sacred islands), sapta-arania (seven deserts), and sapta-samudra (seven holy seas). Twenty-one--referring to the total number of trikona-- denotes perfection, and success. It is related to the cycles of the moon. As a compound number it is associated with: the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2) and the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3).

The mantra employed for the Mangala (Hanuman) yantra is: "Om Karang Kareeng Karoong sah Bhoomaya Namaha" or "Om Karang Kareeng Karoong sah Bhoomaya Namaha sah Karoong Kareeng Karang Om ."[128] (LC)

Isosceles variation

Matangi Yantra (I)

Matangi (aka Chandali) thought by some to be an aspect of Sarasvati, hence, she is associated with speech. This goddess is one of Dasha-Mahavidyas of Maha-Kali. Called 'the cow elephant,' this eminent goddess, a Tantric Shakti, represents one of the ten aspects of divine night. .Matangi's realm is the power of domination, the night of delusion and the power to dominate. She is also an advisor to Lalita (Tripura-Sundari).[129]

The Matangi Yantra (I), a Shakti yantra, here comprises a single level sacred enclosure (bhupura) of an interlocking design. Within the bhupura is an eight petals (ashta-dala padma) with darkened centers.[130] The ashta-dala padma is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points. This padma encircles a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of two isosceles triangles, one oriented upwards, the other downwards. The corners of the shatkona are anchored towards the dark centers of the lotus petals. This shatkona composed of isosceles triangles symbolizes the dynamic element of the icon. At the center of the yantra is bindu.

One, six and eight are three numbers which appear to bear significance. One--referring to the bhupura--represents the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers ($2 \times 3 = 6$) signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited is: "Om Hareeng Matangaya Namaha"[131] or "Aum Hring Kling Hum Matangaiye Phat Svaha."[132] (APR, LC, SPS, PR, AM, LC, LC II, HJ)

Mantangi Yantra (II)

Matangi is the goddess who possesses the power of dominion. She, the embodiment of emotional frenzy, exhibits here a yantra that is far more complex than Matangi yantra (I), .

The Matangi yantra (II), a Shakti yantra, comprises a three level sacred enclosure (bhupura). This bhupura encloses three bands of lotus (padma). The outer band possesses but four large enfolding petals (chatur-dala padma). The middle band is made up of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). Finally, the inner band has eight petals (ashta-dala padma) in adynamic orientation. The three lotus total twenty-eight petals. These three bands encircles a five pointed star (panchakona) within which is a triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. At the very center is a dot (bindu).

One, three, four, five, eight sixteen and twenty-eight are seven numbers which merit consideration. One--referring to the single panchakona and trikona--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). Three--as a referent to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child). It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). Four--referring to the chatur-dala padma--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. Five as a referent to the panchakona--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara); the five skandhas; the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. Sixteen--represented by the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Finally, twenty-eight--referring to the total petals--is an auspicious number, this numeral represents a number that is associated with the moon's cycle--twenty-eight days. It is exemplified in the number of "mansions" in the moon. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Saturn (Shani) (8). When reduced it produces one and, therefore, the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). (DS, APR, LC, SPS, PR, AM, LC, LC II)

Mantangi Yantra (III)

The Matangi Yantra (III), a Shakti yantra, is essentially identical to the Matangi Yantra (II). It comprises a double level sacred enclosure (bhupura) and within the bhupura is an eight petals (ashta-dala padma). The ashta-dala padma is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points. This padma encircles a shatkona made up of two equilateral triangles, one oriented upwards, the other downwards. At the center of the yantra is bindu.

Two, six and eight are three numbers which appear to bear significance. Two--referring to the bhupura--represents duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--as a referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Om Hareeng Matangaya Namaha"[133] or "Aum Hring Kling Hum Matangaiye Phat Svaha."[134] (HJ, APR, LC, SPS, PR, AM, LC, LC II)

Matsya (avatara) Yantra

Matsya is one of the five early Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu. He is known variously as the "fish incarnation" or the "fish-man," and is associated with the great flood, which seems to be similar to the flood from the Book of Genesis. The flood was decreed due to the depravity of man. As Matsya, the Lord Vishnu appeared and carried Manu, the father of the new human race, to safety. Thus he fulfills the role of preserver.

The Matsya Yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, embodies a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single level. It is one of the more complex yantras associated with the Dashavataras. The inner precinct is made up of seven lotus one superimposed over the other: a lotus of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) in the outer band, sixteen (shodasha-dala padma) in the second band, fourteen (chaturdasha-dala padma) in the third band and eight petals in the fourth band. These first four lotus--i.e., those with eight, sixteen, fourteen and eight petals--are not oriented to the cardinal points of the compass, thereby underlining their dynamic qualities. There are seven in the fifth band oriented to the points of the compass and four in the sixth band not oriented to the points of the compass. The inner lotus possesses a six petal lotus (shash-dala padma) oriented to the points of the compass. At the center is a bindu.

One, four, six, seven, eight, fourteen and sixteen are seven important numbers in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Four--referring to the chatur-dala padma--symbolizes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Fourteen--referring to the chaturdasha-dala padma--denotes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle nadis; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). Sixteen--referring to the sixteen-petaled lotus--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). (DS, SPS, RG, TR, MS, SH, VM)

Mrit-Sanjivani Yantra

Mrit-Sanjivani is one of the companions of the Ashvini-Devatas.[135] The Ashvini-devatas (aka Ashvinikumaras) are twin deities who were important Devas during the Vedic period. They are the personification of heaven and earth and are the heavenly physicians. Since the employment of the Mrit-Sanjivani Yantra is for the protection from disease, the use of this demi-deity Mrit-Sanjivani, the personification of the herb, is an appropriate intercessor. The herb mritasanjivani is said to restore life and is to be found on Mt. Meru.

The Mrit-Sanjivani Yantra, a Shanti Karan yantra, consists of a simple one step sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this precinct is a circle which encloses eight leaf-forms with ragged centers--an icon of mritasanjivani--oriented to the cardinal points of the compass. These six leaf-forms surround a circle within which is a five pointed star (panchakona). Within the center pentagonal area of this star is a triangle (trikona) with its apex oriented upwards--masculine and linga. At the center is a bindu.

One, three, five and eight are the four numbers which appear to be of some importance in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--as a referent to the trikona--signifies perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the pentagram--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative. This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Failings or Weaknesses; the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara); the five skandhas being: rupa, vidana, sanini, sanskara, vidyana; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Finally, eight--referring to the eight-leafed form--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra employed for the Mrit-Sanjivani yantra is: "Om Joom Sah Ma Palay, Palay."[136] (LC, HKS, VM)

Narasimha (avatara) Yantra

Narasimha is one of the five early Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu. He is known as the man-lion. The Lord Vishnu took the form of Narasimha to annihilate the demon Hiranyakashipu (brother of Hiranyaksha) who was tormenting the gods. In this avatara, the Lord Vishnu is displayed in an unusual fierce, destructive role. Although, in destroying Hiranyakashipu, he "sustains" the celestial status quo.

The Narasimha Yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, consists of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single level. Within this precinct is to be found three lotus. All three lotus contain eight petals each (ashta-dala padma). Together, the petals total twenty-four. However, the outer and the inner ashta-dala padma are in the dynamic, feminine orientation. The outer lotus as well as the inner lotus are not orientated to the cardinal points of the compass, thereby underlining their dynamic quality. The middle lotus is oriented to the cardinal points. At the very center is a bindu, the axis of the yantra.

One, eight and twenty-four are numbers of some consequence in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Eight--signified by the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Twenty-four--referring to the total petals-- denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six (2 + 4 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). (DS, SPS, RG, TR, VM, MS, SH)

Navagraha Yantra (Magic Squares)

The Navagrahas do possess a position of some importance and one may find shrines dedicated to them in numerous temples. This is particularly evident in temples in the south of India and in areas populated by the Tamils. The normal arrangement of the Navagrahas is with the Sun in the middle and the other eight arrayed around at the cardinal and intercardinal points.

The Navagraha yantras, of the astrological yantra variety and the puja type, consist of magic squares of nine sections each. They are á type of yantra, different from the Shakti, Vaishnava or Shaiva yantras in that they do not possess a bhupura. The magic square is an object/form that is not unique to India, but is to be found in a number of cultures.[137] As a yantra form, the (magic) square is not unusual, but is used in many forms of supplication and also for a number of deities. Additionally, it is a form that is employed in the basic plan of sacred temples and shrines within the Hindu tradition, even unto today.[138]

The numbers within the magic circles are consecutive numbers of nine integers--beginning with one (1-9) for Sun, two (2-10) Moon, three (3-11) for Mars, four (4-12) for Mercury, five (5-13) for Jupiter, six (6-14) for Venus, seven (7-15) for Saturn, eight (8-16) for Rahu and nine (9-17) for Ketu. The numbers are all arranged in the same, precise manner--beginning with the west square, then the northeast, then the south, then the southeast, then the center, then the northwest, then the north, then the southwest and finally the east. Additionally, the magical quality of this arrangement is to be found in the fact that if any rank or file of numbers and the two sets of diagonals within a single square, when added together produce the same sum.

Those sums and the particular mantra for the deities are: Surya which produces fifteen, the mantra is "Om Oang Rang Raviaya Namaha;" Chandra which gives eighteen, the mantra is "Om Oang Soong Somaya Namaha;" Mangala which yields twenty-one, the mantra is "Om Oang Bhaung Bhoumaya Namaha;" Budha which provides twenty-four, the mantra is "Om Oang Hrang Hreeng Bung Budhaya Namaha;" Brihaspati or Guru which produces twenty-seven, the mantra is "Om Oang Gung Guruaya Namaha;" Shukra which gives thirty, the mantra is "Om Oang Sung Sukraya Namaha;" Shani which yields thirty-three, the mantra is "Om Oang Eang Hareeng Shreeng Shani Charya Namaha;" Rahu which provides thirty-six, the mantra is "Om Oang Rang Rahuaya Namaha;" and Ketu which produces thirty-nine, the mantra is "Om Oang Bhung Ketuaya Namaha."[139]

Eleven numbers have certain significance--three, nine, fifteen, eighteen, twenty-one, twenty-four, twenty-seven, thirty, thirty-three, thirty-six and thirty-nine. Three--referring to any rank or file of the magic squares--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Nine--referring to the numbers of pada in the magic square--symbolizes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). Fifteen--the sum of Surya's yantra--denotes cosmic completeness, destiny. This number is considered to be a fatal number associated with chance. Fifteen is also auspicious in its make up. It is exemplified in: the fifteen world planes being: six in Kamaloka, five in Rupaloka and four in Arupaloka, and is the sum of the various directions in a nine pada magic square of Surya. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). When reduced it produces six (1 + 5 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Eighteen--the sum of Chandra's yantra--denotes completeness (9 + 9 = 18), it can also denote chaos, deadlock and a spiritual hinderance. It is exemplified in: the eighteen parvas of the Mahabharata; the eighteen chapters of the Bhagavadgita; and sunset (the eighteenth hour or 6:00 P.M.). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Saturn (Shani) (8). When reduced it produces nine (1 + 8 = 9) and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9), three aggressive "planets." Twenty-one--the sum of Mangala's yantra--denotes perfection, and success (1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 = 21, 3 x 7 = 21). It is related to the cycles of the moon, 3 x 7 = 21 in this instance all three numbers are masculine. As a compound number it is associated with: the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2) and the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). When reduced it produces three (2 + 1 = 3) and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Twenty-four--the sum of Budha's yantra--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents (6 x 4 = 24, 3 x 8 = 24, 12 + 12 = 24, 1 x 2 x 3 x 4 = 24) a cosmic number, being 12 + 12 = 24, and is considered a lucky number as 2 + 4 = 6. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six (2 + 4 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Twenty-seven--the sum of Brihaspati or Guru's yantra--denotes sacredness as 3 x 9 = 27 and energy as in the union of two opposites. This integer represents the first masculine cube (3^3). It is exemplified in: the number of beads in a Sumirni Mala, the number of planets or stars which are used to determine the length of a Hindu temple; and is the number of nights in which the moon is visible. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). When reduced it produces nine (2 + 7 = 9) and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9). Thirty--the sum of Shukra's yantra--denotes a psychic numeral and is auspicious in its make up (10 + 10 + 10 = 30, 3 x 10 = 30). It is exemplified in: the classes of beings in the three spheres--i.e., ten in Kamaloka, sixteen in Rupaloka, and four in Arupaloka; Lord Krishna assumed 64 vidyas in thirty days, the days in a solar month; and 1/12 of a circle (30 x 12 = 360^0). As a compound number it is associated with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3[0]). Thirty-three--the sum of Shani's yantra--denotes perfection (two three's) (3\3), or 3 x 11 = 33, and completion. It is exemplified in: the thirty-three deities of the Vedas--eight Vasus, eleven Rudras, twelve Adityas, Indra and Prajapati, and the number of vertebrae in the spinal column. As a compound number, it is related to: the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). When reduced it produces six (3 + 3 = 6) and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Thirty-six--the sum of Rahu's yantra--denotes a number which represents macrocosmic completeness (3\6, 6 x 6 = 36, 4 x 9 = 36, 1 + 2 + 3 + 4 + 5 + 6 + 7 + 8 = 36), and whose √ is 6. This numeral, as any compound number has an opposite effect and may be considered as inauspicious. It is exemplified in the thirty-six tattvas of Kashmiri Shaivism. It is also the number of pada in an Ugrapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the planet Venus (Shukra). When reduced it produces nine (3 + 6 = 9) and, therefore, the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka) (9). Thirty-nine--the sum of Ketu's yantra--denotes a numeral that is auspicious in its makeup: being the perfect three and the magnified perfect nine (3\ 9), reflecting these two sacred numbers. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). When reduced it produces nine (3 + 9 = 12 = 3) and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3).

The individual mantras of these nine magic squares are noted above. (LC, LC II, TR, RG, MS, VM, SH, PR)

Navagraha Yantra (Combined)

This yantra (magic square) represents the combined form of the Navagrahas. Navagrahas refer to the nine Hindu gods who represent planetary or astrological forms. The Navagrahas are believed to influence not only individual lives, but also the course of nations. They generally assembled in their shrines with Surya (Sun) in the center and the other eight arrayed around the sun, at the cardinal and intercardinal points, but in such a manner that they do not face each other.

This yantra represents the combined form of the Navagrahas. Each square contains the bijakshara syllable for each of the nine planets:' "Bu" for Budha, "Shu" for Shukra, "Cha" for Chandra, "Vri" ("Bri") for Guru (Brihaspati), "Ra" for Rahu, "Ke" for Ketu, "Ma" for Mangala, "Sha" for Shani and "Su" for Surya. The mantra recited for the combined form is: "Om Suryee Namaha, Chanderye Namaha, Budhae Namaha, Brahaspatiae Namaha, Mangala Namaha, Shukrae Namaha, Shaniae Namaha, Rahuae Namaha, Ketuae Namaha, Nav Grahae Namaha."[140] The arrangement of the combined Navagrahas is as shown immediately below.

Budha	Shukra	Chandra
Brihaspati	Rahu	Ketu
Mangala	Shani	Surya

It is to be noted that both the individual forms noted previously, and the combined form illustrated opposite, Surya is not displayed in the central position--being shown first in the individual magic squares (yantras) and last in the combined yantra. Normally, the Navagrahas are so arranged, as noted above, with Surya in the center and the other eight surrounding him.[141] This 'normal arrangement is shown immediately below. Parashurama (avatara) Yantra

The Parashurama (Rama with a battle axe [parashu]), one of the latter five Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu was born out of the need to subjugate the Kshatriya (soldier/warrior) caste by the Brahmins. Parashurama, the son of the priest Jamadagni and his consort Renuka, attained through battle, the supremacy of the priestly caste. To redeem himself of all the killing, he expiated his sin, gave the world to the Brahmins, and spent the rest of his life in the mountains in meditation as a hermit.

The Parashurama Yantra, a Vaishnava yantra, is made up of a two level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this hallowed locale is to be found six rings of lotus: sixteen (sodasha-dala padma) in the outer band dynamically oriented, twelve (dvadasha-dala padma) in the second band, ten (dasha-dala padma) in the third band, eight (ashta-dala padma) in the fourth band dynamically oriented. The fifth lotus of six petals (shat-dala padma) is oriented dynamically, however, neither to the cardinal nor the intercardinal points of the compass. The sixth lotus with four petals (chatur-dala padma), within the inner circle, is oriented dynamically. At the center of the yantra is a bindu.

The numbers two, four, six, eight, sixteen and fifty-six appear to bear closer attention. Two--referring to the bhupura--represents duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol symbolizing the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Four--as a referent to the chatur-dala padma--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas; the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Six--referring to the shat-dala padma--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; the six acts (shat-karmas); and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and the Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) and the planet Venus (Shukra). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Finally, fifty-six is a cosmic number relater to the moon being made up of twice twenty-eight. As a compound number it is related to Mercury (Budha) (5) and Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces two and, therefore, the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2). (DS, SPS, LC, RG, LC II, TR, MS, VM, SH, PR)

Plate 70 -- Parashurama (avatara) Yantra

Rama (avatara) Yantra (I)

The deity Rama, avatar of the Lord Vishnu, was born as the son of the King of Ayodhya, Dasharatha. One of the accounts describes Rama meeting Parashurama and absorbing the latter's power, making Rama an aveshavatara (an incarnation by temporary possession). Rama is one of the most popular of the Hindu deities. He typifies the ideal man, the ultimate hero along with his consort Sita, who symbolizes the ideal consort/wife.

The Rama yantra (I), a Vaishnava yantra, constitutes a divine precinct of three levels (bhupura). Within this enclosure is to be found five lotus of varying numbers of petals surrounding an inner circle. The outer lotus possesses thirty-two petals (dvatrimshati-dala padma), while the next contains sixteen (shodasha-dala padma), and the third lotus possesses twelve petals (dvidasha-dala padma). The first three lotus are dynamically oriented. The subsequent two lotus, separated from the outer three by a triple-stepped circle (trivalya), contain eight petals each (ashta-dala padma). The central circle encloses a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of an equilateral triangle with its apex oriented upwards and a triangle with its apex oriented downwards. At the center of all is a bindu.

Six numbers--i.e., three, six, eight, twelve, sixteen and thirty-two--assume some importance. Three--referring to the bhupura and the triple-ringed circle--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--symbolizes denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Thirty-two--referring to the largest lotus--is a numeral is considered by some to be a perfect number being. It is exemplified in: the thirty-two points of the compass--e.g., south, south south-southeast, southeast south-southeast, etc.--and the thirty two characteristics of human physiology. As a compound number it is associated with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces five $(3 + 2 = 5)$ and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). (DS, SPS, LC, RG, LC II, TR, MS, VM, SH, PR)

Rama (avatara) Yantra (II)

The story of Rama (avatara), related in the Ramayana, is one of the major Indian epics. The combination of fate, human frailty and a heroic propensity that Ramavatara exhibits acts as a parallel to the Greek epic heroes.

The Rama Yantra (II), a Vaishnava yantra, is somewhat simpler in makeup than the previous yantra. It is composed primarily of a single-stepped divine precinct (bhupura). Within this bhupura is a sacred eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). This lotus is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within the eight petals is a circle containing a six-pointed star (shatkona). It is made up of two equilateral triangles, one oriented upwards, the other downwards. At the center of the whole is a bindu.

One, six and eight are three numbers which appear to be of some import. The number one--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Shree Ramaya Namah."[142] (JN, DS, SPS, LC, RG, LC II, TR, MS, VM, SH, PR)

Sarasvati Yantra

Sarasvati called "the flowing one," in the Vedic period, the was a goddess of some importance, related to a heaven sent river and water in general. She cleanses all with her waters. She was said to be present in the creation of the earth, the atmosphere and the heavenly spheres. Supplications are offered her for wealth, children, sustenance and the giver of sons. Later, her nature changes and she becomes a goddess of culture, learning and speech. Sarasvati is a form or manifestation of the deity Devi and related to the Vaishnavas and the Shakti sect. As a solitary deity, she is frequently the consort of the Lord Brahmá. She was created by the Lord Brahmá who became so enamored with her that when she circled him a new face appeared, thereby, giving the Lord Brahmá his five heads.

The Sarasvati Yantra is composed of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within are two lotus, one superimposed over the other. The outer lotus contains sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). The inner lotus has eight petals (ashta-dala padma). The two lotus together total twenty-four petals. Within these lotus is a circle containing a six pointed star (shatkona) comprising an isosceles triangle oriented upwards and one with the apex pointed downwards. The isosceles triangle indicates the dynamic aspect. At the center is the goddess in the form of a bindu.

One, six, eight, sixteen and twenty-four are five numerals which appear to assume some importance in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--represents the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as a referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Finally, twenty-four--referring to the total number of petals--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra employed for the Sarasvati yantra is: "Om Shree Vidya Dayeni, Sarasvatiya Namaha."[143] (LC, JN, DS, SPS, RG, LC II, TR, MS, VM, SH, PR)

Sharabha Yantra

Sharabha is a mythical creature whose composite form some assert was assumed by the Lord Shiva--while others say Virabhadra--to defeat Narasimhamurti (Narasimhavatara). Sharabha is a mythical composite being made up of part bird and part lion. Composite beings are not unusual within the Hindu faith--e.g., Makara, Narasimhavatara, Kurmavatara, etc. He is further described "as having eight legs, three eyes, long nails, two hands and a body glowing like fire. . . (with) a lion's face and two wings. . . ."[144] The reason for this manifestation was to subdue Narasimhamurti (Narasimhavatara) who, after the destruction of Hiranyakashipu is said to have continued his destructive campaign. The Lord Shiva was supposedly called upon to neutralize this apparent menace. This story is seen as one of the attempts of the Shaivas to impose superiority over the Vaishnavas.[145]

The Sharabha Yantra comprises a single stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura floats a pentagon, its point oriented downwards indicating its dynamic nature. Within this pentagon is a heptagon dynamically oriented. This seven-sided shape encloses a form which is based upon a nine-sided figure. In turn this form encircles a twelve-petaled lotus (dvidasha-dala padma). The dvidasha-dala padma, in turn contains a two petal lotus (dvi-dala padma), one petal pointing to the right while the other points left. The total number of petals of the two lotus forms is fourteen. The representation of a double-petaled lotus is indeed unusual, more so than the seven or nine-sided figures. Finally central element is a downward pointing triangle (trikona)--feminine and yoni--with a bindu at its center.

One, two, three, five, seven, eight, nine, twelve and fourteen are nine numbers which are of some interest. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--referring to the two petal lotus (dvi-dala padma)--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the pentagon--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras) being: shabda (sound), sparsha (touch), rupa (form), rasa (flavor) & gandha (odor); the Five Failings or Weaknesses being: ahmkara (pride), moha (illusion), lobha (greed), kama (passion), krodha (anger); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas) being: akasha (ether), vayu (air), tejas (fire), apas (water) & prithvi (earth); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra being: madya (wine), mamsa (meat), matsya (fish), mudra (parched grain), maithuna (sexual congress); the five skandhas being: rupa, vidana, sanini, sanskara, vidyana; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Seven--referring to the heptagon--denotes the sacred, the mystic being made up of the spiritual three (masculine) plus the practical four (feminine), is often considered as the number of creation and perfection, as well as natural law. It is exemplified in: the seven Hindu planets; the seven days of the week; the phases of the moon; the Seven Mothers (Indic: Saptamatrikas); the sapta-dhatu being: rasa, rakta, masa, majja, sati, meda, sukra; the Seven Factors of Enlightenment (Indic: satta-bojjhanga); within the Vedas: the seven wives (sisters) of Agni, his seven tongues, the seven horses which pull Surya's chariot and the seven streams of soma; the sapta-rishis; an the mytho-geographic: sapta-loka (seven worlds), sapta-para (seven cities), sapta-dwipa (seven sacred islands), sapta-arania (seven deserts), and sapta-samudra (seven holy seas). It is associated astronomically with the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Nine--referring to the nine-sided figure--denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). Twelve--referring to the dvidasha-dala padma--denotes sacrifice and is related to immortality. This numeral is: a cosmic number as well as comprehending all numbers lower than itself. It is exemplified in: the Barahmasa poetry being based on twelve; the twelve signs of the Zodiac; the twelve hours of the day as well as the twelve hours of the night; and the twelve months of the solar year. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Additionally, it represents the Anahata Chakra. Finally, fourteen--referring to the total number of petals of the two lotus forms--denotes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. This integer is a number of luck. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle Yoga nadis being: alambusha-nadi, kuhu-nadi, vishvodara-nadi, varana-nadi, hastijihva-nadi, yashovati-nadi, payasvini-nadi, gandhari-nadi, pusha-nadi, shankhini-nadi, sarasvati-nadi, ida-nadi, pingala-nadi, sushumana-nadi; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5).

The sources do not indicate a mantra for this unusual yantra. (DS, SPS, SH, VM, HKS)

Shitala Yantra

Shitala (aka Shitaladevi or Marika) is a village deity popular in south India particularly in the Telugu and Canarese districts[146] and amongst the Tamils where she is also known as Mariamman. She is a rather fierce Tantric deity whose realm is smallpox, and, like Kali, often appears nude (digambara) riding an ass. In other parts of southeast Asia Mariamman (Shitala) assumes a more benevolent mien.[147] Of additional interest is the fact that the Shitala Yantra is similar to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103). Shitala is frequently associated with the Shakti sect, additionally, however, she is more akin to the Shaivas than the Vaishnavas.

The Shitala Yantra is composed of three level sacred enclosure (bhupura). An eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) occupies the central position. This lotus is dynamically oriented. There are radiant lines proceeding from the central circular area of the lotus, pointing in all directions. The central circle consists of a number of dots similar to the bindu that is to be found in a number of the other yantras.

Two numbers appear to be of some importance--three and eight. Three--referring to the bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (DS, SPS, VM, SH, HKS, MS)

Shiva Yantra (I)

The Lord Shiva is one of the three most powerful deities within the Hindu trinity's pantheon. He is the Destroyer and stands as a theological equal with the Lord Brahmá and Vishnu. In practice, the Lord Shiva vies with the Lord Vishnu for prominence of place within the Hindu faith.

The Shiva Yantra (I) possesses a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of three levels. Within the inner precincts is to be found three superimposed lotus made up of eight petals each (ashta-dala padma). These three lotus are not oriented to the cardinal points of the compass, thereby, underlining their dynamic quality. The three lotus total twenty-four petals. These surround a central circle from which proceed short radiating lines. A bindu is at the center of all.

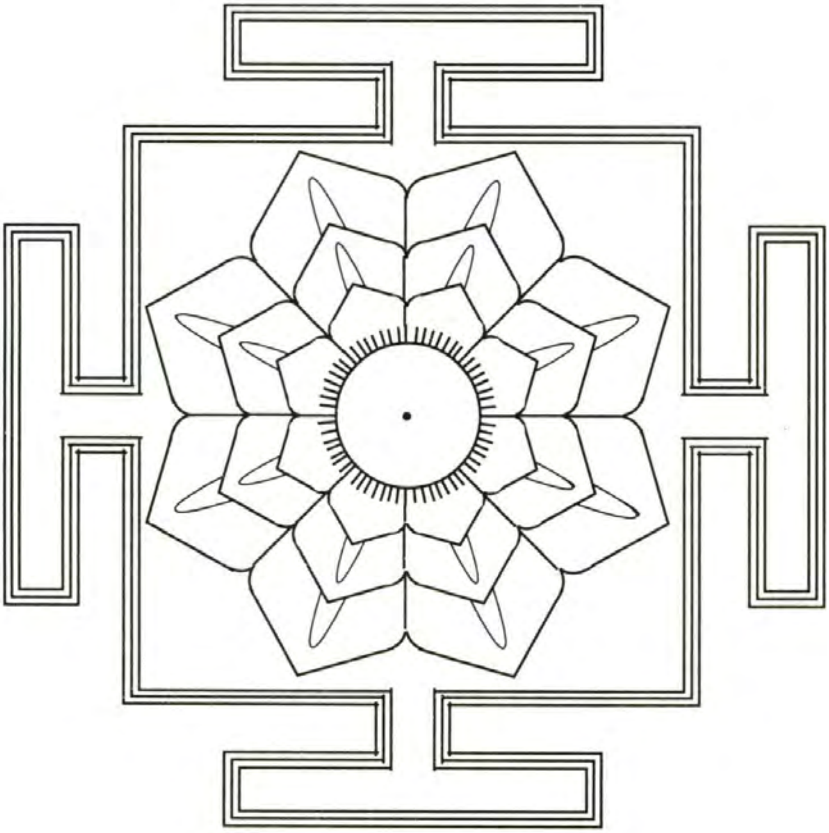
Three, eight and twenty-four are numbers of some significance in this yantra. Three--referring to the bhupura and the three ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Finally, twenty-four--as a referent to the total number of lotus petals--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra connected with this yantra is: "Om Namah Shivaya."[148] (JN, DS, SPS, VM, RG, TR, MS, PR)

Plate 76 -- Shiva Yantra (I)

(DS, # 7; SPS, Pl. 10)



Shiva Yantra (II)

The Shiva Yantra (II) is some what different from the majority of yantra shown within this brief study. It consists of six vertical and six horizontal lines, intersecting, forming twenty-five squares. The ends of each line terminate in twenty-four trident (trishula). Within the twenty-five squares are the five sounds (panchakshara) of the mantra: na/mah Shi/va/yah repeated five times. The panchakshara has special significance to the Shaivas--i.e., 'na' represents his feet, 'ma' signifies his navel, 'Shi' denotes his shoulders, 'va' connotes his face and 'yah' represents his head. I is also invoked to remove fear from danger and to bring prosperity.

There are three numbers which appear of some importance--five, twenty-four and twenty-five. Five--referring to the five syllables and the pada along each side-- symbolizes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras) being: shabda (sound), sparsha (touch), rupa (form), rasa (flavor) & gandha (odor); the Five Failings or Weaknesses being: ahmkara (pride), moha (illusion), lobha (greed), kama (passion), krodha (anger); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas) being: akasha (ether), vayu (air), tejas (fire), apas (water) & prithvi (earth); the Five Truths (Indic: panchatattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra being: madya (wine), mamsa (meat), matsya (fish), mudra (parched grain), maithuna (sexual congress); the five skandhas being: rupa, vidana, sanini, sanskara, vidyana; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Twenty-four--referring to the trishula-- denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). Twenty-five--referring to the spaces (pada) which contain the syllables--symbolizes sacred and mystical magic as well as order and harmony. This numeral is an auspicious masculine integer, a number whose √ is 5, and the sum of mystic male numbers in succession. It is exemplified in the twenty-five tattvas of the Samkhaya school. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Chandra or Soma) (2) and Mercury (Budha) (5). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents pada for a mandala , the Upapitha Mandala.

The mantra (na/mah Shi/va/yah) may be read a number of different ways--e.g., completely, it can be read diagonally from upper left to lower right and vertically in the central file from bottom to top. It appears that the variations are generally vertical (linga)--e.g., the middle vertical file; the first left file starts at the top then jumps to the bottom, the second file from the left starts in the middle proceeds upwards then jumps to the bottom, the fourth file begins second from the top reads upwards then jumps to the bottom, and the fifth file begins second from the bottom proceeds upwards and jumps to the bottom to finish. The horizontal ranks do not follow any such progression. The mantra connected with this yantra is: "Om Namah Shivaya."[149] (JN, DS, SPS, VM, RG, TR, MS, PR)

Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (I)

Shodashi--called 'she who is sixteen'--(aka Tripura-Sundari--called 'the beautiful maid of the three worlds') is a Mahavidya of considerable import. She is a young deity of perfection. She is one of the ten eminent goddesses, Tantric Shaktis which represent ten aspects of divine night and of the goddess Maha-Kali.

The Shodashi Yantra (I) is composed of a triple level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is a triple circle. These three circles (trivalya) enclose two lotus. The outer lotus contains sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma), while the inner lotus holds eight petals (ashta-dala padma). They are dynamically oriented, underlying their feminine component. The two lotus comprise a total of twenty-four petals. Within these two lotus is a two leveled circle. The inner circle contains six equilateral triangles--three offset facing the right and three offset oriented left--making up three overlapping shatkona. The orientation of the shatkona emphasizes their dynamic, feminine quality. At the center is a bindu.

There are five numbers which appear to assume some importance--two, three, six, eight and twenty-four. Two--referring to the inner double circle--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--as a referent to the triple circle (trivalya) and the three overlapping shatkona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Twenty-four--as a referent to the total petals--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as 2 + 4 = 6. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). (DS, SPS, HJ, PR, LC, LCII)

Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (II)

The Shodashi Yantra (II) (aka Tripura-Sundari), a variation on Shodashi yantra (I), is composed of a triple level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is a triple circle (trivalya). These three circles enclose a lotus of twenty-four petals (chaturvimshati-dala padma) which is dynamically oriented. Within this lotus is a second triple level circle. The inner circle contains six equilateral triangles--three oriented upwards as masculine, and linga, and three oriented downwards as feminine and yoni--making up three overlapping shatkona oriented upwards. At the center is a bindu.

The numbers three, six and twenty-four are of some interest in this yantra. Three--as a referent to the two triple circles (trivalya) and the three overlapping shatkona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Twenty-four--as a referent to the petals of the lotus--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, being, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

The mantra assigned to this yantra is: "Hring Ka Ae Ee La Hring Ha Sa Ka Ha La Hring Sa Ka La Hring."[150] (HJ, ARP, DS, SPS, PR, LC, LCII)

Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (III)

As an important Mahavidya, one tale relates how Shodashi (aka Tripura-Sundari) achieves the Soma Chakra and unites ritually and joyfully with Kameshvari (Shiva).[151] Yet another tells of her pedestal composed of Brahmá, Vishnu, Rudra, Indra and Sadshiva upon which reclines Mahakala with whom Shodashi performs divine intercourse (yuganaddha).[152]

The Shodashi Yantra (III), a variation on Shodashi Yantra (II), is composed of a two level sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this bhupura is a triple circle (trivalya). These three circles enclose a lotus of twenty-four petals. Within this lotus is a second triple level circle (trivalya). The inner circle contains six isosceles triangles--three oriented upwards as masculine, and linga, and three oriented downwards as feminine and yoni--making up three shatkona oriented upwards, but dynamic. The isosceles character of the shatkona emphasizes their dynamic quality. Resting on the innermost shatkona as a linga which seems to relate to Shodashi's association with either Shiva or Mahakala.. At the center is a bindu.

The numbers one, two, three, six and twenty-four are of some interest to this yantra. One--referring to the linga--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--as a referent to the two triple circles (trivalya) and the three overlapping shatkona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Twenty-four--as a referent to the petals of the lotus--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6).

Shri-chakram Yantra

Shri or Devi is the major Hindu goddess and is the focus of the Shakti sect. The Shri-chakram Yantra is the most popular and oft represented yantra. Within Hindu theology God (Brahma as opposed to Brahmá) can be conceived as either with (saguna) or without (nirguna) attributes. Within the concept of saguna, the Prime Deity (God) can be conceived of as either male or female--God, He . . . or God, She. . . . Without attributes, the Prime Deity (God) is referred to as "It" (the neuter Brahma). Therefore, Devi (Shri) as God, She (saguna) becomes a unique concept in the major religions of the world. The mantra recited is: "Om Shareeng / Hareeng, Kaleeng / Hareeng, Shri Mahalakshmaiya Namah"[154] or "Om Shareeng Hareeng Shareeng Kamlalye Prased -- Prased Shareeng Hareeng Shareeng Om Mahalakshimaye Namaha."[155] The following six variations are shown in order to indicate not only the importance of this yantra, but also its preeminence within the yantra tradition. The iconography of the Shri-chakram Yantra has been dealt with above.[156]

The Shri-chakram Yantra (I) is made up of: a three-stepped bhupura; three descending radius circles (trivalya); two descending radius, superimposed lotus of sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (II) is made up of: a three-stepped bhupura; four descending radius circles; a lotus of sixteen petals not oriented to the cardinal points of the compass, emphasizing its dynamic quality; two additional descending radius circles; a lotus of eight petals not oriented to the cardinal points of the compass, emphasizing its dynamic quality; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (III) is made up of: a three-stepped bhupura; three descending radius circles (trivalya); two superimposed lotus of sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (IV) is made up of: a three-stepped bhupura; three superimposed lotus of forty-eight petals, sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (V) is made up of: a three-stepped bhupura; two superimposed lotus of sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (VI) is made up of: a two-stepped bhupura; two superimposed lotus of sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (VII) is made up of: a two-stepped bhupura; two superimposed lotus of sixteen petals oriented to the cardinal points of the compass and sixteen petals not oriented to the cardinal points; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga)--and at the center a bindu.

The Shri-chakram Yantra (VIII) is made up of: a two-stepped bhupura; two descending radius circles; two superimposed lotus of sixteen petals and eight petals each; and nine interlocking triangles (trikona)--five oriented downwards (yoni) and four oriented upwards (linga). This is the only yantra illustrated that indicated a dark inner circle upon which the nine overlapping triangles are placed. At the center of all is a bindu. Shyama (Kali) Yantra

Shyama (Kali),[157] 'the black one,' a Maha-Vidya of major import, is a deity with a number of yantra variations. None are as unique as the Shyama (Kali) Yantra.[158]

This yantra is composed of a bhupura of a single step, which in itself is not unusual. Within this sacred enclosure is a lotus of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). This, too, is not unusual, however, normalcy stops here! Encircled by the shodasha-dala padma is an ashta-dala padma with an orientation that appears unprecedented. This padma is unlike virtually all of the other representations of the ashta-dala padma in its orientation--i.e., those in which the petals are oriented to the cardinal or intercardinal points of the compass (as is seen below, left), or, the space between the petals are oriented to the cardinal or intercardinal points of the compass (as is seen below, right). There are other symbols which are not all oriented in the same way in every yantra--such as the shatkona. Below, left, is the usual representation, oriented 'vertically.' However, the right shatkona, oriented as it is, like the upper right ashta-dala padma, indicates the dynamic aspect of both the symbols. The ashta-dala padma which encloses a panchakona, which, intern holds a trikona, all of which are askew!

Could this yantra be the product of a neophyte, someone uninitiated? The commissioning and construction of a yantra is not a task that is to be undertaken lightly. There are very specific procedures.[159] Esoteric and arcane as they may be, if these specific and detailed procedures and practices are not assiduously followed, dire consequences are thought to result. The making of a yantra is a religious exercise and to tamper with any of its elements is to tempt the Deity, an act few if any believers would attempt.

As such the Shyama (Kali) Yantra is constructed of a single-stepped bhupura. Within this sacred enclosure is sixteen-petaled lotus (shodasha-dala padma) which is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this lotus is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) which is oriented to neither the cardinal nor the intercardinal points. The total number of petals between the two lotus is twenty-four. Within the ashta-dala padma is a pentagram (panchakona) which is oriented to neither the cardinal nor the intercardinal points of the compass, but is oriented similarly to the ashta-dala padma. Within the central, pentagonal area of the panchakona is a trikona with its apex oriented to the right. At the center is a bindu.

Six numbers appear to be of some import--one, three, five, eight, sixteen and twenty-four. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the panchakona--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Failings or Weaknesses being: ahmkara (pride), moha (illusion), lobha (greed), kama (passion), krodha (anger); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra; the five skandhas; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the Five-Headed Hanuman (Indic: Panchamukha Hanuman); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Twenty-four--referring to the total number of petals--denotes totality and the combination of two opposites--i.e., 2, represented by the Moon, and 4, which denotes Rahu. This integer represents a cosmic number, and is considered a lucky number as. It is exemplified in the total of the double hours of day and night. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces six and, therefore, the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). (AM, PR, LC, LC II, KS, HJ)

Surya Yantra (I)

Surya, the sun god, was a very powerful and popular deity of the Vedic period. As the sun he is the source of both light and heavenly fire. The sun's position is pivotal, between the ethereal spheres and the real, palpable earthly spheres. Surya, a Navagraha and a guardian of one of the quarters, is represented in a yantra that bears certain resemblance to: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki yantra (Plate 46), Krishna yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi yantra (I) (Plate 55) and the Shitala yantra (Plate 75), all of which are similar to the Vishnu yantra (I) (Plate 103). This may due to the fact that the Lord Vishnu was associated with the sun, particularly in the early times.

The Surya Yantra (I) constitutes a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within this sanctuary one discovers two superimposed lotus consisting of eight petals each (ashta-dala padma). They are dynamically oriented. The two total sixteen petals. The intersecting lines of the petals creates the central locus where the bindu is found.

One, two, eight and sixteen are four numbers which appear to have some significance in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--as a referent to the two padma--symbolizes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Sixteen--referring to the total number of petals--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4. It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada (4 x 4 = 16) called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven (1 + 6 = 7) and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra.

The mantra for this yantra is: "Om Rang Raviaya Namha." [160] (DS, SPS, LC, LC II, RG, TR, MS, VM)

Surya Yantra (II)

The Surya Yantra (II) is composed of a single-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura is an eight-petaled, sacred lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals are oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this padma are two circles, one within the other. The inner circle encloses a square, which, in turn encloses another circle. This third circles surrounds a triangle (trikona) oriented upwards--masculine and linga. Finally, a fourth, inner circle is to be found within the trikona. At the center of the whole is a bindu.

One, two, three, four and eight are five numbers which appear to bear further consideration. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Two--referring to the double outer two circles--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona--symbolizes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Four--as a referent to the square as well as the four total circles--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose √ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Finally, eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (HKS, DS, SPS, LC, LC II, RG, TR, MS, VM)

Tara Yantra (I)

Tara is one of ten aspects of Maha-Kali, and is known as one of the Dasha-Mahavidyas also called "the one who is the savior." As a fierce and terrifying goddess, she represents one of the ten aspects of divine night. The Mahavidya Tara's realm is the void and the night of anger. She is the power of creation and is shown with a swollen belly, standing upon the corpse of the Lord Shiva. Tara is associated with water and os often supplicated for a safe voyage.

The Tara Yantra (I), the simplest, yet considered as one of the most powerful of the Mahavidyas' yantras, consists of a two step divine precinct (bhupura). Within this enclosure is a single eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic orientation emphasizing the feminine quality. It encircles an equilateral triangle (trikona), the apex of which is oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. At the center of all is a bindu.

Three numerals appear significant--two, three and eight. Two--represented by the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Finally, eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra recited for this yantra is: "Om Streeng Taraye Namaha."[161] (DS, LC, LC II, VM, RG, TR, MS)

Tara Yantra (II)

The Tara Yantra (II) is a variation on the Tara Yantra (I). It is reversed--i.e., rotated 180^0--being composed of a two-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura) within which is an eight-petaled sacred lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals are oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within this lotus is an equilateral triangle (trikona), the apex of which is oriented upwards--masculine and linga. At the center of this star is a bindu.

As with the previous yantra, two, three and eight are three numerals which appear significant. Two--represented by the bhupura-- denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Finally, eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra for this yantra is: "Om Streeng Taraye Namaha" or "Aieng Om Hareeng Kareeng Houng Phut."[162] (LC II, DS, LC, VM, RG, TR, MS)

Tara Yantra (III)

The Tara Yantra (III) is essentially different from the Tara Yantras (I & II). It is composed of a two-stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within the bhupura is an eight-petaled sacred lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals encompass a circle which contains a six pointed star (shatkona). This star, as many of the others noted in this study is made up of two triangles, however, here isosceles in nature denoting the dynamic elements of the symbol, one apex of which is oriented upwards, the other downwards. At the center of this star is a bindu.

Two, six and eight are three numbers which appear worthy of further consideration. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. As an even number, a female symbol two symbolizes the power principle, night, dark, left; and the moon. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. Six--as a referent to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra for this yantra is: "Om Streeng Taraye Namaha" or "Aieng Om Hareeng Kareeng Houng Phut."[163] (LC II, DS, LC, VM, RG, TR, MS)

Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I)

Tripurantaka-Bhairavi (aka Tripura-Bhairavi)[164] is one of ten aspects of Maha-Kali, known as the Dasha-Mahavidyas. She represents one of the ten aspects of divine night. This Mahavidya's realm is the power of death and the night of death. Tripurantaka-Bhairavi is the deity who destroys the nine impediments of the mind.[165] She is the counterpart of Tripurantaka-Bhairava, a form of the Lord Shiva, one of the fierce forms assumed by the deity to defeat the three sons of Andhaka, King of Demons, who are: Vidyunmali, Tarakasha and Kamalaksha.

The Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I) is made up of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within this enclosure as an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The petals of this lotus is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within the ashta-dala padma are nine descending equilateral triangles, the apex of each is oriented downwards--feminine and yoni. Centered in the whole yantra is a bindu, the deity herself.

Four numbers appear worthy of consideration--one, three, eight and nine. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Nine--referring to the nine trikona--denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). (APR, HJ, LC, LC II, PR)

Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (II)

The Tripurantaka-Bhairavi (aka Tripura-Bhairavi) Yantra (II), a variation of Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I), is made up of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within the bhupura as a single eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. This lotus enfolds nine descending equilateral triangles (trikona), the apex of each is oriented to the left. As with the Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I), the nine trikona refers to the nine impediments of the mind which she destroys. However, in this yantra the orientation has been shifted 90^0, the apices of the triangles are oriented to the left, the feminine direction.[166] This shift--as with the utilization of, for example, an isosceles triangle instead of an equilateral shown here--underlines the dynamic elements of the symbol. At the center of the whole is a bindu.

As in Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I), one, three, eight and nine are important numbers. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--referring to the trikona which are oriented to the left underlining their dynamic quality--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Nine--referring to the nine trikona--denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka). (SPS, APR, HJ, LC, LC II, PR)

Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (III)

The Tripurantaka-Bhairavi (aka Tripura-Bhairavi) Yantra (III)[167] is made up of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. It is one of the few that L. Chawdhri presents with a dark bhupura.[168] Within this enclosure as a single lotus of eight petals (dasha-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. This lotus encompass a circle within which are three triangles (trikona). One, an equilateral triangle oriented downwards with its three points touching the side of the circle. The second, a dynamic isosceles triangle, oriented with its apex touching the uppermost point of the circle and its base resting on the horizontal center of the yantra. The third, also an isosceles triangle, its apex pointed upwards and touching the inverted base of the other equilateral triangle and the two base points resting on the arc of the surrounding circle. The three intersecting triangles form eleven smaller triangles, or fourteen (including the three primary triangles en toto).[169]

Four numbers appear to be of some significance: one, three, eight and fourteen. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Three--as a referent to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Fourteen--as a referent to the fourteen triangles--denotes involution, transmutation and relates to sexual relations. This integer is a number of luck. It is exemplified in the full moon, two of the moon's four cycles (waxing and waning); the Fourteen Principle Yoga nadis being: alambusha-nadi, kuhu-nadi, vishvodara-nadi, varana-nadi, hastijihva-nadi, yashovati-nadi, payasvini-nadi, gandhari-nadi, pusha-nadi, shankhini-nadi, sarasvati-nadi, ida-nadi, pingala-nadi, sushumana-nadi; the Fourteen bhuvanas; and the Chaturdasha-dala trikona (Sarva Saubhagya-Dayaka Chakra of the Shri Chakra). As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces five (1 + 4 = 5) and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). (LC II, SPS, APR, HJ, LC, PR, AM)

Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (IV)

The Tripurantaka-Bhairavi (aka Tripura-Bhairavi) Yantra (IV) is essentially a variation on the Tripurantaka-Bhairavi Yantra (I). It is composed of a two-stepped bhupura which encloses an eight petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Within the circular field of the lotus are nine equilateral triangles (trikona), each smaller than the one before, with their apices pointed downward--feminine and yoni. At the center of all is a bindu.

Four numbers appear worthy of consideration--two, three, eight and nine. Two--referring to the bhupura--denotes duality, contrast, polarity and diversity. This integer is a material number, as opposed to a divine number, and when applied to either the Arabic or Roman alphabet, it is considered as the number of creation, and the mother principle. It is exemplified in: the concept of Shakti-Shakta; right-left; heaven-hell; day-night; two eyes, nostrils, breasts and testes; as an even number, a female symbol: night, dark, left; and the second of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--air or wind (vayu, marut). It is associated astronomically with the Moon (Soma or Chandra). Additionally, it represents the Ajna Chakra. It is visually represented by two points (usually connected by a line or is visually represented in yantra by the two petal lotus. Three--referring to the trikona--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--symbolizes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Nine--referring to the nine trikona--denotes completion, perfection, force, wisdom and silence. A number whose √ is 3, therefore, a magnification of that sacred number and by association itself a most sacred number. This number connotes completion and space. It is called perfect since it is formed from three and nine always reproduces itself when multiplied with any number. It is exemplified in: the nine orifices of the body; the gestation period of the human being; the number of pada in the smallest magic square; the Navagrahas; the Nava-Durgas; nava-nadis; the Nine Classes of Yoginis; the Nine Jewels (Indic: navaratna) being: pearl, ruby topaz, diamond, emerald, coral, sapphire, moonstone, sardonyx; and the Pitha Mandala made up of nine pada. It is associated astronomically with the planet Mars (Mangala, Kuja or Angaraka).

The mantra for this yantra is: " Hasain Haskaring Hasain."[170] (HJ, APR, LC, LC II, PR, AM)

Vamana (avatara) Yantra

Vamana is one of the five early Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu, avataras which assumes both human and animal characteristics. The first five combined forms are opposed to the latter five which are totally human in aspect. In this form he overcame Bali, the grandson of the demon Pralhada. There are two forms related to this avatar: Vamana, a dwarflike person and the gigantic Trivikrama.

The Vamana Yantra consists initially of a three stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). The inner precinct of the yantra is made up of five superimposed lotus: an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) in the outer band, a twelve-petaled lotus (dvidasha-dala padma) in the second band, a second eight-petaled lotus in the third band, a sixteen-petaled lotus (shodasha-dala padma) in the fourth band, and a third eight-petaled lotus in within the inner circle. All five lotus are not oriented to the cardinal points of the compass, thereby emphasizing their dynamic qualities. There are a total of fifty-two petals in the five lotus. A small dot (bindu) is found at the very center.

Three, eight, twelve, sixteen and fifty-two are five numbers which appear to be of importance. Three--referring to the bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Saraṣvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripurà); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Twelve--referring to the dvidasha-dala padma--denotes sacrifice and is related to immortality. This numeral is: a cosmic number as well as comprehending all numbers lower than itself. It is exemplified in: the Barahmasa poetry being based on twelve; the twelve signs of the Zodiac; the twelve hours of the day as well as the twelve hours of the night; and the twelve months of the solar year. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Additionally, it represents the Anahata Chakra. Sixteen--referring to the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose √ is 4 It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Finally, fifty-two--referring to the total number of petals--denotes the transitory. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha) (5) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). (DS, SPS)

Varaha (avatara) Yantra

Varaha is one of the early five, part human, Dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu. Varaha has the body and limbs of a human and the head of a boar. A story relates how after the primal creation, the earth was submerged in the primordial sea. The Varahavatara was created to raise it out of the waters. Yet, another tale relates that during the Great Flood, the Lord Vishnu took the form of a great boar to save Prithvi, the Earth Goddess from the clutches of the demon Hiranyaksha. He dove into the rising floods, slew the demon, thereby saving the earth.

The Varaha Yantra is made up of a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of a single step. Within this enclosure is a circle surrounded by radiating lines which peaks in the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass creating eight 'points.' Within this circle is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma), each petal with radiating lines. The petals of this lotus are in the dynamic orientation emphasizing the feminine quality. In the center of the lotus is a circle filled with a number of dots (bindu). This yantra is virtually identical to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55), and the Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate 103).

One and eight appear to possess some significance in this yantra. One--referring to tne bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. (DS, SPS, RG, TR, SH, MS, VM, HKS)

Vartali Yantra

The goddess Vartali (aka Varahi, Krodhamukhi) although not a deity of the first rank is, nonetheless, of some importance. She is a goddess of fierce mien and the minister of defense for Lalitamahatripursundari, who herself is associated with the Shri Chakra Yantra.

The Vartali Yantra consists of a three stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this divine precinct is a circle divided into eight sections. The division lines are aligned to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. Inside this encircling band is a narrower strip made of a multitude of small petal-like forms, they may represent a thousand-petaled lotus (sahasra-dala padma). This encloses a lotus consisting of eight petals (ashta-dala padma) in the dynamic orientation emphasizing the feminine quality. This lotus encloses a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of an equilateral triangle with its apex oriented upwards and one with its apex oriented downwards. At the center of the six pointed star is a five pointed star, and at its center is a triangle (trikona) with its apex pointed downwards. Centered in this triangle is a bindu.

There are five numbers which to bear consideration--three, five, six, eight and one-thousand. The number three--referring to the trikona--refers perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati; trishula; the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka); the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála); the Three Forces (guna); the trivarga (objects of human pursuit); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Five--referring to the pentagram--denotes magical properties, mental activity, intelligence, and the natural elements both positive and negative (pentagram positive or pentagram negative). This integer represents the natural man, is revolutionary and reduces all to the meaningful. It is created from the masculine three and the feminine two and, therefore, to many represents love, the union of the masculine and the feminine. It is exemplified in: the Five Subtle Elements (Indic: tanmatras or panchatanmatras); the Five Sense Particulars (Indic: panchabhutas or mahabhutas); the Five Truths (Indic: pancha-tattva); the five "M's" (Panchamakara) of the vamanachara Tantra; the five skandhas; the Five Evolutes of Maya (pancha-kanchukas); the five fingers of the hand, the five toes of the feet as well as the five major appendages of the body--head, arms and legs; and the fifth of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--earth (kshiti, prithvi). It is associated astronomically with the planet Mercury (Budha). Six--referring to the shatkona--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature); and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Finally, one-thousand--referring to the sahasra-dala padma--represents endlessness. It is exemplified in: the thousand names of Vishnu (Indic.: Vishnusahasranama); and the thousand names of Parvati (Indic.: Parvatisahasranama). Additionally, it is represented by the Sahasra Dala Kamala, beyond the Ajna Chakra. It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1). (DS)

Vighnaraja Yantra

Vighnaraja refers to Ganapati as Lord (raja) over obstacles (vighnas). He is worshipped as and independent deity as well as a deity who is closely associated with the Lord Shiva and Parvati.[171]

The Vighnaraja Yantra embodies a three stepped sacred enclosure (bhupura). Within this enclosure is an eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) with a darkened central dot (bindu) in the dynamic orientation emphasizing the feminine quality. This yantra is quite similar to the: Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate XIV), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate XL), Kalki Yántra (Plate XLV), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate XLVIII), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate LIV) and the Shitala Yantra (Plate LXXV), all of which are similar to the Vishnu Yantra (I) (Plate CI).

Three and eight are two numbers which appear to be of some significance. Three--referring to the bhupura--denotes perfection, the trinity, the divine family (father, mother, child) and unity plus diversity which equals perfection. It is exemplified in: the trinity of Brahmá, Vishnu, Shiva; the trinity of Sarasvati, Lakshmi, Parvati or Maha-Sarasvati, Maha-Lakshmi, Maha-Kali; trishula; the Three Regions or the Three Worlds (Indic: triloka) being: arupadhatu, rupadhatu, kamadhatu; the Three Cities (Indic: tripura); the Three Times (kála) being: bhuta-kala (past), vartamana-kala (present), bavishya-kala (future); the Three Forces (guna) being: sattvaguna, rajoguna, tamoguna; the trivarga (objects of human pursuit) being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure); the three steps taken by the Lord Vishnu in his Vamana-Trivikrama avatar; and the third of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--fire (tejas, agni). It is associated astronomically with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru). Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Vishnu Yantra (I)

The Lord Vishnu is one of the three most powerful deities within the Hindu pantheon's trinity (Trimurti) along with the Lords Brahmá and Shiva. He is the One Who Sustains as well as the locus of the Vaishnava sect. However, whereas the Shri-chakram Yantra, with its emphasis upon the Shakti sect, is so very popular throughout the Hindu world, yantras dedicated to either the Lords Vishnu or Shiva are relatively fewer in number and generally less complicated in form. The Tantric nature of yantra tends to center around the Shakti sect accounting for this fact.

The Vishnu Yantra (I) is represented by a sacred enclosure (bhupura) of four levels which in itself is unusual and underlines this deity's importance. Within this divine domain is a sacred eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) not oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. This underlines the dynamic quality of the iconic device. Each petal possesses a series of radiating lines proceeding from the center. At the center is a small circle, containing numerous dots (bindu).

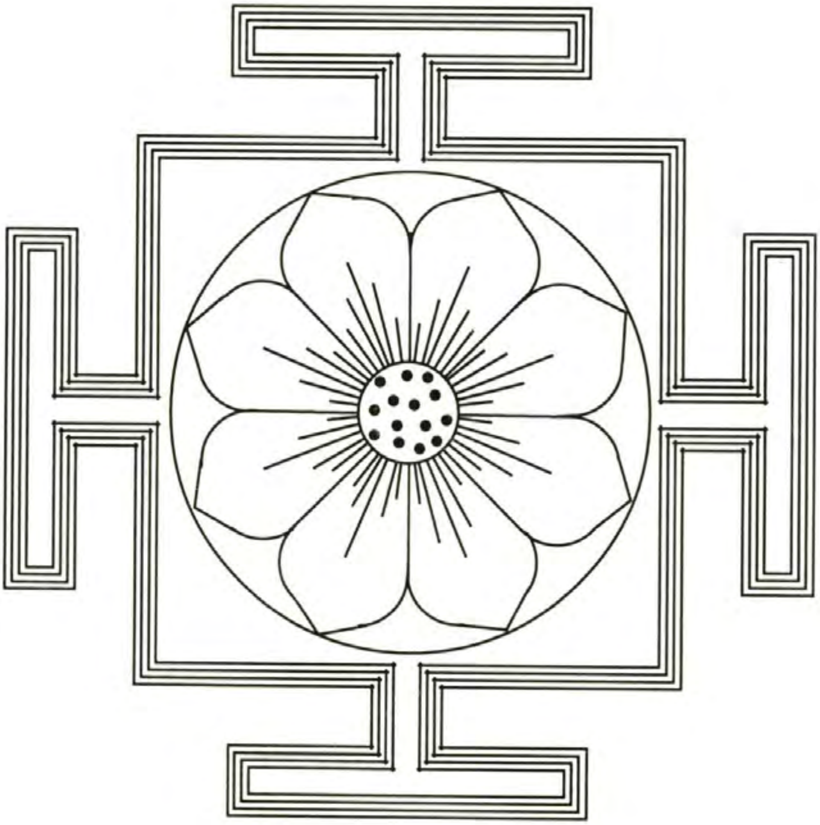
Four and eight are two numbers which appear to be of some significance in this yantra. Four--referring to the bhupura--denotes completeness, perfection, the practical element, worldly balance or order, and the creating fluid which is the soul of the universe. This numeral is the perfect number of a higher plane, a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 2. It is exemplified in: the Four Fundamental or Sublime Meditations (Indic: chatur-appamannaya); the Four Trances (Indic: chatur-jhana); the Four Psychic Powers (Indic: chatur-iddhipada); the four Vedas; the four Pradharthas being: dharma (virtue), artha (purpose), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation); the four streams of milk from the heavenly udder creating the four sacred rivers; the chakrasudarshana (disc) of the Lord Vishnu; the Four Guardians of the Quarters (Indic: Lokapala); the fourth of five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--water (ap); the cardinal directions; and the four phases of the moon. It is associated astronomically with the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon). Additionally, it is symbolized by the Muladhara Chakra and the Pechaka Mandala made up of four pada. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The Vishnu yantra seems to set a standard for the yantra of other deities who are related to the Lord Vishnu--e.g., the Balarama (avatara) Yantra (Plate 15), Hayagriva Yantra (Plate 41), Kalki Yantra (Plate 46), Krishna Yantra (I) (Plate 49), Maha-Lakshmi Yantra (I) (Plate 55),Shitala Yantra (Plate 75), and the Varaha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 100), all of which are similar. (DS, SPS, RG, TR, SH, VM, PR, HKS, LC, LC II)

Plate 103 -- Vishnu Yantra (I)

(DS, #19; SPS, Pl. 8)



Vishnu Yantra (II)

The Vishnu Yantra (II), by far the simplest of the four yantra included in this brief study dedicated to this important deity, consists of a single-stepped divine precinct (bhupura). Within this divine enclosure is a single eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma). The source indicates this lotus without the central 'vein' on the petals and without a bindu. By its simplicity, it stands out amongst the other yantra.

Two numerals would appear to assume some importance--one and eight. One--referring to the single-stepped bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). While eight--referring to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala.

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Om Shareeng Narayana Namah / Hareeng Dhoong Hareeng."[172] (APR)

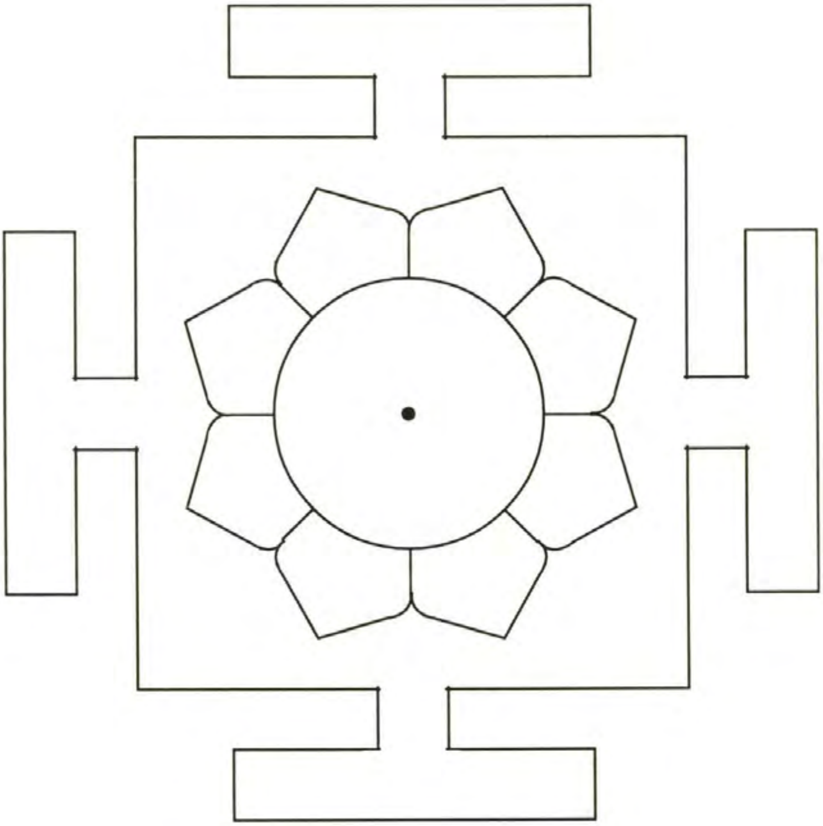
Plate 104 -- Vishnu Yantra (II)

(APR, p. 164)



Vishnu Yantra (III)

The Vishnu Yantra (III) consists of a single-stepped divine precinct (bhupura). Within the bhupura is a twelve-petaled lotus (dvidasha-dala padma) oriented to the cardinal points of the compass. This lotus encompass a circle within which is a sacred, eight-petaled lotus (ashta-dala padma) also oriented to the cardinal points of the compass. The petals of the two lotus total twenty. The ashta-dala padma, in turn, surrounds a circle within which is a six pointed star (shatkona) made up of two equilateral triangles, one oriented upwards, the other downwards. At the center of the yantra is a bindu.

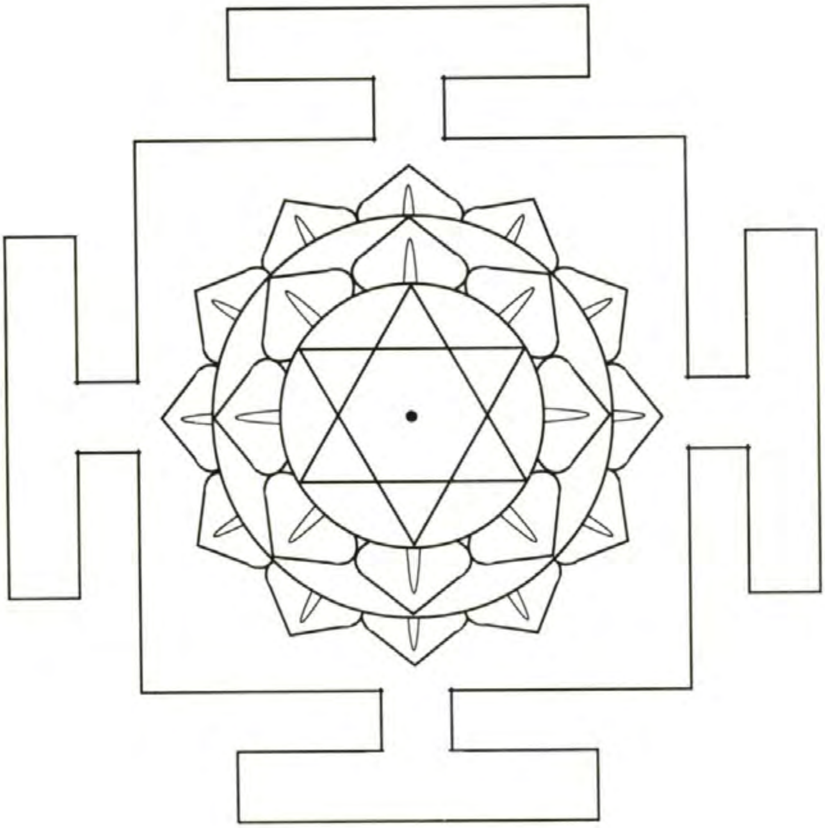
There are five numbers which appear to be of significance: one, six, eight, twelve and twenty. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--referring to the shatkona--symbolizes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--as a referent to the ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Manduka Mandala. Twelve--referring to the dvidasha-dala padma--denotes sacrifice and is related to immortality. This numeral is: a cosmic number as well as comprehending all numbers lower than itself. It is exemplified in: the Barahmasa poetry being based on twelve; the twelve signs of the Zodiac; the twelve hours of the day as well as the twelve hours of the night; and the twelve months of the solar year. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Additionally, it represents the Anahata Chakra. Finally, twenty--referring to the total number of petals--denotes, as double ten, perfection or completeness, success, and cosmic wisdom. This number is auspicious in its make up and represents renewal. It is exemplified in: the total number of fingers and toes (a limit of counting), the number of nails on the fingers and toes and one of the important numbers is the proportions of a stupa. As a compound number it is associated with the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2).

The mantra for this yantra is: "Om Namo Narayanaya."[173] (JN, SPS, RG, TR, SH, VM, PR, HKS, LC, LC II)

Plate 105 -- Vishnu Yantra (III)

(JN, p. 41)



Vishnu Yantra (IV)

The Vishnu Yantra (IV) also known as Sudarshana Mahachakra is the most complex of the Vishnu yantras is composed of a single-stepped divine enclosure (bhupura) within which are five lotus one superimposed over the other. The first is a lotus of thirty-two petals (dvatrimshati-dala padma). This lotus encircles one of sixteen petals (shodasha-dala padma). The third lotus possesses twelve petals (dvidasha-dala padma). The three preceding lotus are not oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass, thereby underlining their dynamic quality. The fourth lotus has eight petals (ashta-dala padma) and is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. The fifth lotus of six petals (shash-dala padma), too, is oriented to the cardinal and intercardinal points of the compass. The total number of petals amounts to seventy-four. In the center of an inner circle, the center of the whole is a bindu.

One, six, eight, twelve, sixteen, thirty-two and seventy-four are numbers which appear to possess some significance in this yantra. One--referring to the bhupura--denotes the source, the monad, the first principle, unity, The Absolute One and the Primordial One and spiritual balance, the divine sign of universal life. As an absolute, it is beyond all and therefore divine. However, there are those who consider it as an odd number and as such it is a male symbol. It is exemplified in: day; bright; the right (hand); the first of the five elements (pancha-tanmatras)--ether (akasha, vymon), and the Sakala Mandala (1 pada). It is associated astronomically with the Sun (Ravi or Surya). Six--as a referent for the shodasha-dala padma--denotes the macrocosmic--the spiritual plus the material world; material beauty and comfort, divine charity; and balance. This integer is considered to be the most perfect number and the product of the first male and female numbers signifying universal attraction. As such, it is considered to be a lucky number. It is exemplified in: the shatkona-chakra of the Lord Vishnu; the Six Insights (Indic: darshana); the six Chakras being: Muladhara, Svadhishthana, Manipura, Anahata, Vishuddha, Ajna; and in nature the bee's comb, petals of a flower, snowflake. It is associated astronomically with the planet Venus (Shukra). Additionally, it is represented by the Svadhisthana Chakra. Eight--referring to ashta-dala padma--denotes perfection, good fortune, and on the divine plane: justice and balance between attraction and repulsion, positive and negative. This integer as even, is representative of motherhood. This number is auspicious in its makeup being an evenly even number and the first cube number, 2^3. It is exemplified in: the eight forms of the Lord Shiva; the Eight Treasures (ashta-niddhi) of Kubera; the Eight Mothers (ashta-matrikas); the Octave of Prakriti (the elemental nature) being: akasha, vayu, tejas, ap, kshiti, sattva, rajas and tamas; and the sacred eight petal lotus. It is associated astronomically with the planet Saturn (Shani). Additionally, it represents the number when squared that makes up the Mandukà Mandala. Twelve--as a referent for dvidasha-dala padma--denotes sacrifice and is related to immortality. This numeral is: a cosmic number as well as comprehending all numbers lower than itself. It is exemplified in: the Barahmasa poetry being based on twelve; the twelve signs of the Zodiac; the twelve hours of the day as well as the twelve hours of the night; and the twelve months of the solar year. As a compound number it is associated astronomically with: the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces three and, therefore, the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3). Additionally, it represents the Anahata Chakra. Sixteen--as a referent for the shodasha-dala padma--denotes divine destruction, the fall of man and the visible world. This integer also signifies completeness, or balance being made up of opposites--the Sun and Venus. It is a number whose $\sqrt{}$ is 4 . It is exemplified in: the Sixteen kalás of Chandra; and a mandala of sixteen pada called Mahapitha Mandala. As a compound number it is associated with the Sun (Ravi or Surya) (1) and the planet Venus (Shukra) (6). When reduced it produces seven and, therefore, the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7). Additionally, it represents the Vishudha Chakra. Thirty-two--referring to thirty-two-petaled lotus of the yantra--This numeral is considered by some to be a perfect number. It is exemplified in: the thirty-two points of the compass--e.g., south, south south-southeast, southeast south-southeast, etc.--and the thirty two characteristics of human physiology. As a compound number it is associated with the planet Jupiter (Brihaspati or Guru) (3) and the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2). When reduced it produces five and, therefore, the planet Mercury (Budha) (5). Seventy-four--as a referent for the total petals--is as a compound number, associated astronomically with: the planet Ketu (the descending node of the moon) (7) and the planet Rahu (the ascending node of the moon) (4). When reduced it produces two and, therefore, the Moon (Soma or Chandra) (2).

Plate 106-- Vishnu Yantra (IV)

(JN, p. 40)

The mantra associated with this yantra is: "Om Namo Narayanaya."[174] (JN, SPS, RG, TR, SH, VM, PR, HKS, LC, LC II)

Postscriptum

There are a number of conclusions as well as observations that can be made when considering the deity centered yantras presented in this brief study. Conclusions and observations that would lead one, possibly, into other paths of study.

It is obvious to note that a majority of the yantra in this study are to be associated with the Shakti sect--i.e., sixty (60) yantras. Yantras and their employment are admittedly associated with Tantric practice. Tantra, itself, is deeply rooted in, and associated with Shakti considerations. Therefore, this association seems quite natural and understandable.

The complexity of a geometric yantra, or lack of complexity, for that matter, does not appear to have a significant relationship to the importance of the deity which it represents within the Hindu tradition. The yantra of the Lord Vishnu (Plate 104), for example, is remarkably simple, deceptively modest for a deity of such power and position. An answer may be posited that: this may be an attempt to indicate the perceived subordinate position of a male deity within a Shakti milieu. On the other hand, the Matsya (avatara) Yantra (Plate 65) is quite complex for one of the early, and admittedly less important dashavataras of the Lord Vishnu. This is further underlined when the Matsya yantra is compared with the two illustrated yantras devoted to the important and highly popular Lord Krishna (Plates 49 & 50). Further, to say that the less important or popular deities are regaled with complicated yantras is, also, not altogether true. The Shri-chakram Yantra (Plates 81-88) are quite similar in their complexity. The inner, overlapping triangles are essentially identical, their variations appearing in the outer and varied manifestations--e.g., the bhupura, circular enclosures and surrounding lotus petals. Likewise, one yantra dedicated to the Lord Vishnu is rather intricate (Plate 106). Similarly, the yantra illustrated in Plate 77, dedicated to the Lord Shiva, although not resembling, in form, the geometric yantra, possesses a degree of convolution that must be considered more than simple.

The various levels of the bhupura do not necessarily relate to the position and/or importance of the deity in the Hindu pantheon. Single, double and triple level bhupura appear to be relatively equal in occurrence, although there are more single level enclosures in this study--i.e., single level bhupura (33), two level bhupura (23), and three level bhupura (26). It must be noted, moreover, that a single stepped bhupura is not employed in the representations of the powerful Shri-chakram Yantra. Mayhaps, from a Shakti point of view, a single stepped bhupura infers lesser prestige. Interestingly, a four stepped bhupura are significantly less in number--i.e., six examples in the 106 yantras presented--and it is not employed in any of the representations of the Shri-chakram Yantra.

Feminine/masculine numbers, forms and position also appear to be employed in what may be considered an arbitrary manner. With the possible exception of one (1), odd numbers are seen as being masculine and even numbers are considered to be feminine. Yet, the application of these iconic, numerical forms do not appear to be applied consistently to either feminine or masculine deities. The representation of even number lotus petals in an encircling band, with a few exceptions--e.g., the Matsya Yantra (Plate 65)--is always even in number. This is not seen to possess any notable significance. However, the number of levels in the bhupuras of the yantra dedicated to Shri-chakram Yantra are of interest. Five of the representations possess three--i.e., a masculine number--steps, three have two--i.e., a feminine number--steps, and as noted above, none hold four steps. A number of the masculine deities indicate a two--i.e., a feminine number--stepped bhupura and numerous female deities possess three--i.e., a masculine number--stepped bhupuras. The Kali Yantra (Plates 42 & 44) indicates five receding trikona, Plates 43 and 45 show three trikona each; and the Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (Plates 78-80) display three overlapping shatkona each. On the other hand numerous male deities are depicted with shatkona--six pointed stars.

The orientation of forms, both geometric and 'natural,' and the variation of forms--e.g., from an equilateral triangle to an isosceles--may be indicative of either feminine or masculine orientation. An ashta-dala-padma, for example, is masculine when a petal is oriented upwards, but feminine when the space between two petals is oriented upwards (See: p. 28).

The upward oriented trikona is a decidedly and admitted masculine iconic device--i.e., linga--while the trikona with its apex pointing downward is considered feminine--i.e., yoni. Numerous Shakti yantras possess feminine trikona--e.g., Bagla Mukhi Yantra (Plate 11) or Sharabha Yantra (Plate 74)--and frequently Shaiva or Vaishnava yantras indicate masculine trikona--e.g., Bhairon Yantra (Plate 20) or Surya Yantra (Plate 91). However, the Annapurna Yantra (Plate 9), the Bagla Mukhi Yantra (Plate 14), the Durga Yantra (Plate 33), the Kali Yantra (Plate 45), and the Tara Yantra (Plate 93), all indicate the masculine trikona--i.e., linga. Similarly, the Bhairon yantra (Plate 19), the Ganesha Yantra (Plate 36), and the Maha-Ganapati Yantra (Plate 53) display feminine trikona prominently. A trikona with its apex oriented to the right is considered masculine, also; whereas, one pointed to the left is feminine. Yet, the Shyama (Kali) Yantra (Plate 89) Indicates a trikona which is oriented towards the masculine right. The orientation of other forms also indicate feminine or masculine influence. Shatkonas, lotus or pentagrams which are oriented upwards (vertically) are masculine--e.g., Ganesha Yantra (Plate 35) or Mrit-Sanjivani Yantra (Plate 56), while the horizontal orientations are feminine--e.g., the Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (Plate 21) or the Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (Plate 78). However, there are feminine deities whose yantras indicate masculine oriented forms--e.g., the Bhuvaneshvari Yantra (Plate 22), the Gayatri Yantra (Plate 38), or the Matangi Yantra (Plate 63)--as well as male deities which indicate feminine oriented forms--e.g., the Krishna (Gopala) Yantra (Plate 50) or Narasimha (avatara) Yantra (Plate 67).

The indication of either trikona or shatkona which are composed of isosceles triangle(s) indicates a dynamic element, and, therefore, are considered feminine. It is to be noted that a large number of these dynamic elements are attributes of feminine deities. Shatkonas which are oriented upwards (masculine) assume feminine characteristics when composed of isosceles triangles. This is also true of a trikona which may be considered as masculine when pointing up, but assumes the feminine when isosceles in form--e.g., Durga Yantra (Plate 32), Matangi Yantra (I) (Plate 62), Sarasvati Yantra (Plate 73), Shodashi (Tripura-Sundari) Yantra (Plate 80), Tara Yantra (Plate 94), and Tripura(ntaḳa)-Bhairavi Yantra (Plate 97).

Are the variations of these gender-oriented symbols merely the product of an unschooled or inadept guru or possible misalignment in the printing process? Let us consider the Ganesha Yantra (II) (Plate 36) and the Ganesha Yantra (III) (Plate 37). They are essentially identical except that in the Ganesha Yantra (II) the trikona is oriented downwards, while in the Ganesha Yantra (III) it is oriented upwards. Similarly, in the Kali Yantra (II) (Plate 43) displays three nested trikonas oriented in the feminine direction while in the Kali Yantra (IV) (Plate 45) shows the same three but in that yantra they are oriented in the masculine direction. These variations are not isolated to a single source, but are duplicated in other sources as well, causing one to assume that these variants shown are accurate.

What then are the interpretations of these variations? Does the feminine orientation in the Ganesha Yantra (II) (Plate 36) indicate the assigning of this yantra as a Shakti yantra? Even though Ganesha is a deity that is honored by all sects, he is generally considered to be associated with the Shaivas, the son of the Lord Shiva and his consort, Parvati. Although, a number of stories dealing with Ganesha's genesis directly involve the important goddess Parvati (Devi) as his sole creator and, therefore, the direct connection with the Shakti sect. Kali, similarly, is associated with both sects. She is considered to be the consort of the Lord Shiva. Numerous stories connect her, erotically, with the Lord Shiva. On the other hand, her genesis is also seen to have been directly associated with Devi. Perhaps these yantras indicate both stories, both sources, much in the same way as a coin has two faces.

Iconic devices frequently possess opposite interpretations, depending upon their use. In western iconography, a red rose, when associated with the Virgin Mary, indicates her spiritual passion (sorrow) involving the death of her son, the Lord Jesus Christ. On the other hand, when it is associated with Venus, it clearly indicates physical passion and desire. Similarly, a pink is symbolic of the brevity of life and/or beauty, but when held in the hand of the obviously beautiful, 50+ year old Diane de Poitiers, in the 16th century portrait by François Clouet, it assumes the opposite interpretation. It is presumed that the same applies to these yantras, as well.

Of the various geometric forms that appear within the yantras under consideration, three forms are important--i.e., the circle, the trikona and the shatkona. The circle appears 117 times, either singly or nested; the trikona's appearance is by far the most numerous--i.e., 182+; and the shatkona is found 39 times. When isolating the trikona's into feminine and masculine orientation, it is found that feminine oriented trikonas exceed 110, while masculine are over 72. Clearly, the feminine oriented trikona predominates. The circle, representative of the earth--as opposed to the square which represents the higher celestial spheres and exemplified in the bhupura--is also seen as a feminine symbol--i.e., yoni and/or vaginal. When combined with the feminine oriented trikona, one becomes immediately aware that the female principle monopolizes, iconographically, the yantra under consideration. Since, as has been stated, yantra are basically tantric, this, then, is not unusual.

There are other interesting comparisons. Two numbers appear more frequently than any of the other numerals--i.e., the masculine three and the feminine eight. When considering the nine planets, the Navagrahas, the masculine Sun and the feminine Moon appear, or are referred to more frequently than the others; although the Sun predominates slightly.

A number of the deities represented in this study possess more than one yantra or variations. Of these, the ten Mahavidyas, display, as a group, the greatest number--i.e., thirty-one in all. Singly, the Shri-chakram Yantra posses the most with eight variations, while Ganesha and/or Maha-Ganapati is represented with six variations--three for each form. The Lord Vishnu possesses four yantra-variations, while two of his avatars--i.e., Krishna and Rama--have two each.

To say that the symbols and forms employed in the various yantra are arbitrary would be foolhardy. Not only are forms--e.g., the circle, trikona, shatkona, etc.--iconographically relevant; the numerical representations would also appear to be of prime importance. The repetition of certain numbers and/or forms--e.g., three as in the trikona, trirekha and trivritta; or, eight as in the ashta-dala padma--appear with such obvious regularity and in such combinations that to dismiss them would be senseless.

For virtually every major religion, numbers have played an important role. This role is underlined in the Hindu yantra.

Although the individual works appear to be artistically, technically proficient, they are obviously meant for the mass market as the facial features of the deities are, frankly, rather' kitch.' Nonetheless, the icons employed are accurate.

Numbers

[11] There are a number of important sources that deal with Numerology. In addition to the sources noted below information was gleaned from Brahman priests and Buddhist monks in India, Nepal, Thailand and Malaysia; in particular: Pt. Jai Dev Shastri, Hoshiarpur, Punjab (6-8-99); and Pt. Vashisthu Dutt Mohila, New Delhi (22-11-94 & 8-8-99). Published sources were consulted were: Mabel L. [12] The use of the symbol '\' indicates that the number is also made up of two integers in this case 12 is made up of 1 (one) and 2 (two). Each integer has its own mystic value which in a combined form may shift somewhat. Within Hindu and Buddhist Numerology the individual integers of a compound number are considered individually as well as their sum. Frequently they are opposite to their single number counterpart.

[18] For one trained in the technique of the visual arts, these descriptive terms are not only imprecise, but they are often misleading and certainly confusing. Even within the professional world of the visual arts, until two decades ago, certain terms were employed that tended to be descriptive--e.g., 'earth green'--or source oriented--e.g., 'burnt Sienna'--and these colors could and did vary considerably from manufacturer to manufacturer. Finally, the 'industry' and the 'profession' agreed upon a set of terms and numerical designations to standardize color. The terms to be employed in this section are technically correct.

[19] AM, p. 65, reproduces this "mandala" and identifies it as: " A contemporary ground-plan of a temple based on a mandala. Gouache on paper." Origin is not noted, whether or not it was actually produced within the Hindu or Buddhist tradition, is, here, irrelevant. It does, however, indicate the iconographic basis of the bhupura as a fort or protecting area.

[20] The Mayamatam (BD, pp. 37-49) enumerates the various diagrams (mandalas) which are applicable for design purposes. It is stated that the Manduka Mandala (64 pada) and the Paramasayika Mandala (81 pada) are the acceptable diagrams for the design of a temple.

[21] AM, p. 113, and listed as "Astronomical computation, based on the Savatrabhadra yantra, composed of nine fields, each of which represents an aspect of the universe. Kangra, Himachal Pradesh, c. 18th century. Ink and gouache on paper." Sarvatabhadra is not identified as such by PR, Fig. 127, p. 151, but is identified as: " 127 Diagram for computing astronomical periods, used for meditation. Kangra, 18th century. Ink and colour on paper 11 x 8 (28 x 20." However, there is reference to a deity Sarvatobhadra in the Kurma-Purana in the list of the Parvati-sahashranama (KP, GT, DD) and called "the one surrounded by welfare."

[22] PR, p. 152.

[23] There are two 'modes' employed in the construction of a yantra: 1) a two dimensional mode employing line and color, and 2) a three dimensional mode in which the yantra is presented either in bas relief or by incised or engraved lines in a solid material typically metal or stone.

[24] AM, p. 39, merely illustrates this yantra and makes no reference to it in the text. Janana is one of the Vishnusahasranama (EE, MB, AD, HB) and it assumes that the title/name Janan refers to Janana. The other possibility, more remote indeed, is Jananda: one of the Parvatisahasranama (KP, GT, DD). However related, this possibility is rejected in favor of Janana as the 'progenitor of living creatures. ' Further, the iconography suits this deity's name-form and underlines the concept of yoni-linga, shakti-shakta, yin-yang--the union of the feminine and masculine--as a state to be fervently sought as well as an important Shakti principle.

[25] The yantras of: Bhairon (1), D(h)anda, Ganesha (II), Maha-Ganapati (II), Mangala (Hanuman) and Sharabha, all employ downward pointing triangles. Since yantras are Tantric devices, and a strong element of Tantra is rooted in the Shakti sect and the Agamas, the employment of this form as applied to a masculine divinity would not appear to be antithetical.

[26] The term mandala is used by AM, p. 89, rather than yantra. The reproduction, gouache on paper, is closer in concept to a yantra than a mandla. Since the reproducttion in black and white, the value relationships are shown in Plate 4, however, the original was doubtesly in color.

[27] AM, pp. 89-90.

[28] This yantra, as with the Janan Yantra, is also not referred to in the text and which is reproduced: AM p. 50.

[29] The use of a multi-stepped-bhupura frequently denotes a deity of major proportion. See the following yantras: Bagala (I), Balarama (avatara), Chinnamasta (I), Durga (I), Shri Chakram (I-III), Vamana (avatara) and Vishnu (I) in which three and four-stepped bhupura are employed. However, it must be noted that there are major deities whose yantras employ a single step, but they are not as common.

[30] Like AM, PR presents a reproduction of this interesting 'Tanka with Nine Mandala-Yantras' (in the collection of Jean Claude Ciancimino, London), but fails in providing any textual explication other than: "55 Tanka painted with nine mandala-yantras, which are meditated on in series to produce a special condition of consciousness. Nepal, c. 19th century. Ink and colour on paper 22 x 22 (56 x 56)," p. 75.

[31] Ibid, p. 89. It is of interest to note the shift of terms from one source to another. HJ refers to that area beyond the sixteen-petaled lotus as the bhupura and only incidentally names it as the Trailokya-Mohana Chakra; pp. 89-90. SS, on the other hand, refers to the three squares as the chaturasra, the central part as the bhupura, the three inner circles as trivalaya and refers to these three part area as the Trailokya-Mohana Chakra; pp. 40-4. SR, finally, does not employ the term "bhupura" at all, but refers to the three outer square sections as the tri-rekha and the three inner circles as tri-vritta, and the whole as the Trailokya-Mohana Chakra; p. 27. Doubtless, these 'shifts are due to the different 'traditions' or Tantric schools; cf. n. 13 below. The various traditions are not delineated in this study.

Deity Yantras

[53] HJ, p. 114, states that Bagla is a transformation of the name Vagla who is a Vedic deity, her name meaning: "the Powerful One."

[54] The pointing of the trikona to the right, although not unusual, would appear to refer to dakshina. The term dakshina refers to the right, the right side. As in most religions and ethnic groups the right hand or side is considered the most auspicious or favorable. The elder or more prominent person stands to the right of the younger or less important. The right side should be turned towards an important image, one circumambulates (pradakshinapatha) clockwise so that the right side is towards the shrine. The right is associated with the male. Many male oriented symbols, except those of destruction, are carried in the right hand. Generally, if there are male and female attendants to a deity, the male attendants will be placed to the right of the deity, while the females will be placed to the left. Dakshina is masculine, associated with light and the idea principle. It is opposed to the left (vama). There are two, esoteric Tantric approaches or practices--dakshinachara (the right hand practice) and vamachara (the left hand practice associated with magic of a none too positive nature. [63] The representations or variations of the Bagla yantras present a conundrum. Two yantra are decidedly masculine in their central icon--i.e., yantra (I) & (V). Icons are meaningful and immutable. A number of Brahmin Priests who were consulted were unable to shed any light on this problem. There are, of course, three possibilities: first, the Brahmin Priests were unschooled in this aspect of the religion and could not have recognized any error. Secondly, these representations are correct. The representations in the sources from which these yantra were drawn were incorrect (misprinted, incorrectly aligned). Alas, a fact that is apparent in any number of Indian publications.

[65] Ibid.

[66] HKS, p. 222, in which the yantra is not illustrated but described in clear and precise terms.

[67] AM, p. 90, merely identifies this yantra as: "Bala Yantra. Rajasthan, c. 18th century. Gouache on paper." There is no description in the text.

[68] SR, p. 72.

[69] The bhupura indicated in this yantra is unlike anyother that is included within this brief study, but is shown here as it is illustrated in SR, p. 96, and described on pp. 73-74. The two steped enclosure is intersected by a square rotated 45° and centered on the bhupura, forming the "gates."

[74] This may be only a stylistic device. However, in both Hindu and Buddhist iconography there are several types of lotus: pundarika (white), raktapadma (red) and nilotpala (blue). Whether these dark centers refer to a lotus other than a white (pundarika) is impossible to tell.

[80] The closest parallel with any of the other major world religions--i.e., Judaism, Buddhism, Christianity and Islam--is the role or position of the Virgin Mary within the Roman Catholic segment of Christianity. Even during the height of the Marian cults--from their earliest strength in the 12th & 13th centuries CE to the promulgation of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception--her role was acknowledged as a major intercessor and the mother of Christ Jesus. Hymns of praise and devotional liturgy were assigned to her, but in no way was she elevated to the god-head as equal to God, The Father, and certainly not as the Supreme One.

[81] LC II, p. 34.

[82] Ibid.

[83] The other two being the; Durga Yantra (II) and Tripura-Bhairabi Yantra. The reason for this presentation may be only stylistic, but this 'style' appears nowhere else in Chawdhri's two works cited.

[86] Ibid., p. 57; LC II, p. 197.

[87] Ibid.

[89] The other two being the; D(h)anda Yantra and Tripura-Bhairavi Yantra. The reason for this presentation, as has been noted, may be only stylistic, but this 'style' appears nowhere else in the two Chawdhri works cited.

[90] LC II, p. 194

[91] There are a number of yantras which employ this type of element. It cannot be considered as merely a decoration, but must be seen as an iconic element. Possibly, here, the padma of three petals may be a referent to the Shakti trinity, or as a further guardian of the inner precincts. In the Shiva Yantra (II), the trishula shape terminates the vertical and horizontal lines of this interesting yantra. Of course, the trishula is one of the important icons of that deity.

[92] Ibid., p. 274.

[93] The concept of being 'divinely inspired' is akin to the concept of the Christian Bible and essentially opposite to the Islamic concept of the origins of the Koran--i.e., The Word of Allah, which had always been and always will be. Therefore, the mere recitation of parts of the Koran is considered to be a holy act as the words are, themselves, holy being the revealed Words of Allah.

[94] The author of Mantra Kirtana Yantra and Tantra, Swami Jyotir Maya Nanda, "the genius of yoga," may well have presented this yantra, as well as the several others of those in his book of which no other source exists, from his 'divine inspiration.' He is called saintly, intuitive, reflective, brilliant, etc. (JN, inside back cover page). It must also be noted that in the illustration of this yantra, the names of the guardian deities are noted in the appropriate areas. They are not indicated in the illustration in this study.

[101] There is, however, a 'decorative' double line surrounding this yantra, one which does not appear in any of the other of the yantras in this source. The author has taken the liberty of interpreting this as a two-stepped bhupura.

[102] JN, p. 30.

[103] He may be equated with Johnathan of Old Testament fame.

[104] APR, p. 170.

[105] LC II, p. 271; it is also to be noted that as with many yantras, the presiding deity is noted in the various areas within the source consulted. However, for a yantra to be efficacious, the names of these presiding deities need not be included in the construction (writing) of the yantra.

[106] Ibid. p. 272.

[107] This controversy is a matter of ignorance or misunderstanding. Is it any different from the representations of the beaten and bleeding Christ crucified, or representations of the "sacred heart?" A line from the popular film "Ghandi" delivered by an apparently uneducated Hindu Indian, also appears relevant here: "I know a Christian. She drinks blood every Sunday."

[126] LC II, p. 25.

[127] LC, p. 32; also displays a series of yantras dedicated to the Navagrahas on the next page which take the form of magic squares. It is to be further noted that, generally, the Navagrahas are represented by magic squares and not yantras similar to the other deity yantras indicated in this study.

[158] This yantra is reproduced in PR, p. 35, and bears the description: "Shyámá (Kálí) Yantra. Rajasthan, 18th century. Gouache on paper." Even if the reproduction was not aligned properly, there is no orientation of the yantra which would produce an orientation that would be anything but "unusual."

[164] Tripurantaka-Bhairavi is looked upon as akin to Tripura-Sundari, who is the primordial desire and seeking union. Tripurantaka-Bhairavi, on the other hand, is the dormant kundalini who destroys impediments to union.

[165] The nine impediments are: "sickness, incompetence, doubt, delusion, sloth, nonabstention, erroneous conception, nonattainment of any yogic state, and the inability to stay in a yogic state," HJ, p. 103.

[166] The orientation of the nine triangles in this compendium is unusual, if not problematical. The original and the two reprints consulted--i.e., Pratap Sinh Sah Dev, Shri (Maharaja of Nepal). Purashcaryarnava, repr. Delhi: n.d.; and: Pratap Sinh Sah Dev, Shri (Maharaja of Nepal) (Pratapsinha Sahadeva). "Purashcaryarnavah: tantrasastranusari-vidhan-paddhati-niupanatmakah," Encyclopaedia of Tantric Rituals, repr. New Delhi: 1985--indicate the same alignment.

[167] LC states that Gayatri is the goddess of this yantra, yet entitles it as Tripura-Bhairavi, LC II, p. 198.

[168] The other two being: Durga Yantra (II) (Plate 32), and D(h)anda Yantra (Plate 28).

[169] L. Chawdhri does not indicate a bindu in this yantra.
